CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FIFTIETH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

in Congress; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

PRESIDENTIAL TERM.

Mr. McCOMAS introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 149) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. STEELE until Monday next, on account of important business.

BRIDGE ACROSS STATEN ISLAND SOUND.

Mr. HATCH. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday——

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned a month ago there was pending under this call a bill called up by myself from the Committee on Commerce——

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to state the order of business. This being the third Monday in the month the order of business is the call of committees for motions to suspend the rules. The Committee on Commerce has pending before the House a motion to suspend the rules and pass a bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

A bill (H. R. 5929) to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across Staten Island Sound.

The SPEAKER. A second was demanded upon the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill; tellers were appointed, and a vote was taken, on which no quorum appeared, whereupon the House adjourned.

Mr. CRISP. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. PHELPS. I have no objection to a second being considered as ordered, but desire to occupy the time allowed under the rules in opposition to the motion.

There being no further objection, a second was considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen in support of and fifteen in opposition to the motion. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] to control the time in opposition to the motion, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] in favor of it.

The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the further time of one year from and after the 16th day of June, 1888, be, and the same is hereby, allowed to the Staten Island Rapid Transit Railroad Company and the Baltimore and New York Railroad Company, or either of them, to build the bridge across the Staten Island Sound or Arthur Kill, from New Jersey to Richmond County, New York, pursuant to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Staten Island Sound," known as Arthur Kill, and to establish the same as a post-road, passed the 16th day of June, 1886.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I only desire to say that the bill authorizing the construction of this bridge, which was passed during the last Congress, provided that the structure should be finished—completed—within two years after the passage of the act. Certain interests which were opposed to the passage of the act went before the War Department and objected to the approval of the plans submitted by the company proposing to build the bridge, the result of which was that six months, or perhaps more, of the two years within which the bridge should be completed was used up in obtaining the approval of the plans by the Secretary.

The House perhaps understands the object of the construction of this bridge. It is to increase the facilities for getting into the city of New York. It is to allow the railroad company to cross the Arthur Kill and go on Staten Island, and from there to run a line of boats to the Battery, at the foot of New York City, so that the road—the Baltimore and Ohio road—may thereby reach the city of New York. That is one of the purposes of the bill. The other is that there may be established large coaling stations along Staten Island, where they can find storage-room, and in that way facilitate the getting of coal into the city of New York.

I reserve the remainder of the time allowed in support of the motion until I hear the objection which may be urged to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has occupied three minutes of his time.

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Speaker, the power to build this bridge, as prescribed in the bill, ought never to have been granted. I think it would never have been granted except for two impressions, which seized and occupied the minds of Senators and Members so that they turned a deaf ear to everything that was said by the opponents of the bill.

One impression was, and a natural one, that the bridge was opposed by the Pennsylvania road; that this road started, aided, and encouraged the opposition, that it might thwart a scheme of the Baltimore and Ohio road, which was then one of its great rivals.

The other impression, which made the ear of Congress deaf to all objections, was the fact that all statements about the Arthur Kill, the amount of its shipping and the harm that would be done that shipping by the bridge, were so extravagant, so startling, so incredible, that Senators and Members not only refused to listen to them, but to anything else we might say.

Time has fortunately developed evidence which destroys one impression, and which weakens, if it does not destroy, the other.

During the year which has elapsed since the Forty-ninth Congress passed the bill the management of the Baltimore and Ohio road has been changed. The influence of the Pennsylvania road aided in making the change. The two great roads are now worked in such harmony that it argues, and perhaps proves, that the interests of the two roads are one. However that may be, no one now disputes, what at the time of the passage of the bill I claimed, but could get no credit for, that the Pennsylvania road has now no objection to this bridge if only it can be built after a plan which shall do no unnecessary harm to the interests of New Jersey and the neighborhood.

The Pennsylvania road has now not even a motive of opposition. The Baltimore and Ohio road is no longer its great rival, and time and the knowledge that comes with it has also removed the other impression that closed the Congressional ear against us. Wonderful as is the story of the Arthur Kill, of its shipping, and of the harm that might be done to shipping by a bridge of wrong construction that should span it, so familiar are most of the members now with the story, that I doubt if any one will venture to contradict any one of the statements I shall now make about it.

Why, Mr. Speaker, only one pier of the bridge—the pivot pier—has been constructed; and the interference and the harm already done by it to the commerce of New York, which passes through this channel, is so great, so notorious, that the noise of complaint entered and startled the drowsy ear of the Senate Chamber, where, I believe, this bill originated. The Committee on Commerce heard it, and, spurred by conscience, of their own motion sent a committee to view with their own eyes the havoc worked by their inconsiderate legislation.

This was only last week. They were accompanied by some members of the House committee. These gentlemen are now back. The Senate committee are now in conference, maturing the measure which they shall report as a remedy. And I say here, Mr. Speaker, that I am willing to promise, and I assume here the right to promise for all who oppose this bill, if the Senate committee report adversely to us—report that the bridge as now constructing is not harmful to navigation, or is not more harmful to navigation than it ought to be, having in view the benefits to general transportation to be derived from its construction, we will submit. New Jersey, and all who are interested in the vessels which carry the vast tonnage of this channel, will submit to the majesty of Congressional decision, and will bear their loss without a murmur.

I said the tonnage of this channel was wonderful in amount. I challenge now the attention of the House and say that it is the most important water way in the world. There is no water way that carries each year the freight that finds its way through the narrow banks of the Arthur Kill. I know it is startling almost to absurdity, but it is the truth. In New Jersey, with quaint name and narrow fame, the Arthur Kill carries on its bosom each year more produce and merchandise, more tons of value, than the Bosphorus, the Thames, the Mersey, or the Hudson. Gentlemen from New York speak with pride of the imperial commerce that enters and leaves their harbor at Sandy Hook. Why, Mr. Speaker, the foreign commerce that enters and clears at the port of New York in one year is but 11,000,000 of tons. The annual tonnage of the Arthur Kill is 18,000,000.

And this is the water way which the Senate of the Forty-ninth Congress imperiled by legislation; which the House, under a motion to suspend the rules, without one word of discussion or debate, confirmed. And now that the Senate of this Congress, frightened at its work, pauses and seeks to examine and correct it, it seems to me unwise, unfair, and audacious for the chairman of the Committee on Commerce of this House to ask us to act now. Is it not wiser and fairer—have I not a right to ask the members of this body if it is not more like statesmanship to leave matters as they are, pending the decision of the Senate committee, and not to complicate matters by disturbing the present situation?

Work under their inconsiderate action has already been begun. A single pier stands there working its harm, and working its harm with such transparent certainty that even a committee of the Senate, of its own accord, overcomes its laziness, leaves its business, goes to New York and now waits only to decide what shall be the remedy. Am I asking too much of this House when I ask them to wait for their report? I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. May I ask the gentleman from New Jersey a question before he resumes his seat?

Mr. PHELPS. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Is this a House bill or is it a Senate bill?

Mr. PHELPS. I think the original bill was a Senate bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

Mr. CRISP. It is a House bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. If it is a House bill the Senate will get the benefit of their investigation when the bill comes before them, and will have the whole matter in their hands.

Mr. PHELPS. But why should their decision and their minds be influenced by a peremptory action of this House? It indicates to them that there was no serious opposition here and that this body which represents the people was ready even without discussion to pass the bill and take the consequences.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It seems to me that we are acting logically in pursuance of action formerly taken.

Mr. PHELPS. The action taken before was taken without debate or consultation. Under a motion to suspend the rules, without one word of debate, the bill was passed.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Very well. That action was taken and work was begun under it. Now, why should we stop at this point?

Mr. PHELPS. Because the work begun under that former action has been prosecuted to a point where, the public think, and, as the action of the Senate committee shows, the Senate suspects, the bridge in its present form will seriously injure navigation. And in that connection (as I wish to get out the facts) I would say that most of this tonnage is carried through the narrow limits of Arthur Kill by tow-boats. Since the construction of this bridge was begun the owners of those tow-boats have had to raise the price of towing from 5 cents to 7 cents per ton. This adds that much to the cost of every ton of coal, grain, or other merchandise transported through it. There could be no greater proof of the value of one argument which was urged against the construction of this bridge when it was first proposed. We all said the bridge could not be so constructed as not seriously to interfere with the kind of craft which would have to pass under the bridge, as not to increase the cost and thereby to diminish the value of the Arthur Kill traffic.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statements of my distinguished friend from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] perhaps I had better say a few words to call the attention of the House to the exact status of the case. This is not a bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arthur Kill. At the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress a bill was passed authorizing the construction of that bridge. I do not now recall exactly what took place in the House at the time of the passage of the bill, and doubtless my friend from New Jersey is correct in his statement of it. I do, however, recall the fact that very ample opportunity was given and was taken advantage of by the friends and by the opponents of that measure to appear before the committee having it in charge. It was very warmly contested before the committee, and I think I may say without revealing any secrets that distinguished counsel appeared on both sides and there was a joint hearing upon the subject by the House and the Senate committees.

It appeared then, as we understood it, that the only objection to the construction of the bridge came from New Jersey. Engineers who investigated the subject were all of the opinion that the bridge proposed would not materially interfere with the commerce of the river, and that the necessities of the situation were such that it ought to be built. As stated by one of them, the object to be gained by the construction of the bridge was "to give rapid transit around the island to points on the New Jersey shore, to increase the facilities for reaching New York, and to provide means for reaching coal wharves to be built for the coal-carrying trade in deep water on the east side of the island."

And, Mr. Speaker, whatever may be the situation to-day, at that time there was a rivalry between the Pennsylvania Railroad and the Baltimore and Ohio, and this bridge was to be a link which would enable the Baltimore and Ohio to get practically into New York City with its trains. The Legislature of New Jersey objected, as I remember, to the construction of this bridge. The Legislature of New York, on the other hand, memorialized Congress for the construction of the bridge, and upon a thorough investigation it appeared to the committee, and their view was afterwards adopted by the House and the Senate, that the interests, the great interests, of New York and of the people of the country desiring easy communication with that city, required the construction of this bridge. Either the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] is very much in error as to the commerce of Arthur Kill or the reports that I have before me are very erroneous. The statement is made in these reports that the commerce of that river is approximately 2,000,000 tons; but I understood the gentleman from New Jersey to say that it was about 18,000,000 tons.

Mr. PHELPS. Let me interrupt the gentleman and remind him that Major Gillespie, in his report of 1884, said that, taking in those harbors which he had in mind and mentioned, and which were tributary to Arthur Kill, their aggregate tonnage was 13,000,000 tons. He further said that he did not include the tonnage of Elizabethport, which alone was 3,500,000 tons. Now, 13,000,000 tons and 3,500,000 tons would make 16,500,000 tons.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman will pardon me. I was reading from the report of Major Gillespie, which I have before me. Now, Mr. Speaker, Congress at the last session determined that it was necessary to build this bridge, and I want to call the attention of the House for a moment to the necessity for the pending legislation.

After the act was passed authorizing the construction of this bridge, the Staten Island Bridge Company—or whatever company proposed to build it, for I really do not remember the name now—went before the Secretary of War to get their plans approved, as gentlemen know has to be done under our bridge bills in order to obtain the right to construct a bridge. When they went before the Secretary of War for approval of their plans they were again met by the very same opposition which they had encountered before the House and Senate committees. Objection was made to the plans proposed, and the result was that some six months or perhaps more of the time within which the bridge was required to be completed was consumed by the Secretary of War in considering the question whether or no he would approve the plans.

Finally he approved the plans—plans which he says will not materially interfere with the navigation of this river; and this company now comes and simply asks at the hands of Congress not a reopening of the case, but an extension of the time in which they were required to finish the bridge; that is all.

Bear in mind the time was short at any rate. As a general rule Congress allows three years, sometimes five years, for the building of a great structure like this; but in this case it was provided that the bridge must be finished within two years. When these same objectors have consumed six or eight months of those two years in opposing the approval of the plan, it seems to me only right and just that the time should be now extended, if the House believes, as I think it does, that its former action in granting the right was correct.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Did not those who are opposing this bridge also consume time by temporary injunctions and other proceedings in court?

Mr. CRISP. I am not fully informed about that; but generally I may say that, according to my information, they have resorted to any measures that could aid in delaying and obstructing the building of this bridge. I suppose my friend from New Jersey will agree that this is true.

Mr. PHELPS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRISP. Cheerfully.

Mr. PHELPS. Is it not true that the six months spent by the Secretary of War in examining these plans would not be characterized by the gentleman from Georgia as "frittered away," except for the purposes of his argument? Is it not true that the engineering difficulties were so great that the Secretary of War took all this time, consulting in every conceivable direction, in order that he might obtain a plan which would not interfere with navigation, and therefore ought not the gentleman from Georgia to admit that the time was not "frittered away," but was properly used in order to obtain, if possible, an engineering triumph over the difficulties which presented themselves?

Mr. CRISP. I will ask——

Mr. PHELPS. I trust the gentleman will allow me one other question, because, I doubt not, he wants to bring out the truth in this matter. Is it not true that after six months were spent by the Secretary of War in getting a plan which might be feasible, and which would not endanger navigation, he discovered, or rather the Board of Engineers discovered, that he had so far failed that the Chief of Engineers himself came to the Secretary of War and asked that a committee of engineers be allowed to go to the location and make further examination in order to reach a determination of the question?

Mr. CRISP. I assume, Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of this argument, that the time was not, to use the language of my friend, "frittered away."

Mr. PHELPS. That is not my language. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRISP. I assume the time was not so used; but even if it were shown that this time was unavoidably consumed in procuring the approval of a proper plan for the construction of the bridge, surely it will not be insisted that this time should be taken out of the two years in which the company was authorized to finish the bridge. Why, Mr. Speaker, suppose it had become necessary to use the whole two years in securing the approval of the plan, could it be said in equity and justice that the company should forfeit all right under the charter when the charter itself contemplated that they shall have two years after the approval of the plan in which to finish the construction of the bridge?

Mr. Speaker, nowhere, either on the floor of this House, in the committee-room, or elsewhere, have I heard any objection to this bridge except from New Jersey.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The water is located there.

Mr. CRISP. "The water is located there!" But I have yet to learn that because a stream of water passes through a particular State that State alone is interested in preserving and protecting the navigation of the stream. The stream here in question is used for interstate commerce. New York is more interested in protecting the navigation of that stream than is New Jersey. By that stream the great coal supply goes into that city. Its unobstructed navigation means cheap coal to that great city; and yet so clear is it that the proposed bridge will not materially obstruct the navigation of the Kill that the Legislature of that State has time and again—I would not undertake to say how often, but I think more than once—requested that Congress authorize the construction of this bridge.

Mr. Speaker, that is the whole case. My friend from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] says that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company are now in harmony, acting under one head, and that there is no longer any necessity for the bridge. I insist, Mr. Speaker, that there are other weighty reasons for the construction of the bridge; and whatever "harmony" may now exist, I would like to put the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company in such a position that whenever this "harmony" of which the gentleman speaks may cease there will be competing lines which will enable the people to get to the great metropolis of the country.

Mr. PHELPS. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Georgia be extended one minute, in order that I may ask him a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHELPS. I want to ask the gentleman from Georgia what harm it would do for him to withdraw his motion upon my statement of the fact that if the Senate committee find that this bridge will not be an obstruction to navigation we shall be willing to withdraw all opposition?

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, the complete reply to that suggestion is that in the orderly course of business this bill has come up here. If the Senate committee should decide that the bridge ought not to be built, they certainly will not agree to this bill extending the time in which it may be built.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. CRISP, to suspend the rules and pass the bill. [After a pause.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. KEAN. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 116, noes 31.

So, more than two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. 9381) to facilitate the prosecution of works projected for the improvement of rivers and harbors; when the Speaker signed the same.

SEC. 12. For examinations, surveys, and contingencies, and for incidental repairs, for which there is no special appropriation, for rivers and harbors, $75,000: Provided, That no survey shall be made of any harbors or rivers until the Chief of Engineers shall have directed a preliminary examination of the same by the local engineer in charge of the district, or an engineer detailed for the purpose; and such local or detailed engineer shall report to said Chief of Engineers, whether, in his opinion, said harbor or river is worthy of improvement, and shall state in such report fully and particularly the facts and reasons on which he bases such opinion, including the present and prospective demands of commerce; and it shall be the duty of the Chief of Engineers to direct the making of such survey if, in his opinion, the harbor or river proposed to be surveyed be worthy of improvement by the General Government; and he shall report to the Secretary of War the facts, and what public necessity or convenience may be subserved thereby, together with the full reports of the local engineer. Said reports of preliminary examinations and surveys shall be made to the House of Representatives, and are hereby ordered to be printed when so made.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment the bill (H. R. 6831) to detach the county of Audrain, in the State of Missouri, from the eastern and attach it to the western judicial district of said State; and asked a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. VEST, Mr. HOAR, and Mr. WILSON of Iowa, as managers on the part of the Senate.

Also, that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on bills of the following titles, namely:

The bill (H. R. 731) to divide the Great Sioux Indian reservation into separate smaller reservations, and for other purposes; and

The bill (H. R. 1936) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Gros Ventre, Piegan, Blood, Blackfeet, and River Crow Indians of Montana, and for other purposes.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Is a second demanded on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill which has just been read?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I have demanded a second.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. SOWDEN and Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will order tellers.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The demand for the yeas and nays is not in order on this question.

The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] to act as tellers.

Mr. OATES. What objection could there be to considering a second as ordered?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection has been made. The Chair does not know the reason why gentlemen object. The tellers will take their places.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 128, noes 45.

So a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] as controlling the time in the affirmative, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] in opposition to the bill.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that an hour be given on each side for the discussion of this bill. This is an important question and I hope nobody will object.

Mr. KELLEY. I object.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. BAYNE. Then I ask that a half hour on each side be granted. I hope gentlemen will concede that much.

Mr. KELLEY. I object.

Mr. WILKINS. What is the rule, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule provides that there may be fifteen minutes' debate on each side.

Mr. WILKINS. Then I demand the regular order.

Mr. SOWDEN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 52, noes 136.

Mr. SOWDEN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 64, nays 170, not voting 90; as follows:

Mr. STOCKDALE. I did not vote because I supposed I was paired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think that the gentleman comes within the exception of the rule.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] is recognized for fifteen minutes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

Mr. BAYNE. I would rather have had that condition of things which would have enabled the House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to have considered this bill item by item and paragraph by paragraph, but such an opportunity, it seems to me, will not present itself to this Congress. We are confronted, as has been recently said elsewhere upon another topic, with a condition—a condition of things which to my mind raises the question whether we shall have a river and harbor bill or not. We are told, and we have no reason to doubt the fact, that the tariff bill will be taken up to-morrow and that it will occupy eight, or ten, or twelve weeks of this session of Congress. We know that none of the appropriation bills, save a comparatively insignificant one, have yet passed the House.

In view of these facts it must clearly appear quite probable to practical men that if we are to have a river and harbor bill we must pass it under a suspension of the rules. The objection made to the passage of the bill under a suspension of the rules, as I understand it, is that gentlemen will not have time and opportunity to discuss and consider it in Committee of the Whole. The bill has been printed for two weeks. It has been accessible to all during that time. Every member of the House has had his opportunity of appearing before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and favor or oppose any project in the bill. The management of that committee has been essentially different from that which prevailed in the Committee on Ways and Means; for a hearing was accorded to everybody from everywhere, and a very full and elaborate consideration was given by our committee to every appropriation contained in this bill.

But there is something more than that in favor of this bill, and that is the appropriations in it have followed as they have year after year substantially the same amounts relatively to the aggregate sum that have been voted for the improvement of rivers and harbors throughout the country. There are but few new projects in the bill. There are a few. Two of those projects—one of which is in the bill and the other of which will doubtless go into the bill if it reaches the Senate—alone are of more importance to the people of Pennsylvania than the whole $20,000,000 involved in the bill. I allude to the tentative step toward the free navigation of the Monongabela in the western end of the State, and to the plan just submitted by the Secretary of War for a great harbor in the Delaware at Philadelphia.

It seems to me scarcely a fair way to treat a measure of this kind, to assume that we know little or nothing about it. Gentlemen say they do not know what is in this bill, and that discussion is very necessary to an understanding of its provisions. I think in view of past legislation, which is familiar to everybody, and in view of the fact that this bill has been in the hands of everybody for two weeks, that objection is not quite so pertinent as it might be; and I imagine that the opposition to this bill does not wholly arise from the desire to discuss it item by item.

I have no hesitation in saying, Mr. Speaker, that the passage of a river and harbor bill is a matter of the utmost importance to the people of the United States. There is not a harbor now within the United States which does not require improvement. The enlargement of the vessels that now frequent our harbors, the greater depth and expanse of water required for the vessels that are engaged in the commerce of the world necessitate on the part of the Government of the United States a vast improvement of its harbors if it wishes to afford adequate accommodation to commerce.

Now I go for practical results. If I have to climb a rugged hill and surmount a difficult precipice I am going to accomplish it if I can; and I am going to put aside on an occasion of this kind, when we desire to accomplish an object so important to the people of the whole country as the passage of this bill—I am going to put aside the old argument we have heard so many times on the floor of the House of Representatives, that the bill should not pass because gentlemen have not had sufficient chance to examine it or discuss it. I think the people of this country will not hold the Representative guiltless who votes against this bill. The people believe its passage essential to the welfare of the commerce of the country, and more essential now than ever it has been heretofore, because the commerce of the country has become so immense.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is not as to the precise merits of this bill, but whether the Democratic party, which is responsible for the legislation of the country in this branch, shall, in the middle of a long session, when there are as many months yet to come as have already elapsed, force the House to vote upon a river and harbor bill, carrying nearly $20,000,000, without the possibility of examination into details, without the possibility of amendment, and with only fifteen minutes' general discussion on either side.

It strikes me—and I say it with full respect to all the gentlemen on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and on both sides of the House—as the most brilliant exhibition of legislative audacity that has come within my observation in Congress. [Laughter.] In the five minutes that I shall take for myself I have only time to call attention to an analysis, which I shall ask leave to print with my remarks, showing the distribution of appropriations to the several States under this bill. The Northern States represented by a member on the committee receive $6,473,533; the rest of the Northern States receive less than two millions—$1,923,500. The Southern States represented on the committee receive $3,735,000; the rest of the Southern States receive $2,669,900. The States represented upon the committee will receive over $10,208,633 out of $19,494,783.13 under this bill. Here are one or two hints: The whole of New England receives $908,000, while the two States of South Carolina and Georgia receive $960,000. New York receives one million dollars and a half, and Texas and South Carolina receive more than New York. The Ohio River receives $545,000, and West Virginia and Delaware receive more. The Missouri River receives $694,000, and Arkansas and West Virginia receive more.

And, mark you, there is to be a Congressional and Presidential election this fall, and it is barely possible that the Democratic majority of the committee which framed this measure may have quietly kept that fact in view. For instance, the State of Oregon receives $826,500. I wonder whether it will be a doubtful State! California receives $505,000. The Pacific coast receives $1,331,000 out of the nineteen millions and a half. The State of Michigan—which gentlemen upon the other side have told me they regarded as a doubtful State—receives $2,174,000; $1,000,000 of which is for the Sault. I shall support that item but not the rest. [Laughter.] The State of New York receives $1,566,000——

Mr. MACDONALD. And yet they are kicking.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. There are thirty-three different items appropriated by the bill to New York, and there are thirty-five Congressional districts in that State, which has a potent influence in a Presidential election. According to my figures the State of Louisiana, in which I include some of the Mississippi River items because New Orleans will be the headquarters of the expenditure, receives $826,000. Louisiana, in view of the tariff question and more particularly in view of the sugar question, may be a very doubtful State. Those six States alone will receive nearly $6,000,000, or about one-third of the whole amount appropriated in the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I reserve the remainder of my time, and ask leave to include in my printed remarks an analysis of the bill by States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas reserves the balance of his time, and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] has reserved the remainder of his time, and the question is——[Loud cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Am I not entitled to close the debate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no rule on the subject.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN].

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Speaker, in one minute I can scarcely say anything but record my protest against the passage of this bill under the suspension of the rules. It involves appropriations amounting in the aggregate to $19,494,783.13, or nearly a million dollars more than the river and harbor bill of 1882, which was returned to the House unapproved by the then President of the United States.

Mr. DUNN. And passed over his veto.

Mr. SOWDEN. Yes, and many of those who voted to pass it over the President's veto went down to their political graves never to be resurrected. An important piece of legislation like this, involving nearly twenty millions of dollars, to be forced through this House without even an opportunity to discuss its provisions or examine it item by item! There never was so gigantic a raid attempted upon the United States Treasury as is proposed by this bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose that it will be possible to change anybody's opinion upon the question before the House; and yet perhaps the time is not lost when we explain the reasons for our action. It has been my misfortune, and I regard it as such, to have been obliged to vote against a number of river and harbor bills, but I am by no means opposed to such appropriations. I even go to the extent of believing that the small streams should not be neglected. The only question which ought to be considered is whether the expenditure is proportioned to the results. But while I have that feeling with regard to such appropriations, I do not believe that the present motion ought to prevail. It seems to me that the objections to it are fundamental. We do not sit here to record the results of the examination of any committee of this House, but we sit here as an original deliberative body, each one of us having his duties and responsibilities; and whenever a bill passes here it ought to receive the approval of a majority of the House after careful examination.

Here is a bill carrying a vast sum; it is made up of items to be expended in localities scattered all over the United States; yet it is proposed that by one single motion we put this measure through and upon this occasion finish our duty with reference to it. What does it mean? It means that we shall abdicate the right to understand each item of the bill; it means that we shall abdicate the right of amendment: it means that we must hand over to the body at the other end of this building the sole right to alter, modify, and better this bill.

I admit that there may be great public occasions, great public exigencies, great public crises, in which we may do such a thing as this; but I utterly deny that there is any such situation here present. We have three months of this session in our hands. This bill could be taken up this very week, its provisions scrutinized, and its principles either advocated or challenged in the House.

I have no personal grievance connected with this bill; but there is one thing which I know ought to be examined by the House, and that is whether a certain portion of this country should be treated more favorably than the rest of it. A certain portion of this bill is calculated upon the basis of the engineers' estimates made upon the spot; all the rest of the estimates have undergone a reduction on the part of the Chief of Engineers. The bill is made up upon one basis for one section of the country, and upon another and less liberal basis for another section. I say that this is a matter which should receive the opinion and the judgment of the entire House. No committee ought to be considered competent to make such a decision as that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] has four minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, three minutes is all too short to represent the immense interests toward the great metropolis of this country in its relation to this bill.

I do not complain that the bill gives too small a sum to New York State. I do not quarrel with the amount for New York City at this time, but I challenge the equity of the distribution of the money which is given for New York City and State. Although it may be true that New York City will obtain a million and a half, or, to be more exact, $1,533,000 under this bill, and although there may be at least one-half of that sum on hand unexpended, still a wise distribution of these moneys should be the first object of consideration.

I will not complain at this time that Western New York has happily succeeded in having a handsome appropriation, nor that Oswego receives under its provisions $100,000 out of the $160,000 recommended for 1888 in addition to the amounts on hand, which the table hereafter will show. But I do say that New York City is entitled to better consideration under this bill. Neither would I complain that the bill covers two years. And I have no criticism to make on the fidelity with which my friend from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] has worked so as to make his bill acceptable to the House and to the country.

But there seems to be a lack in some respects and in some direction of that proper regard for the great commercial metropolis of this country, which, as its Representative, I must explain.

A bill to be just to New York City should not be based on population nor upon area of territory, but upon the needs of commerce in relation to the whole country.

The exports of merchandise from the United States have not materially differed this year from the last. The imports have increased 7 per cent. There are 108 customs districts in the United States, and 90 per cent. of the entire export trade is handled by a few leading ports, in the following proportion:

(1) New Orleans, 11½ per cent.; (2) Boston, 8 per cent.; (3) Baltimore, 7 per cent.; (4) Philadelphia, 4¾ per cent.; (5) San Francisco, 4 per cent.; (6) New York, 44 per cent.

Of imports, Boston has 8¾ per cent.; San Francisco, 5¾ per cent.; Philadelphia, 5½ per cent.; and New York 66 per cent.

It thus appears that of the imports New York has two-thirds, and has gained more than any other city during the past year except New Orleans and Chicago.

Thus is shown at a glance the great importance of the harbor of New York in comparison with other harbors in the United States.

Is it not fairer to take the shipping and trade? Do they not indicate the revenues derived for the Government out of which our appropriations are paid? Nor am I altogether disposed to look with favor upon the large sums remaining unapplied and freshly appropriated to any mere local improvement, even the Harlem River, which is a valuable improvement for the city, but not so much so with respect to Federal or national commerce. It certainly should have been considered heedfully by the committee reporting this bill that the channels which lead from the ocean, as well for the intercoast trade as for foreign trade, should have had at least such attention as to utilize them for purposes of commerce.

Now, sir, as to details: General Duane, brigadier-general and Chief of Engineers, in a letter which I have before me, which I ask leave to print, dated 9th February, 1888, supplemented his previous statement by saying that:

Buttermilk Channel, where it joins the East River, and as it comes within 850 feet of the Brooklyn wharves at the upper end of its shoal, was intended to be dredged to the depth of 26 feet by the project adopted in 1881. In view of the difficulty which was experienced in deep-draught vessels reaching the wharves, it was proposed in 1885 to remove the whole shoal. For this want Congress appropriated $56,250.86. This was a sum only sufficient to cut it down to a depth of 22 feet. There yet remains to be excavated 165,000 cubic yards to reach the requisite depth. This is estimated at $95,000. But the delay in the work has increased the shoaling, and therefore the cost, and it is estimated now at $115,000; and yet the committee only give us $30,000. The whole amount would not only insure an earlier completion of the work, but more favorable terms for the dredging. This shoal must be removed in order to make the channel at that point available.

As to Gowanus Bay, for which the committee have appropriated only $10,000, the plan was for 18 feet to the channels leading to the mouth of the creek for about 1 mile further up. The estimate for this in 1881 was $192,565. Seventy-two thousand five hundred dollars has been appropriated in its entirety, and no balance remains. That leaves the sum of $120,065 for the completion of the work as projected at first. The engineer thinks it should be done in one appropriation.

These two channels furnish a very large part of the water front of Brooklyn. They are included in the East River district. The commerce of New York makes use of these channels for 63 7/10 of its whole commerce. So that two-thirds of the entire commerce of the United States would be relieved greatly by these urgent appropriations.

I am not here, sir, to complain that New York Harbor has not been sufficiently cared for at its Sandy Hook entrance, and yet there is much to be said of the largest appropriation. Our engineers ask for $540,000 for that purpose. This bill gives $380,000.

It should be remembered that Sandy Hook is the main entrance to that noble harbor. The channel is 24 feet at low water and 29 at high water. It has abundant breadth. It had no need for deepening until recently. The urgency for the deepening came by reason of the great increase in the length and draught of the trans-Atlantic passenger steamers. As a traveler I recognize the necessity for this deepening. It would tend to prevent the delays which passengers are now subject to by reason of these big passenger steamers having to wait for high water to pass either in or out.

The Chamber of Commerce of New York, in a resolution of November 4, 1886, declared that the demand for the increased depth of water arose almost exclusively from foreign ocean steamers.

This is entitled to consideration from an American Congress.

The amount asked for the improvement of the Harlem River by the engineer was $1,000,000. There was allowed in this bill $150,000. There was already available nearly $400,000.

But, sir, the commerce which would be assisted by this remarkable improvement is not what may be called Federal or national commerce in the true sense. It is but temporary traffic, and though it looks large in its tonnage, yet, compared with the tonnage of the channels which lead to our city of New York, it is comparatively small.

I have said that the tonnage for which so large an appropriation was given for the Harlem River improvemont was local. I do not depreciate it on that account, according to the system upon which this bill is framed.

Colonel McFarland, in his report on commercial statistics, says that the Harlem and other distributing points on the East River will be brought nearer the coal, brick, and lime deposits of the Hudson River above Spuyten Duyvil, but the traffic will be limited practically to barges and canal-boats in tow of steam-tugs. The preponderance of opinion held by shippers and boatmen is against the probability of the new route being used by traders between the Hudson River and the Eastern States because of the several bridges crossing it.

When I asked for liberty to make some observations in the RECORD, with a view to the action of the Senate hereafter on this question, I meant to print especially that which has reference to Buttermilk Channel and Gowanus Bay Channel. The extract which I ask to be printed will show precisely the nature of the commerce, and the indispensability of a discreet and discriminative appropriation in that regard.

Colonel McFarland says in his report of Buttermilk Channel that the large and increasing traffic of this part of the river certainly warrants the removal of the whole shoal at the cost of $115,000; and, as to Gowanus Bay Channels that they "are too small in view of the great increase in length and draught which has taken place in the construction of our sea-going vessels, especially steamers. The depth of these channels ought to be increased now to 21 feet at low water, and their width to 400 feet."

To make these channels it would cost $403,500.

Mr. Speaker, I will not fail upon this occasion to be courteous to my honorable colleague who represents the Oswego district. He has politely furnished to me, at my request, a statement of what his committee has intended to do for New York Harbor. I accept it as absolute verity. It is, perhaps, the best argument possible for the reconsideration of this bill in the Senate. Nor will I detract from the courtesy of the honorable gentleman, my friend from Louisiana, who has charge of this bill, by saying that he has not afforded every opportunity which gentlemen who represent the city of New York could have in presenting their claims for the improvement of our harbor.

Nevertheless, speaking from my standpoint, representing the Chamber of Commerce in its most sedate resolution, and the New York Board of Underwriters, who are careful about taking risks in commerce, unless assured of something from the Government of utility, I appeal from this House, and this extraordinary procedure of passing a bill at this time, with only one-half of the session done, without any power to amend or time for debate. All I can do is to say, if this House, by its two-thirds vote, hurries this bill to the Senate in its immature condition, that the Senate will make the corrections based upon the facts which I have asked leave to print. And although it may not be proper, Mr. Speaker, for me to say anything about a veto in this House, I am sure that a just Chief Magistrate, in considering this measure, will exercise his discretion, and veto all propositions which discriminate against the commercial metropolis of this country.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., February 9, 1888.

SIR: In answer to your letter of —— date, received the 7th instant, I would state that only such parts of the shoal at the upper end of Buttermilk Channel, where it joins the East River, as came within 850 feet of the Brooklyn wharves were intended to be dredged to a depth of 26 feet in the project adopted in 1881. But in view of the difficulty experienced in deep-draught vessels reaching the wharves, it was proposed in 1885 to remove the whole shoal, toward which purpose Congress appropriated $56,250 in 1886, a sum only sufficient to cut it down to a depth of about 22 feet.

From the best information at hand there are about 165,000 cubic yards remaining to be excavated in order to remove the whole shoal to a depth of 26 feet, the cost of which the officer in charge estimates at $95,000, but he states that in view of the shoaling which has occurred during the long progress of the work, it seems advisable, judging from past experience here, to increase this $20,000, making a total of $115,000.

An appropriation of the whole amount would not only insure an earlier completion of the work, but would, as is generally the case in large contracts, secure more favorable terms for the dredging.

The large traffic of this part of the river, as well as the increasing importance of the wharves on the Brooklyn shore to the commerce of New York, warrant the early removal of this shoal.

As regards Gowanus Bay, the plan adopted provides for giving a depth of 18 feet to the channels leading to the mouth of the creek and for about 1 mile further up. The estimated cost of this was placed in 1881 at $192,565, of which there has been appropriated $72,500, with no balance remaining.

The sum of $120,065 is therefore required to complete the work as first projected, which could be much better and more cheaply executed were this whole sum made available by one appropriation.

The improvement of the Gowanus Bay Channels and of Buttermilk Channel, which constitute a very large part of the water front of Brooklyn, and which are included in the East River district, of which 63.7 per cent. of the commerce of the port of New York makes use, would give great and urgently needed relief.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. C. DUANE,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

Hon. N. C. BLANCHARD,
Chairman Committee on Rivers and Harbors,
United States House of Representatives.

BUTTERMILK CHANNEL.

The line of docks and wharves from the Brooklyn Bridge down to the mouth of the Atlantic basin on the Brooklyn side is one of the most important in New York Harbor, and this part of the river extending from the Brooklyn Bridge to Governor's Island is regarded by pilots and masters of vessels as one of the most difficult places in New York waters to carry a vessel through safely on account of the enormous traffic passing not only up and down but across the stream.

Tows, tugs, small steamers, and small craft generally in passing up and down this part of the East River hug the New York side, forcing the larger class of sound steamers, ocean steamers, and sea-going ships in tow of tugs to keep over toward the shoal at the upper point of Governor's Island, and if, as is often the case, these vessels are obliged to stop in order to avoid collision with ferry boats, ships, and canal-boat tows, they are liable to drift over on this shoal.

It is a difficult place to work in on account of strong tides and passing vessels.

The commerce of Buttermilk Channel consists of the East India, the West India, most of the continental trade, the South American trade, and the coastwise trade of vessels to and from Long Island Sound, to and from ports on the Atlantic seaboard from Maine to Texas. The grain elevator system, except the railroad elevators of the port of New York, are situated in this channel, and easily three-fourths of the entire export of grain departs therefrom, equal in value to $154,829,062 per year.

Rates of freight and insurance since work began have been reduced.

GOWANUS BAY CHANNEL.

The improvement of Buttermilk Channel and Gowanus Bay Channel, which constitute a very large part of the water front of Brooklyn, and which are included in the East River district, of which 63.7 of the commerce of the port of New York make use, would give very great relief, especially if the channel were increased 21 feet.

The work could be much better and more cheaply executed if this whole amount were made available in one appropriation.

The depth of these channels ought to be increased to 21 feet at low water.

The Gowanus Bay and Buttermilk Channel are the water ways around the water front of Brooklyn, and are lined with covered piers in front, the great manufactory and warehousing district. This shore is the great entrepôt of New York, and vessels with all kinds of cargoes to and from all parts of the world use the wharves for discharge and loading.

The improvement of these channels so that shipping can get to and from these wharves with safety, without delay of tides, is of the greatest importance.

These channels are in daily use by the commerce of the port, and the completion of the work now under way is an immediate necessity, and the improvements required are most important at the present time for New York Harbor.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I yield my remaining two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas has but one minute.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask the House to extend my time one minute.

Objection was made.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of passing a liberal river and harbor bill. We can pass such a bill in an orderly way under the rules of the House at the present session of Congress. I am willing to stay here till September if necessary for that purpose. I am not willing to vote to pass any river and harbor bill, without consideration, under a suspension of the rules.

What consideration has this bill had? None whatever. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] says that the members of this House have had the right to appear before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for or against any part of this bill. That is not so. A member of the House who is interested in a particular river or harbor has undoubtedly had the right to appear before the committee in behalf of that improvement. No one, I suppose, has asked the committee to hear him on the bill generally. It simply amounts to this: There are many members of the House each of whom has looked into the bill just far enough to see that his own particular project is secure. Is that a sufficient consideration of the bill?

If we suspend the rules and pass the bill upon that sort of consideration what will the country say? The country will say that the members of this House, provided they find that the committee has cared for the projects in which they are particularly interested, are willing to swallow the rest of the bill whatever it may contain. Is it wise to give that impression to the country? I say that those who are interested in the permanent success of the policy of improving the rivers and harbors of this country ought not to proclaim or to give the enemies of river and harbor improvements an excuse for proclaiming that the river and harbor bill is simply a log-rolling scheme. To pass this bill in this way at this time is an act hostile to internal improvements. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors do not think so. I am convinced that they are mistaken.

But there is another objection to the passage of the bill under suspension of the rules and without consideration. It is an abdication by this House of its constitutional power and duty to originate revenue bills. The House has always insisted that appropriation bills like this ought not to be permitted to originate in the Senate. They ought to originate in this House. The Constitution as construed by this House has so declared. Can it be said that this bill will have originated in the House when the House refuses to consider it, and passes it without consideration? If the House passes the bill in this way, it simply acts as a committee to the Senate to formulate a draught of a bill for the Senate to consider. The first consideration of the bill within the meaning of the Constitution will be had in the Senate. The bill will, within the meaning of the Constitution, originate in the Senate.

If the Senate chooses to adopt it just as it stands, it will go to the President without the sanction of the deliberate judgment of the body in which it ought to have originated.

The Senate may indeed choose to change it in whole or in part, and send it back to the House. What shall we do then? Shall we not have to consider it item by item, as we ought to do now? We shall find that little time has been gained by refusing to consider it in the first instance, as it is our constitutional duty to do.

Suppose the bill gets through the two Houses and goes to the President for his signature. Do gentlemen suppose he will be less likely to veto it if he knows, as he must know, that it has not received a full consideration in the House of Representatives? Is it not far more likely that the action of the House in passing it without consideration will furnish a text for a stinging paragraph in a veto message?

I have even heard it suggested that we ought to take this extraordinary course with the bill in order to get it before the President early in the session, because it is said he is apt to deliberate before signing bills. His duty, I think, is to sign a bill which expresses the deliberate judgment of the two Houses, even although his own judgment may be opposed to it. I know there are some who regard the Executive in the exercise of the veto power as a sort of third House of Congress. They think that if the judgment of the President in regard to any bill before him runs counter to the judgment of the two Houses he is justified in refusing to sign the bill. I do not agree to that view. I think that view of the veto power would have shocked Washington or Jefferson or Hamilton.

But, however that may be, it seems to me an amazing proposition that this deliberative body should decline to deliberate merely to give to the Executive more time for deliberation. It is a strange inversion of the relative duties of Congress and the Executive.

No, Mr. Speaker, let us do our duty as a House of Representatives. The more carefully we consider this bill the less excuse there will be for the Senate to amend it, and the less excuse for the Executive to delay or to refuse his signature. That a tariff bill is impending ought to make no difference in the care with which we perfect our ordinary annual appropriations.

If it is the duty of this House to spend the next six weeks in discussing a tariff bill, it is equally our duty to remain in session after the tariff bill is disposed of till we have completed in an orderly way all the annual appropriation bills, including this one. We ought to do this, even if it takes us all summer.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I have agreed to yield for two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR].

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Speaker, differing entirely on this question with the leader on my side of the House, I say that this is a business bill and ought to be treated in a business way. As far as the first consultations have been held with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, if any member on this floor has not received sufficient consideration from that committee, I believe it is his own fault.

There is one item alone in this bill which ought to carry it now, which has for its object to lead the Northwestern commerce by a new lock through the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, involving one million of dollars, an item which is credited to the State of Michigan by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON], but which belongs to the whole Northwestern and Eastern States.

I wish to distinctly say, as I did before, that it is a business proposition; because it takes thirty days to advertise any one of these contracts, that it takes thirty days to put your plant in operation; and that if you delay this bill to the 30th of June there is not an engineer in this country, nor a contractor, who could then get more than sixty days' work out of the year 1888.

Make the appropriation of this money now—and by the bill it is made immediately available—and every port, every river north of the Ohio River, will gain, if the bill should pass and go to the President to be signed before the 1st of May, two months' working time.

Half of these works, it must be remembered, had no money last year, and they have lain idle subject to every vicissitude of wind and wave. I am in favor of passing the bill as a business man.

Mr. BRUMM. How much of the "hog" do you get?

Mr. FARQUHAR. All I want. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUMM. I have no doubt of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's two minutes have expired.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I feel I can make the assertion without fear of contradiction from any source that no bill ever came before this House which had more careful consideration than was given to this bill by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of this House. For three months we sat almost continuously, even to exclusion in participation of the work of the House. No part of this work was committed to a subcommittee. The whole committee sat in judgment upon every item incorporated in this bill, and when gentlemen complain that the bill will not receive, if passed under a suspension of the rules, that consideration it ought to have, I say in reply that through the agency of its Committee on Rivers and Harbors the House has most thoroughly and maturely considered every item forming the bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE rose.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I can not yield as my time is too short.

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors believe an exigency exists making it necessary at this time to pass the bill under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. REED rose.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me.

There is confronting this House the fact that but one of the regular appropriation bills has yet passed, and that one is the Military Academy bill. All the other seven or eight appropriation bills are yet to be passed. We have received notice that the consideration and discussion of the tariff is to be entered upon to-morrow, and it is well known to every member on this floor that this subject will occupy from five to six weeks' time of the House. At the end of it all the appropriation bills will be urgent in demanding consideration. The danger, therefore, is great that between the upper and nether millstone the river and harbor bill would be crushed to death.

Mr. REED. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I beg the gentleman not to interrupt me.

Mr. REED. A very short question.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I would if I had the time.

Mr. Speaker, I reiterate, the bill is in the predicament that if it be not passed now there is danger of its being lost entirely. Gentlemen on this floor need not be told what a great loss was entailed upon the Government by the failure of the river and harbor bill at the last session of the Forty-ninth Congress; and if this bill fails the further loss to the Government upon the works now in an incomplete state, upon which millions have already been expended, will be simply incalculable.

Gentlemen complain—some gentlemen who are opposed to this bill—that they have no opportunity under this motion to scrutinize its provisions and to reduce appropriations for items which they themselves might consider unworthy of the amounts provided for them in the bill.

In reply to that I may safely state that no member can point to a single instance where a river and harbor bill which was considered in the usual way, in Committee of the Whole, was not increased by such consideration instead of diminished; and if this bill should be proceeded with in the ordinary way, instead of being $19,000,000 as now, when we get through I do not doubt, in view of the experience of the past, that that amount will be largely increased. So there is nothing in that point against the passage of the bill under a suspension of the rules to sustain the objection of those who, on general principles, oppose river and harbor bills.

Another thing, Mr. Speaker: this bill makes the appropriations it carries immediately available. If the House passes the bill now, it can go to the Senate, and within one month's time from the date of its passage here the bill may and probably will become a law. Then it will be that the great works of river and harbor improvement throughout the country, which for months have been suspended, to the loss of the Government and the detriment of the works themselves, arising from the failure of the preceding appropriation bill, can be taken up and the work of their prosecution resumed two months earlier than will be the case if this bill is to await its slow passage through the House in the ordinary way. If we wait to consider it in the ordinary way the bill will likely not become a law before about the 1st of August, if at all; while if we pass it now, by the 15th of May we may reasonably expect it to become a law and these great works of improvement resumed.

[Cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has one minute remaining.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I wish to say in that one minute that the river and harbor bill is a business bill. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Gentlemen may laugh, but it is even so. It is a business bill in the sense that there is no element of politics in it whatever. It is a business bill in the sense that the commercial interests of the country demand adequate appropriations, which this bill carries, for the improvement of our great rivers and harbors.

Mr. SENEY. How much does this bill appropriate?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Nineteen millions four hundred and ninety-four thousand dollars.

It was, Mr. Speaker, considerations of the kind I have thus briefly mentioned which induced the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to recommend, by a unanimous vote, the passage of the bill under a suspension of the rules.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to raise the parliamentary inquiry as to whether it would be in order for me to move that my colleague, Mr. DARLINGTON, be excused from voting on this bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes so, but——

Mr. BRUMM. I then make the motion; and upon that call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to state, however, to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that this is a motion to suspend all the rules and pass the bill. The Chair did not at the moment the gentleman raised the inquiry recall the fact.

Mr. SPRINGER. I was about to suggest to the Speaker that the motion to suspend the rules would suspend also the operation of that rule.

Mr. BRUMM. As I understood the Speaker's decision the other day, it was that, upon a motion to take a recess, a request or motion to excuse a member was in order, while it would not have been in order upon a motion to adjourn; and that was simply because the motion to adjourn was a constitutional right which the House possesses, and of which it can not be deprived at any time. But the present motion is simply one to change or suspend the operation of the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decided that it was in order to ask to excuse a member upon a question to take a recess, although it had been decided previously that it was not in order to ask to excuse a member from voting upon a motion to adjourn, or a call of the House, or to adjourn over. But there is no analogy between that case and this. This is a motion to suspend the rules.

And in addition to that reason the Chair will cause the rule itself to be read, clause 8 of Rule XVI.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pending a motion to suspend the rules, the Speaker may entertain one motion that the House adjourn; but after the result thereon is announced he shall not entertain any other dilatory motion till the vote is taken on suspension.

The SPEAKER. That is the rule of the House under which the House is now proceeding.

Mr. BRUMM. This is not a dilatory motion. [Laughter.] If the Chair will indulge me, it is a motion, as was argued in the decision heretofore rendered by the Speaker, to excuse a member from voting, which can only be made preceding the vote. This being the proper time to submit that motion, it presents a question of the highest privilege, and is not a dilatory motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not decide that a motion to excuse a member from voting on a motion for a recess was not a dilatory motion. It was a dilatory motion, and the Chair so understood at the time. But dilatory motions were then in order. They are not on a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. SOWDEN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SOWDEN. It is whether a motion to adjourn is now in order.

The SPEAKER. It is not.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 134, nays 102, not voting 88; as follows:

So (two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended, and the bill was not passed.

Mr. SPINOLA. If permitted to vote, I would have voted in the negative; but I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. DUNN. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I object.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR with Mr. YARDLEY, on the river and harbor bill. Mr. TAYLOR would vote for the bill, Mr. YARDLEY against it.

Mr. MANSUR with Mr. BUTTERWORTH, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. GEAR with Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut, on this vote.

Mr. KILGORE I am paired with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LATHAM]. If he were present, he would vote for the bill and I would vote against it. I want the RECORD to show that.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, requested the House of Representatives to return the bill (S. 2613) to amend an act approved June 15, 1882, changing the boundaries of the fourth collection district of Virginia.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The next committee is the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. DUNN rose.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had recognized the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries waives its privilege under this call in favor of an important public measure which is thought to be urgent; and for that purpose I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS].

PURCHASE OF UNITED STATES BONDS.

Mr. WILKINS. I move to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That it is the sense of this House that section 2 of the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882 and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1881, which is as follows: "That the Secretary of the Treasury may at any time apply the surplus money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated or so much thereof as he may consider proper to the purchase or redemption of United States bonds: Provided, That the bonds so purchased or redeemed shall constitute no part of the sinking fund but shall be redeemed and canceled," was intended to be a permanent provision of law; and the same is hereby declared to have been since its enactment and to be now, in the opinion of the House, in full force and effect.

Mr. WEAVER. I demand a second.

Mr. BRUMM. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. WEAVER. I am willing to agree to that.

Mr. SHIVELY. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY].

Before the count by tellers was completed Mr. SHIVELY withdrew his objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule fifteen minutes are allowed for debate in support of the measure and fifteen against it. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS] to control the time in favor of the measure and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] to control the time in opposition.

Mr. WILKINS. Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the House for a few moments, I will endeavor to explain this resolution as briefly as I may.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order.

Mr. WILKINS. I have the floor and I do not yield for any such purpose.

Mr. WEAVER. I have a right to raise a point of order, have I not, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. If it is a point of order against the gentleman from Ohio——

Mr. WEAVER. No, sir; against the consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. That is too late. The resolution has been seconded by unanimous consent and its consideration has commenced.

Mr. WEAVER. Very well.

Mr. WILKINS. Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago the House of Representatives passed a bill which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to invest moneys now in the Treasury in excess of the demands for the proper and economical administration of the Government, in United States bonds, and by this operation the surplus would be put in circulation among the people—where it belongs.

This bill passed the House without a dissenting vote, went over to the Senate, and was by the Finance Committee of that body unanimously reported back to the Senate.

A long and tedious discussion followed, which resulted in the striking out of every word after the enacting clause and substituting a declaratory resolution or bill, part of which the resolution I have offered is in exact language. This amended bill came back to the House, and was, under our rules, sent back to the committee in which the House bill originated. It has now lost its privilege, and can not, if the committee itself so desired, have preference over other business in the House. There must, of course, be long and unavoidable delay.

The necessity for prompt and favorable action by the House on some such resolution as this is apparent to every one who studies the financial and industrial condition of the country.

Mr. Speaker, the President, in his annual message to Congress, expressed a doubt as to the authority to purchase bonds under the act of March 3, 1881, passed as it was in the expiring hours of the Forty-sixth Congress, at a time when the bonds of the United States carried, when compared with the present price, a small premium, and seven years nearer the day of payment.

Mr. REED. Is there anybody else that has had any doubt about it?

Mr. WILKINS. I will get to that in a moment. Yes, I will say to my friend that there were a great many who had doubts upon that proposition. The leading Republican newspaper in this city.

Mr. REED. What is that?

Mr. WILKINS. I say the leading Republican newspaper in this city doubted whether the President had the authority, and continually, in its editorials, raised doubts upon that question.

Mr. REED. Did that raise the Presidential doubt?

Mr. WILKINS. This bill came back from the Senate amended by striking out everything after the enacting clause, and under the rule it was sent to the Committee on Ways and Means, who originated it. It can not now be reported back to the House under the rule without a tedious delay.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion at that point?

Mr. WILKINS. I will.

Mr. BLAND. Why not introduce that bill and pass it, instead of this resolution? If this is not intended to defeat that, I do not know what it is intended for.

Mr. WILKINS. Mr. Speaker, I do not wonder that, with these changed conditions, a doubt as to the authority given the Executive should arise in his mind, and his desire to wait the advice of this Congress before taking so important a step is only another evidence to the people of this country of his wisdom and his patriotism in the interest and for the welfare of the whole people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the adoption of this resolution, which is exactly the language of that part of the Senate bill, and which is simply declaratory, makes it clear and explicit that it is the sense of this House that the Secretary of the Treasury has now, and has had since March 3, 1881, when the act was passed, the right to go into the market and buy any of the bonds of the United States with any surplus revenue in the Treasury. The Senate have already expressed itself almost unanimously on the bill—unanimously on this proposition, I am told. Now let the House do as much, and we have done our whole duty; leave the rest to the wisdom, the integrity, the ability, and discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, in whom the country has the most implicit confidence.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BRUMM. How did this resolution get in here; from what committee?

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the attention of the House. When this motion was made no one had time to think or to ask whether any committee had authorized the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS] to make the motion or not. This is committee day to move to suspend the rules and not the day on which an individual may do so, and I now ask the gentleman either to state that his committee did authorize him to make this motion or else to remain silent, so that we may understand that it did not, and that there is a trick being played upon this House. Which is it? [After a pause.] It is a trick, is it? Now, sir, that is taking an undue advantage of this House——

Mr. WILKINS. I will ask the gentleman if he was addressing me. I was not paying attention at the moment.

Mr. WEAVER. I was. I asked you if your committee ever authorized you to offer this resolution, and I paused at length for the gentleman to reply.

Mr. WILKINS. My committee did not authorize me, and this is not any trick.

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. WEAVER. No, sir; I will not.

Mr. Speaker, this is the day on which committees of the House have the right to be recognized to move suspension of the rules to pass bills which have been authorized by those committees; this is not individual suspension day. Now, what is the purpose of this resolution? It is plain to everybody, and will deceive no one. Sometime ago this House passed a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to go into the market and buy bonds with any surplus in the Treasury or that might hereafter be in the Treasury. That bill went to the Senate where an important amendment was put upon it by the Senator from Kentucky, Mr. BECK. What was that amendment? It authorizes and requires the Secretary of the Treasury to coin silver dollars to take the place of national-bank notes that may hereafter be retired, giving the banks thirty days after the retirement of the notes in which to take out a similar amount of notes; and in the event they fail to do this the amendment provides that silver be coined to take the place of the notes retired. That bill thus amended has come back to the House, and is now in the hands of the Committee on Ways and Means. It was just as competent for the gentleman from Ohio to have moved to discharge that committee from the further consideration of that bill and put it on its passage to-day as it was to move to adopt the resolution which he has offered. This proceeding means nothing more and nothing less than the defeat and burial of the Beck amendment. It means that this House does not intend to act upon it, or rather that the Committee on Ways and Means does not intend to give the House the privilege of taking action upon it. It can mean nothing else. Do you suppose the country will not see through the sham and understand it fully?

Mr. WILKINS. How does the gentleman know that to be true?

Mr. WEAVER. I know it from circumstances, just as any intelligent man would know anything that is transpiring before his eyes. There would be no necessity for the passage of this resolution if that bill were passed. The resolution expresses a truth, and on its face is unobjectionable; but I am opposed to the purpose for which it is now presented, and I call the attention of the House and the country to that purpose. Will this House take the responsibility of burying and defeating the Beck amendment adopted by the Senate? Gentlemen, I challenge you to do it, and I call public attention to your action. The Beck amendment is both wise and humane. Millions of honest but usury-stricken and poverty-ridden people are anxiously watching, and thousands are praying for its passage. Shall they be disappointed?

We are now undergoing in this country the tortures of a twofold contraction—contraction by the national banks and contraction by piling up the money in the Treasury, and the people are crying out for mercy. Their homes are passing from under them. They can not stand further contraction. In behalf of business men who see ruin staring them in the face, whose fortunes are about to pass from their hands, and in behalf of the destitute people of this country I appeal to this House not to allow that bill to be buried; I appeal to the Ways and Means Committee not to allow it; and if they do so, before God I appeal to the country to visit retributive justice upon those who are responsible for it. [Applause.]

Sir, it was the advocacy of popular rights as against the encroachments of the money power that elected me to Congress, and I say in this presence and before God, that I will retire from Congress rather than violate one single pledge I have made to the people. I will not indorse any such attempt as is now being made on the part of any party; and I serve notice now to that effect.

I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY].

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of paying the national debt, but utterly opposed to the ulterior purpose of the introduction of this resolution at this time. Some weeks ago the House passed the Mills resolution. It went to the Senate, was amended, returned to the House, and is now pending before the Committee on Ways and Means. That resolution, as amended, not only provides for the payment of the debt, but also provides for the coinage of silver dollars to take the place of the national-bank currency, which the payment of the debt takes out of circulation. It therefore not only covers all the purposes of this resolution, but serves the additional purpose of protecting the business and labor interests of the country against threatened collapse and disaster from contraction of the volume of currency. It relieves the Treasury, pays the debt, and protects the country from the danger of panic and bankruptcy. Now, sir, it is perfectly clear that the introduction of this proposition to-day is intended to anticipate and forestall action on that resolution. Exists there any pressing necessity for the adoption of this proposition and the burial of the Mills resolution in order to relieve somebody of a serious responsibility?

Mr. WEAVER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that this resolution has come before us in this shape. I should have been glad indeed had a motion been made to suspend the rules so as to discharge the Committee on Ways and Means from the further consideration of the bill on this subject, and put it on its passage as it came from the Senate. While I do not wish to indulge in any criticisms upon anybody or in any suspicions that this is a mode of smothering that bill, yet it does seem to me that if there were not some ulterior purpose with regard to that question we would have that bill before us upon a motion to pass it, instead of adopting this resolution.

There can be no question that the executive department of this Government has power to-day under existing law to go into the market and purchase bonds at will in the manner contemplated by this resolution. But, sir, the House bill which has come to us from the Senate has upon it a very significant and important amendment, providing that where national banks not in liquidation surrender their circulation, the Secretary of the Treasury shall purchase and coin, in addition to the minimum amount now required by law, a sufficient amount of silver to replace the bank circulation, and thus prevent contraction of the currency; in other words, under the amendment the Secretary of the Treasury would put out silver or silver certificates in an amount equal to bank notes which may be surrendered. If we are to go on and pay the public debt it is highly necessary that some provision should be made for the purpose of supplying the circulation which would be surrendered by the national banks.

And so far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, while I am in favor of the purpose of the resolution I shall not vote for it here, simply because I regard it as a subterfuge to get rid of the main question of passing a bill for the purpose of paying the debt and substituting silver and silver certificates for bank notes.

I am opposed to the whole scheme, and say here, sir, that this House will be derelict to its duty if it does not require that committee to report that bill and put it on its passage. And I shall oppose here now this resolution and all schemes which look toward smothering a great public question which this country is interested in. [Applause.]

Mr. WEAVER. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. WILKINS. I ask to know whether the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] intends to go on and occupy that time. I have the right under the rule to close the debate, and I would like to know.

Mr. WEAVER. Of course the gentleman has; I concede that; and I will therefore say in conclusion that I hope the House will defeat this resolution and rebuke the spirit of it.

Mr. WILKINS. The gentleman says he is in favor of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER. I am in favor of its purpose, but against this way of bringing it before the House.

Mr. WILKINS. I yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I am very much surprised at the differences over this resolution, and especially at the declaration made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] that there was a trick in it. Now, that gentleman knows as well as he knows any living fact that he is one of the very first gentlemen on this floor who was consulted in regard to the propriety of this resolution, and that he indorsed and approved of it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WEAVER. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. HATCH. No; I have but five minutes. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman has no right to put me in a false position.

Mr. HATCH. I do not put you in a false position.

Mr. WEAVER. I say, sir, that no man ever asked me whether I would support this resolution brought in here in violation of the rules of the House.

Mr. WILKINS. What rule has been violated?

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman knows well that he was consulted as to the resolution.

Mr. WEAVER. I never saw the resolution in my life.

Mr. HATCH. Allow me to make my statement.

Mr. WEAVER. I say you never told me of that resolution. You never told me a gentleman was to be recognized here.

Mr. HATCH. I decline to yield.

Mr. BLAND. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HATCH. I decline to yield. I do not want it taken out of my time. I reiterate what I have said of the gentleman from Missouri and others because I went to the gentleman myself. I also say that I am as much in favor of the Beck amendment as the gentleman or my colleague from Missouri; but when the people throughout the length and breadth of the Mississippi Valley are in danger to-day of a financial crisis because of this contraction of the currency, and I can not get all I want, I am willing to help my people by passing this resolution and getting what I can. Then when the Mills bill with the Beck amendment comes before the House, I will support it with my vote and my voice. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. When will that be? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BRUMM. It will be in the sweet by and by. [Laughter.]

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman has not the right to take up my time by such unparliamentary interruptions. In answer to the question I will say, however, that I hope it will be as soon as the Committee on Ways and Means can consider it and report it back to the House. It is a privileged question and can come up at any time. But now here is the Treasury Department with the Secretary of the Treasury at its head and with the President of the United States, who under the law has been trying to relieve the people of a threatened financial crisis—here they are now ready on the declaration of the House as to the interpretation of that act, to go ahead and execute it. Why did not the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER], and why did not my colleague when the bill was before the House put the amendment on? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAND. It was not in order in the House.

Mr. HATCH. Why was it in order in the Senate?

Mr. BLAND. Why do you not do it now? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HATCH. I never knew the gentleman in my life that he was not so excited whenever silver was mentioned that if he can not get all he wants he would be willing to keep the bonds of oppression around his own people until he could get the Bland silver dollar to the front again. [Laughter and applause.]

I say nothing about the amendment until the time comes to discuss it.

Mr. WEAVER. Will it ever come?

Mr. HATCH. Yes, it will come.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILKINS. I yield now four minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, this is simply a declaratory resolution to the effect that the provision incorporated in the appropriation act of 1881, to which it refers, was intended to be and is a permanent and continuing authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to use the surplus funds in the Treasury for the purpose of purchasing the public debt.

I am in favor of this resolution, first, because I believe that that was the intention and is the effect of the provision in the appropriation act of 1881, and in voting for it I am simply giving effect to my own judgment as to what was the intention of Congress in that act. Secondly, I am in favor of its passage for the reason that under existing circumstances (and I am not called upon here to say by whom these existing circumstances were brought about), under existing circumstances the business of this country demands that there should be such action taken as would lead to the use of that provision in the act of 1881 in employing the hundred millions of surplus that is to-day in the Treasury in reducing the public debt, and to set afloat for the use of the business interests of the country that hundred millions which the condition of that business so much demands.

I am not here—neither is it the part of statesmanship—to call in question or criticise this or that thing in connection with this matter. I am here simply to call the attention of this House to a necessity which exists in the country, a grave necessity. We all know, as a matter of fact, that for six months, for eight months, past there has been accumulating in the Treasury of the United States money which the business interests of the country demand and need for circulation, and which, in my judgment, months ago the President ought to have used in purchasing the debt of the country, and thus releasing that money to the use of the business public. But he said, Mr. Speaker, that he has had doubts respecting the power given him by this act of 1881. For my own part I do not believe, looking at that act as I do, that there was any necessity or ground for the doubts; but so long as they have existed, so long as he has not employed this power, and so long as it appears from the position he has taken that he is disinclined to use this power until he has had some declaration on the part of the two Houses of Congress respecting it, I am in favor of this, and am willing to declare by my vote what I believe to be the fact, and what I believe, if declared by this House, will result in releasing to the business of the country that large amount of money now tied up in the Treasury and which the demands and needs of the country require shall be put in circulation.

Mr. MCKENNA. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have not time. I yield the balance of my time to my colleague, if he desires it.

Mr. MCKENNA. I only wanted to ask if we have not already declared upon this question?

Mr. KERR. Has not the Senate acted upon the House bill and returned it to us?

Mr. DINGLEY. The House has passed a bill giving the direct authority to apply the funds in that way.

Mr. MCKENNA. This is the same.

Mr. DINGLEY. No. This is simply a declaration of the meaning of the act of 1881. The Senate passed precisely a similar declaratory resolution, and now if the House joins in the same there can be no question on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury or the Executive as to the power conferred by that act, nor any excuse for withholding for a single day longer that relief which the country so much needs.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Is the gentleman in favor of the amendment put on by the Senate?

Mr. DINGLEY. I am in favor of this resolution as it stands here for our action.

Mr. WILKINS. I now yield a half minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I think it is but just and proper that I should, on behalf of the Ways and Means Committee, state, after what has been said one way or other concerning the action of the Ways and Means Committee upon the Mills resolution, that it but recently came back from the Senate—April 3—and the last meeting of the committee was April 2. The last two meetings we intended having were interfered with by the deadlock existing in the House. It is well known that the committees can not be in session during the sittings of the House without special leave. And there has been no consideration given to the matter for that reason and for that reason alone. It has not been discussed in the committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. There has been no meeting of the committee since it came back to the House.

Mr. MCMILLIN. My friend from Kentucky is correct; there has been no meeting of the committee held, or regular meeting possible to be held, since the resolution was referred to us by the House after its return—amended—from the Senate.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILKINS. I suggest that we take a vote now.

Mr. REED. Can not gentlemen be allowed five minutes longer on each side? This is quite interesting. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to suspend the rules and pass the resolution.

Mr. WEAVER. Yeas and nays.

Mr. BRUMM. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRUMM. Or rather to a parliamentary inquiry.

It having been just now discovered for the first time that this bill or resolution, or whatever it is, was not considered by a committee, and that it is before the House not by authority of a committee, and that this is suspension day for committees only, is the bill therefore not irregularly before the House and subject to the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is mistaken in saying that it has been just now discovered that it is not reported by a committee. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] attempted to make the point of order immediately after the second was ordered on the motion.

Mr. BRUMM. There was no information here officially from the committee until at this time.

The SPEAKER. But this does not purport to come from a committee. On the contrary, when the Chair called the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the chairman of that committee, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN], rose and stated that the committee waived its privilege and that he yielded to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS]. Thereupon the gentleman from Ohio, on his individual responsibility as a member, offered the resolution and moved to suspend the rules. A second was ordered by the House. Immediately upon that the gentleman from Iowa attempted to make the point of order, but the Chair held it was too late.

Mr. BRUMM. But if the Speaker will allow me I will remind the Chair that all this proceeding was being followed out before we had any official information from the Committee on Ways and Means, the committee that had jurisdiction of the subject-matter. And now we are told that that committee has not had a session since the bill was received from the Senate. The question is whether I, as a member of Congress, having discovered, officially or otherwise, that fact can not raise the point I have made?

The SPEAKER. This resolution has never been before the committee.

Mr. BRUMM. And it is therefore irregular.

Mr. HATCH. The motion is to suspend all rules.

Mr. DUNN. I wish to call attention to one feature of the rule. It provides that the Speaker shall not entertain a motion to suspend the rules except on the first and third Mondays of each month and during the last six days of the session, preference being given on the third Mondays to committees. But there is no arbitrary rule saying they shall have it. The preference was given to the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman, and I waived it, yielding to the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. As has been stated by the gentleman from Arkansas, motions to suspend the rules are in order on the first and third Mondays of each month. The rule provides that preference shall be given to individual members on the first Monday and that preference shall be given to committees on the third Monday. The Chair gave preference to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries and called it in the regular order; but the gentleman from Arkansas waived the privilege of his committee under the rule and yielded to the gentleman from Ohio.

While this may be, and the Chair deems it is, a departure from the practice which has heretofore prevailed since the adoption of this rule in the Forty-sixth Congress, yet it is not prohibited by the rule, and the point of order was not made until a second had been demanded and ordered.

Mr. WEAVER. With the permission of the Chair, I want to say this: When the gentleman from Arkansas yielded the privilege of his committee we had no knowledge of the purpose of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS], and there was such confusion in the Hall that we did not hear the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries waive his right in favor of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency. That was not known. I presume not half a dozen members knew it, or that any perhaps knew it unless the gentleman who made the motion, the chairman of the committee who yielded to him, and the Speaker.

Mr. HATCH. I know that more than half a dozen members knew it, because I heard half a dozen speak of it.

Mr. WEAVER. But the gentleman did not hear half a dozen members speak of this fact that there was going to be a departure to-day from the well-recognized practice of the House. That, so far as I am aware, was not known to half a dozen members.

Mr. WILKINS. Is this debate in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated that he would listen to the gentlemen. The Chair thinks the point of order too late, whatever there might have been in it if made in time——

Mr. BRUMM. I desire to make another parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRUMM. A resolution or bill having passed the House during a session of Congress, can a similar resolution or bill be called up again in the same session with the change merely of calling the one a bill and the other a resolution, both embodying exactly the same subject-matter?

The SPEAKER. The House has passed no resolution in this or any previous session, so far as the Chair thinks, similar to this.

Mr. BRUMM. Was not the bill which passed the House, and was amended in the Senate, substantially the same as this resolution?

The SPEAKER. Not at all. That was to enact a new law. This declares what is the sense of the House as to the meaning of a law already enacted.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 35—not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. BLAND. Count the other side.

The negative vote being counted, there were 104 noes.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 138, nays 64, not voting 123; as follows:

Mr. PEEL asked unanimous consent that the reading of the names of members voting be dispensed with, but objection was made.

Mr. LAWLER with Mr. BROWN, of Ohio, for the rest of the day.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PEEL. I move that the House now take a recess, the evening session to be devoted to completing the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. REED. Half the members of the House have gone.

Mr. RANDALL. If the House should take a recess, would not motions to suspend the rules still be in order?

The SPEAKER. Yes; unless the House, on a motion to suspend the rules, should resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; which would be in order.

LAURA A. WRIGHT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without approval, House bill No. 415, entitled "An act granting a pension to Laura A. Wright."

The beneficiary named in this bill is the widow of Charles H. Wright, who was pensioned for a gunshot wound received in the military service of the United States on the 19th day of September, 1864. He continued in the receipt of such pension until June 25, 1884, when he committed suicide by hanging.

It is alleged on behalf of his widow that the pain caused by his wound was so great that it caused temporary insanity, under the influence of which he destroyed himself.

There is not a particle of proof that I can discover tending to show an unsound mind, unless it be the fact of his suicide. He suffered much pain at intervals. He was a farmer, in comfortable circumstances, and, according to the testimony of one of the physicians filed in support of the widow's claim, his health was good up to the time of his death, except for the wound and its results. The day before his death he was engaged in work connected with his farming occupation, though he complained of pain from his wound. Early the next morning, still complaining, as it is alleged, of his wound, he went out, declaring he was going out to milk, and not returning in due time, upon search his body was found and his self-destruction discovered. This was nearly twenty years after the deceased received his wound, and there is not a suggestion of any act or word of his in all that time indicating insanity. It seems to me it can hardly be assumed in such circumstances that the insanity and death of the soldier resulted from pain arising from his wound merely because no other explanation can be given. In numerous cases of suicide no cause or motive for self-destruction is discovered.

We have within our borders thousands of widows living in poverty, and some of them in need, whose dead husbands fought bravely and well in defense of the Government, but whose deaths were not occasioned by any incident of military service. In these cases the wife's long vigil at the bed of wasting disease, the poverty that came before the death, and the distressing doubt and uncertainty which darkened the future have not secured to such widows the aid of our pension laws.

With these in sight, the bounty of the Government may without injustice be withheld from one whose soldier husband received a pension for nearly twenty years, though all that time able to labor, and who, having reached a stage of comfortable living, made his wife a widow by destroying his own life.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, April 16, 1888.

PUBLICATION OF HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on the Library:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith and commend to your favorable consideration a letter from the Secretary of State, outlining a plan for publishing the important collections of historical manuscripts now deposited in the Department of State.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, April 12, 1888.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

That the terms of the district court held at Jackson for the southern district of Mississippi shall hereafter commence on the first Mondays in May and November.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 1, after the word "grand," to strike out the word "jury" and insert the words "and petit juries;" and in line 2, after the word "grand," to strike out "jury" and insert "and petit juries;" so as to make the section read:

That the grand and petit juries organized by the circuit or district court in said district shall be also the grand and petit juries of both courts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to section 2:

That all writs, processes, pleas, recognizances, and bonds made or returnable to the terms of said courts, as now provided by law, shall be considered as taken and returnable to the terms established by this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2717) granting a pension to John K. Evans; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2718) granting a pension to David May; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2719) granting a pension to Jonas G. Dodge; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2720) granting a pension to John B. Ross; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 2721) granting a pension to Jackson Chapman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask to have withdrawn from the files and again referred to the Committee on Pensions the petition of Henry A. Hawley, of Delma Junction, Iowa, late hospital steward United States Army, setting forth his military service and praying to be allowed a pension, which was presented at the last Congress and referred to that committee and not acted upon at all, and therefore it is in order to move that it be again referred to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

FLORIDA PUBLIC LAND INVESTIGATION.

Mr. PLUMB. The Committee on Public Lands instruct me to report the following original resolution:

Whereas it has been alleged upon the floor of the Senate by a Senator from the State of Florida that illegal and fraudulent conveyances of public lands have been made in said State in derogation of the rights of the United States and of settlers upon said lands, and that a remedy for such evils can be provided by law: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be, and is hereby, directed to investigate all the facts bearing upon the general allegations referred to; and that for the purpose of such an investigation said committee is authorized to employ a stenographer, and shall have power to administer oaths, send for persons and papers, to sit in Washington or such other places as may be necessary, and to conduct its investigation through subcommittees, the expenses of the same to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, and said committee shall report by bill or otherwise as the circumstances shall seem to require such plan for remedy of the evils, if any are shown, as they may deem necessary.

Mr. HARRIS. From what committee is that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask for the immediate consideration of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As it creates a charge on the contingent fund of the Senate, the Chair supposes it must be referred, under the rules, to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses.

Mr. PLUMB. Availing myself of the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be passed.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that if he should say in his resolution that "said committee or a subcommittee of their number," have that power, then the power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, etc., can be exercised by the subcommittee, and they become themselves a committee of the Senate for that purpose.

Mr. PLUMB. The resolution states that it may be done by a subcommittee.

Mr. HOAR. It says that the committee may exercise the duty through a subcommittee, and there is some doubt whether the subcommittee are a committee of the Senate under the statute.

Mr. PLUMB. If there is any doubt about the matter, I will ask that the resolution be printed and lie on the table, and I shall call it up to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed and lie over under the rule.

BLOCK ISLAND HARBOR.

Mr. ALDRICH submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to report to the Senate an estimate of the cost of removing the sand-bar which has recently been formed obstructing navigation at the entrance to the harbor of Block Island, Rhode Island.

DEPOSITS OF GOVERNMENT MONEY WITH NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish the Senate with a statement of the amount of money belonging to the United States and deposited in national banks, and to inform the Senate whether such banks are allowed the use of such money without the payment of interest to the United States, and give the name and locality of each bank of deposit and the amount deposited therein; and also to inform the Senate whether there is any regulation of the Treasury Department by which it can be determined in what banks deposits shall be made, and to what extent the place of deposit is discretionary with the Secretary.

CONSIDERATION OF THE FISHERIES TREATY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further resolutions, concurrent or other, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. RIDDLEBERGER, as follows:

Resolved, That so much of Rules XXXVI, XXXVII, and XXXVIII as provides for executive sessions be suspended during the consideration of the fisheries treaty when the same shall be reported to the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In the consideration of that resolution, I move that the doors be closed.

Mr. HAWLEY. I second the motion.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask the Senator from Vermont if he will not allow me to make a statement, that is all?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I simply make the motion.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I shall not discuss the treaty nor refer to it.

Mr. HARRIS. I second the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. HAWLEY. I had already seconded it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been moved and seconded that during the discussion of the resolution the doors of the Senate be closed. The Sergeant-at-Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors of the Senate.

The Senate, with closed doors, proceeded to consider the resolution.

After fourteen minutes the doors were reopened.

FORFEITURE OF UNEARNED RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1430) to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CALL. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that that is a bill which I think, with the amendments, will require considerable debate. In fact, I should like to be heard upon it myself, and in that point of view I suggest to him whether it would not be better to make it a special order at some time outside of the five-minute rule.

Mr. PLUMB. We are not embarrassed by the five-minute rule now. That does not apply to a bill taken up on motion in this way. If the consideration of the bill is not concluded this morning I shall ask the Senate to consider it to-morrow morning in the morning hour. There will be ample opportunity for the Senator to speak.

Mr. COCKRELL. The five-minute rule does not apply now.

Mr. PLUMB. The five-minute rule does not apply to a bill taken up in this way.

Mr. CALL. I have no other objection than the one I have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 5, after the word "granted," to strike out "on condition subsequent."

Mr. PLUMB. I am instructed by the committee to ask the Senate not to agree to that amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 7, before the word "portion," to strike out "uncompleted;" so as to read:

That there is hereby forfeited to the United States, and the United States hereby resumes the title thereto, all lands heretofore granted to any State or to any corporation to aid in the construction of a railroad opposite to and coterminous with the portion of any such railroad.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 8, after the word "railroad," to insert "not now completed and in use."

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend that amendment by substituting the word "operation" for "use;" so as to read, "not now completed and in operation."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was, in section 1, after the word "domain," at the end of line 10, to strike out "and opened to settlement under the homestead laws;" so as to read:

And all such lands are declared to be a part of the public domain.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section 2 the following:

SEC. 2. That in all cases where persons are in possession of any of the lands affected by any such grant and hereby resumed by and restored to the United States, under deed, written contract with, or license from, the State or corporation to which such grant was made, or its assignees, executed in good faith prior to January 1, 1886, they shall be entitled to purchase the same from the United States, in quantities not exceeding 320 acres to any one such person, at the rate of $2.50 per acre, at any time within two years from the passage of this act, and on making requisite proofs and payment to receive patents therefor: Provided, That in all cases where parties, persons, or corporations, with the permission of such State or corporation, or its assignees, are in the possession of, and have made improvements upon, any of the lands hereby resumed and restored, and are not entitled to enter the same under the provisions of this act, such parties, persons, or corporations shall have six months in which to remove any growing crop, and within which time they shall also be entitled to remove all buildings and other movable improvements from said lands.

The next amendment was to insert as section 3 the following:

SEC. 3. That if it shall be found that any lands heretofore granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and so resumed by the United States and restored to the public domain lie north of the line known as the "Harrison line," being a line drawn from Wallula, Wash., easterly to the southwest corner of the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 5, in township 7 north, of range 34 east, of the Willamette meridian, all persons, or their heirs or assigns, as the case may be, who had acquired in good faith the title of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to any portion of said lands prior to July 1, 1885, or who at said date were in possession of any portion of said lands or had improved the same, claiming the same under written contract with said company, executed in good faith, shall be entitled to purchase the lands so acquired, possessed, or improved, from the United States at any time prior to the expiration of one year after it shall be finally determined that such lands are restored to the public domain by the provisions of this act, at the rate of $2.50 per acre, and to receive patents therefor upon proof before the proper land office of the fact of such acquisition, possession, or improvement, and payment therefor, without limitation as to quantity.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to make certain corrections of the description. In line 6, before the word "corner," I move to strike out "southwest" and insert "southeast."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In the same line, after the word "the," I move to insert "northeast one-fourth of the;" so as to read:

Easterly to the southeast corner of the northeast one-fourth of the southeast quarter.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 7 I move to strike out the words "southeast quarter of," which are rendered unnecessary by the amendment just adopted.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to strike out the word "five" after "section" in line 7 and insert "twenty-seven;" so as to read "section twenty-seven" in place of "section five."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. Then in line 8, after the word "range," I move to strike out "thirty-eight" and insert "thirty-seven;" so as to read "range thirty-seven east" in place of "range thirty-eight east."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. Now, in line 9, after the word "persons," I move to strike out "or their heirs or assigns as the case may be," for the purpose of inserting them at another place in the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. Now, I move to insert the same words after the words "good faith" in line 15.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 15 of section 3, after the word "faith," it is proposed to insert:

Or their heirs or assigns, as the case may be.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 4. That nothing in this act shall be construed to waive or release in any way any right of the United States to have any other lands granted by them, as recited in the first section, forfeited for any failure, past or future, to comply with the conditions of the grant.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to add to that amendment—

Or as forfeiting any land that has been heretofore earned by the construction of any portion of a railroad under any act of Congress making a grant of public lands.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 5. That this act shall not take effect until January 1, 1889, as to a grant of land to the State of Mississippi for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railroad from Brandon to the Gulf of Mexico, commonly known as the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad, nor as to a grant of land to the State of Alabama for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railroad from the Tennessee River at or near Gunter's Landing to Gadsden, on the Coosa River.

Mr. PLUMB. The committee instructed me to move to amend that amendment so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That this act shall not take effect except as to lands which were entered under the homestead and pre-emption laws and at private entry while the same were held by the Interior Department to be subject to such entry until January 1, 1889, as to a grant of land to the State of Mississippi for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railroad from Brandon to the Gulf of Mexico, commonly known as the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad, nor as to a grant of land to the State of Alabama for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railroad from the Tennessee River at or near Gunter's Landing to Gadsden on the Coosa River.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALTHALL. Would an amendment to section 5 be in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An amendment to section 5 is now in order, that section being the pending amendment of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WALTHALL. I move to add to the proposed new section 5 the following:

And in all cases where any of the lands excepted as aforesaid have been sold by the proper officers of the United States for cash, or with the allowance or approval of such officers have been entered in good faith under the homestead or pre-emption laws, the right and title of the persons holding or claiming any such land under such sales or entries are hereby confirmed.

Mr. PALMER. That is a very important amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Michigan ought to understand that that applies simply to a certain limited class of lands mentioned in section 5. It is not a general provision.

Mr. PALMER. Let us hear it again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment of Mr. WALTHALL.

Mr. PLUMB. That relates to the lands which are excepted from the operation of the bill in the State of Mississippi and in the State of Alabama, and I would say that the foundation for that is found in the fact that until the rendering of what is known as the Schulenberg vs. Harriman decision the Interior Department treated all granted lands which had not been earned at the time of the date named in the granting act as having reverted to the United States, and they proceeded to treat them as part of the public domain, selling them according to the laws relating to lands similarly located. It is for the purpose of protecting the persons who purchased lands within the limits of the grants made to construct the road from Brandon to Ship Island, in Mississippi, during the period of time when the Interior Department so construed the granting act, that this amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is offered.

Mr. WALTHALL. The Senator from Kansas has stated the case exactly. The amendment which I offered to section 5 has no reference to any lands except the lands embraced in section 5. It is not intended to have any general operation, or to affect any railroad land grants except those to the Ship Island road and to the Coosa and Tennessee road. It has no reference to land grants generally.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would suggest to the Senator from Mississippi whether his amendment should not be qualified a little so as to refer more specifically and specially than it does to the section to which it is an amendment. It might be applied I think to the whole act.

Mr. PALMER. I should like to hear the amendment read again.

Mr. MITCHELL. It should be made specifically to apply to section 5.

Mr. WALTHALL. If the Senator from Oregon will examine the amendment, he will see that it states his view exactly.

Mr. MITCHELL. I call for the reading of it again.

Mr. DOLPH. Let the whole section with the proposed amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The whole section with the proposed amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That this act shall not take effect except as to lands which were entered under the homestead and pre-emption laws, and at private entry while the same were held by the Interior Department to be subject to such entry until January 1, 1889, as to a grant of land to the State of Mississippi for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railroad from Brandon to the Gulf of Mexico, commonly known as the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad, nor as to a grant of land to the State of Alabama for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railroad from the Tennessee River at or near Gunter's Landing to Gadsden on the Coosa River; and in all cases where any of the lands excepted as aforesaid have been sold by the proper officers of the United States——

Mr. MITCHELL. Right there say: "Excepted as aforesaid in this section."

Mr. WALTHALL. I am perfectly willing to add that; it does not change the meaning.

Mr. MITCHELL. Amend by putting in the words "in this section." There can be no trouble about it then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "aforesaid" the words "in this section." The reading will be continued as proposed to be amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And in all cases where any of the lands excepted as aforesaid in this section have been sold by the proper officers of the United States for cash, or with the allowance and approval of such officers have been entered in good faith under the homestead or pre-emption laws, the right and title of the persons holding or claiming any such lands under such sales or entries are hereby confirmed.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from Mississippi why that should be limited to one particular class of lands? What is there that makes it just in one case and unjust in others?

Mr. WALTHALL. In order to explain that I shall have to explain the entire section and the proposed amendment to it.

The facts that seem to justify the special provision as to the two roads named in section 5, briefly stated, are these: In 1856 Congress granted lands to certain States to aid in the construction of certain railroads named in the acts by which the grants were made. Among those States were Mississippi and Alabama. Among the Mississippi roads named was the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad, and among the Alabama railroads named was the Coosa and Tennessee. Neither of these two roads has been completed, and the time limited for their completion has passed; and it is as to these two roads that section 5 provides that this act shall not take effect until the 1st of January, 1889, by which time it is believed they will both be completed.

It is perhaps proper for me to refer to some legislation, or attempted legislation, at the last session in reference to these roads. During the Forty-ninth Congress——

Mr. HOAR. The Senator did not precisely apprehend the force of my question. I did not ask him for an explanation as to the legislation in reference to these roads; but why persons who, in regard to that particular land grant, have bought land and paid the consideration, and the United States has got it, and who bought of a person authorized to sell, should be confirmed in their title in these cases, and why title should not be confirmed in other cases? That was my question.

Mr. WALTHALL. The answer to that is this——

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator from Mississippi will permit me——

Mr. WALTHALL. Let me answer the Senator from Massachusetts. This bill proposes generally to forfeit all unearned land grants, all land grants not earned by the completion of the roads within the time limited for their completion. As to these two roads named in section 5 it is proposed to extend the time until the 1st day of January, 1889. That is a proposition to do for these two roads something not proposed to be done for other roads, and it is proposed to be done on a condition that lands which have been sold heretofore under a mistaken apprehension of the law, prior to the Schulenberg vs. Harriman decision, shall be confirmed to the persons who purchased those lands under that mistaken view of the law which prevailed in the Interior Department. It is proposed to do for these two roads something exceptional, and the exceptional privilege proposed is coupled with a condition that innocent purchasers who paid their money to the Government in good faith shall be protected.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator one question?

Mr. WALTHALL. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is whether the effect of the passage of section 5 will be to give to these companies more land if they complete the roads within the time extended than they otherwise would have?

Mr. WALTHALL. On the contrary, they get less, by reason of the purchasers being permitted by the provisions of this amendment, if they purchased land embraced in the grant under a mistaken view of the law held by the Interior Department prior to the Harriman decision, to hold their lands.

Mr. MITCHELL. The effect of this amendment, then, is to benefit the settlers, the purchasers, and not the railroad company. Is that it?

Mr. WALTHALL. It is to give the railroad companies additional time within which to complete their roads, but at the same time, in extending that favor to them, to protect the purchasers from the Government who paid their money under a misapprehension on the part of the officers of the Government of the law.

Mr. MITCHELL. But do not these companies get more land after they have completed the roads within the time granted by this provision than they otherwise would?

Mr. WALTHALL. They do not. On the contrary, this grant originally was about 650,000 acres. Under the misapprehension of the law already referred to, about 200,000 acres had been disposed of prior to the decision in the Schulenberg and Harriman case. This 200,000 acres I propose to secure to persons who paid their money in good faith under that mistaken construction of the law by the officers of the Interior Department.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish simply to know whether the object of this fifth section is to grant special privileges to these two companies with reference to the time within which their roads shall be completed, and with reference to the amount of lands they shall receive that are not granted to any of the other companies.

Mr. WALTHALL. On the contrary, the effect of the section is to reduce the amount nearly one-third for the benefit of purchasers who paid their money in good faith, but there is an extension to these companies of a few months' additional time within which to complete their roads.

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me a question?

Mr. WALTHALL. Certainly.

Mr. DOLPH. I think my colleague and the Senator from Mississippi do not understand each other, and that in a word I can make the point clear which my colleague is driving at.

As I understand it, one of these railroads, the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad, has already completed 25 miles of its road. It has 125 miles more to complete.

Mr. WALTHALL. More than that.

Mr. DOLPH. If Congress should now pass this bill without an exception in favor of that road, it would get this land for 25 miles, or whatever is completed of its line; and this exception does give it an advantage by giving it time to complete its road and earn the land for the 125 or 150 miles, or whatever it may be, that remain to be finished. In consideration of that privilege the Senator from Mississippi proposes that where lands have been selected along the line which has already been constructed, and therefore earned by the railroad company, the railroad company shall release its right to the persons who have gone on and purchased, under a mistake of the Department, these lands which were railroad lands, and which had been earned, in consideration of this exception, in favor of the roads. In other words, Congress makes a bargain with these railroad companies, "You shall have time until the first of January to complete your road and earn your grant, provided that the title of those persons who bought, under a misapprehension of the law, from the General Government lands which you had earned is confirmed to them." Is that the proposition?

Mr. WALTHALL. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] has stated very clearly what I had attempted to state in reply to the question of his colleague, and supposed I had done it. There is an extension of time granted to these roads, but in consideration of that act of grace on the part of the Government it is virtually proposed that the companies shall release to these persons who bought in good faith the lands along the lines of these roads when the purchases were made under a mistake of law on the part of the officers of the Interior Department.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Mississippi if the ground on which these settlers are protected is not that they have paid in good faith the price for these lands under what was supposed to be a valid authority to sell them, and therefore the Senator seeks to protect them on that ground from the consequences of the action of the Department?

Mr. WALTHALL. Exactly.

Mr. DAWES. Now I inquire why all settlers on lands so situated who have paid the value for the lands under a mistaken view, which the Department and everybody supposed was valid, but which turns out not to be valid, should not be protected in the same way?

Mr. WALTHALL. I think I can answer that to the Senator's satisfaction.

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to say one word?

Mr. WALTHALL. Allow me first to answer the Senator from Massachusetts. There is no reason in my judgment why all settlers similarly situated should not be protected; and whenever it is proposed to protect all settlers in like condition, as at present advised, the proposition shall receive my support; but not being able perhaps to apply the legislation proposed by me to land grants in other States, I am seeking to take care of innocent purchasers in my own.

Mr. PALMER. Now will the Senator allow me to make a remark?

Mr. WALTHALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. PALMER. This discussion might all have been avoided if the Senator from Mississippi had allowed me to say a word ten minutes ago.

Mr. WALTHALL. I am very sorry I did not know it.

Mr. PALMER. There is an amendment which answers the objection of the two Senators from Massachusetts, an amendment of a general character which will be offered by my colleague [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE] and amended by me, that will make this general in its operation.

Mr. WALTHALL. In reply to the statement of the Senator from Michigan that the discussion might have been saved by my allowing him to ask me a question some time ago, if he is correct, which I do not think he is, I am very sorry I did not permit him. One reason I did not do it was that there were two other Senators on the floor at the same time, one of whom certainly was on the floor before he was and had asked me a question and wanted an answer.

As to the substantial proposition that he makes, if a general amendment which he proposes to submit should be adopted which would serve my purpose as to this particular road, all well and good; but I have reason to believe that the general amendment when it is proposed will perhaps meet with considerable opposition from some quarters and may lead to very prolonged discussion.

If the Senator be correct in his idea and if his general amendment subserves my purpose, after my amendment is adopted in Committee of the Whole, and it shall be found that the general amendment has covered this special matter, the necessary steps may easily be taken before final action is had on the bill to make it harmonious in that regard. But I prefer my amendment in its present special form.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to ask the Senator a question. I understand him that the entire length of this road is 170 miles, 25 miles of which are constructed. Along those 25 miles settlements have been made; parties in good faith have gone on the land since the expiration of the time limited for the construction of the road; but as yet there being no act of forfeiture, the settler purchasing or settling in good faith finds his title obscured by the decision of the Supreme Court, so that the railroad will hold that land unless there be the additional legislation that is now proposed.

Mr. WALTHALL. Without this section they lose all the rest of the lands.

Mr. BLAIR. They lose all along the 25 miles of road actually constructed where they have taken their titles since the expiration of the time limited in the granting act for the construction of the road. Now, by the extension until next January it is supposed that the entire road will be completed. The point I wish to call attention to is whether or not along the now uncompleted road there be not many settlements of the same kind which will be affected in the same way as those along the 25 miles of completed road?

Mr. WALTHALL. Undoubtedly, but this amendment protects them also.

Mr. BLAIR. It protects them also. So it is a proposition to protect those who have settled along the unearned portions of the land grant, unearned down to the present time when the act of forfeiture is to be passed.

Mr. WALTHALL. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Public Lands.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 6. The price of the even sections of the public lands not reserved within the limits of the portions of the several grants hereby forfeited, and within the limits of all grants, or portions of grants heretofore forfeited, and of all lands hereby and heretofore forfeited, is hereby fixed at $1.25 per acre.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I am authorized by the committee to offer an additional section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add, as a new section:

That section 5 of an act entitled "An act for a grant of lands to the State of Iowa in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of a railroad in said State," approved May 12, 1864, and section 7 of an act entitled "An act extending the time for the completion of certain land-grant railroads in the States of Minnesota and Iowa, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1865, and also section 5 of an act entitled "An act making an additional grant of lands to the State of Minnesota, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of railroads in said State," approved July 4, 1866, so far as said sections are applicable to lands embraced within the indemnity limits of said grants, be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and so much of the provisions of section 4 of an act approved June 2, 1864, and entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act making a grant of lands to the State of Iowa in alternate sections to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State,' approved May 15, 1856," be, and the same are hereby, repealed so far as they require the Secretary of the Interior to reserve any lands but the odd sections within the primary or 6 miles granted limits of the roads mentioned in said act of June 2, 1864, or the act to which the same is amendatory.

Mr. PLUMB. A word in explanation of the amendment.

The first recited grant contained provisions for the withdrawal of lands within the indemnity limits, and the purport or effect of the amendment is to limit the operation of these indemnity withdrawals.

The last statute, the repeal of which is provided for, was a statute which provided for the selection of 120 sections of land in advance of any construction, and independent of construction, and the effect of the provision is that there shall be no other selection made under that provision of law. It practically cut off the indemnity provisions as to any future operation, and at the same time cut off any further selections under what is called the 120-section grant.

Mr. DOLPH. I think I understand what is intended by the amendment; but in order that there shall be no misunderstanding hereafter of what Congress intended I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas a question. I understand that in the grants mentioned in the amendment there were lands granted to aid in the construction of railroads in place, and also indemnity lands to be selected within the indemnity limits, that it was provided in the grant that the Secretary of the Interior should withdraw the lands from settlement in order that the selections might be made. That being the case, the withdrawals having been made under the authority of the statutes, it is supposed that the Secretary of the Interior has no authority to revoke the order of withdrawal, but it must continue and these lands remain withdrawn from settlement until Congress takes action. The amendment is to repeal the acts so far as relates to withdrawals. I presume it is not intended to affect any rights that have accrued under the withdrawals, but simply to give the Secretary of the Interior authority at this time to revoke the orders of withdrawal and open the lands to settlement.

Mr. PLUMB. It is practically to stop the selection of these indemnity lands exactly where they are now, and authorize the restoration to the public domain of lands which have not been selected within those limits by the action of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator is aware that I preferred a simple authority to the Secretary of the Interior to revoke these orders and open the lands to settlement; but the committee supposed the same object would be accomplished by a repeal of the acts, and I wanted it distinctly understood that the intention of the committee was not to affect any rights that had accrued under the withdrawals.

Mr. PLUMB. It has no effect on any rights accrued. It simply makes it impossible that any further selection shall be made within the indemnity limits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] from the Committee on Public Lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. I offer an amendment to section 4 of the pending bill, to be inserted in lieu of section 4.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Section 4 has been agreed to in Committee of the Whole as an amendment.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. Then let it come in at the end of section 4.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 4 the following:

That in all cases when any of the lands forfeited by the first section of this act, or when any lands relinquished to, or for any cause resumed by, the United States from grants for railroad purposes, have heretofore been disposed of by the proper officers of the United States, by sales, entries, locations, or State selections, under color of the public-land laws, and where the consideration received therefor is still retained by the Government, the right and title of all persons holding or claiming under such disposals shall be, and is hereby, confirmed: Provided, That there were no pre-emption or homestead settlers, bona fide, residing thereon on January 1, 1888.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. I desire to say that the proposed amendment is intended to meet the point suggested by the Senators from Massachusetts. In other words, its purpose is to care for bona fide purchasers and settlers upon the railroad lands which are proposed to be forfeited under the operation of this bill, in the same way in which the Senator from Mississippi proposes to take care of the sales made to cash purchasers and homestead entrymen within the limits of the two roads covered by his amendment.

This question has been so plainly stated that perhaps it is hardly necessary for me to repeat it, but still I ought very briefly, perhaps, to make a statement in regard to it.

These grants were made to different States to aid in building railroads in 1856. The granting act embraced a provision that if the roads were not completed within ten years the land so granted should revert to the General Government. The Land Office took the view that the act meant what it said in plain terms, and that if the roads were not completed in ten years the lands reverted to the General Government; and under that theory the lands were offered for sale, and many of them were purchased and many of them were occupied by homestead entries. That practice continued up to about 1874, when in the case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman the Supreme Court of the United States decided that, although these grants at the expiration of the ten years were forfeitable, still it required affirmative action of Congress to declare them forfeited, and until that was done they were still, within the original conditions, granted to the States for that purpose. The ten years expired in 1866. From 1866 up to 1874 these lands all over the country within the uncompleted grants were in the market subject to sale. Any man could buy them; any man could make a homestead upon them, and a great many of them were sold and occupied in that way.

Now, this amendment simply provides that when the General Government, if this bill passes, resumes the control of these lands, it shall do what its officers attempted in good faith to do, grant a title to bona fide purchasers and settlers. I know of many parties who purchased such lands between sixteen and eighteen years ago who have their patents, who have paid taxes on the lands since that time, and it seems to be clearly right that when the Government shall have resumed possession of these lands it should make good the patents which it granted to parties who purchased in good faith.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, my colleague has assented to three amendments to his amendment, which I will now present to be incorporated in his amendment. Let them be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] to the amendment of his colleague [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE] will be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 5 it is proposed to insert, after the word "sales," the word "or;" so as to read: "by sales or entries."

Mr. DOLPH. When these amendments are adopted I desire to be heard. Let them all be read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. In line 5, after the word "sales," insert "or," and in the same line, after the word "entries," strike out "locations, or State selections" and insert "by cash, warrants, or scrip;" so as to read:

That in all cases when any of the lands forfeited by the first section of this act, or when any lands relinquished to, or for any cause resumed by, the United States from grants for railroad purposes, have heretofore been disposed of by the proper officers of the United States, by sales or entries, by cash, warrants, or scrip, under color of the public-land laws, and where the consideration received therefor is still retained by the Government, the right and title of all persons holding or claiming under such disposals shall be, and is hereby, confirmed: Provided, That there were no pre-emption or homestead settlers, bona fide, residing thereon on January 1, 1888.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the first amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] to the amendment of his colleague [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE].

Mr. HOAR. I ask that these amendments be printed and the matter then go over. It is only ten minutes before 2 o'clock.

Mr. DOLPH. I am inclined to coincide with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE] upon this matter. As the amendments were introduced I did not understand them, and when I came to consider them in the Committee on Public Lands I was disposed myself to insist that the words "State selections" should go out. The immediate cause for this amendment, I understand, is the situation in the State of Michigan in regard to a certain land grant made in 1856 to Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin line.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator is in error.

Mr. DOLPH. No. I think it is the road from Ontonagon to the west line, and also from Marquette to the State line. The railroad company to which this grant was made, or at least the assignee of the original grantee, did not want to construct the road for which the grant had been made, and came to Congress and obtained an act of Congress which diverted the grant from Marquette to the State line to a line running south down the shore of the lake.

It was supposed at the time by the Secretary of the Interior and by the governor of the State that that act also transferred the grant from Ontonagon westerly to the State line, but before the Secretary of the Interior would certify any land to the railroad company for the new line he required a release of the lands which had been granted to the State for these two roads, or this road with a branch, to be made to the General Government on the line from Ontonagon to the State line, which was supposed not to have been included in the act in terms. The governor of the State executed a deed of release to the General Government for this grant. The Department treated that as having been done with sufficient authority, and the lands as belonging to the United States.

Then there had been a grant to the State for the purpose of aiding in the building of the Portage Lake Canal, and the State went ahead and selected as a part of this canal grant a part of the lands which had been released by the governor of the State to the General Government, as is now supposed without sufficient authority to the governor by an act of the Legislature; and they have passed, as I was informed the other day by ex-Judge Dillon, who represents the parties in interest, into the hands of private claimants who bought in good faith.

The selections made by the State of Michigan of lands which had been formerly included in the grant from Ontonagon to the western line of the State and released by the governor of the State to the General Government were again selected by the State under the canal grant and sold to individuals. I am informed that there are 15,000 acres of the land in that situation. Now, it is supposed, as I said before, that the governor's deed was without authority of the Legislature, and therefore if we pass this act we forfeit those lands. They go back to the General Government; the State selection is null and void; the private persons who have acted on the authority of the governor's deed, on the authority of the certificates of the Secretary of the Interior, on the authority of the State in selecting these lands, who bought these lands in good faith, lose their lands. Therefore I think the amendment as offered by the junior Senator from Michigan, which includes State selections which have been made in good faith under the authority of the Department of the Interior at a time when it was supposed these were public lands, should be confirmed as well as these individual claims.

Having said that, it being a matter in which I have no possible interest except to see that the rights of all parties as far as I can are preserved in this act, I submit the matter to the Senate and to the consideration of the Senators from Michigan.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, this amendment as introduced is a very innocent looking thing, but is a Greek horse. It is a piece of adjudication. There are homesteaders who believe that they have rights that will be bartered away if this amendment unamended should pass both houses and be signed by the President, and on that account I think that we have no right to confirm the State selections against which the Senator from Oregon directed his remarks. These cases are now in the courts, as I understand. There was a great scandal connected with the Portage Lake Canal grant, and if confirmation is to be made of these selections I contend that it should be done after a review of all the facts, and that it should not be done by a scoop-net of an amendment like this.

This amendment, pure and unadulterated, without my amendment, would give away the rights of three thousand homesteaders in my State who under the advice of good lawyers, honestly believing that they had rights which would be bartered away by this amendment, have gone onto the lands and have made homes. Some of them have been there for eight years.

I am perfectly willing that the cash entrymen should have their entries confirmed where there is no conflict, but I do not believe that we should legislate so as to adjudicate. This matter is in the hands of the courts now; it seems to me there is the place to leave it. When we go into a general confirmation of this kind I think we should be very careful how we advance. Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes. All these amendments I look upon with great fear; all these amendments I have been watching since this bill came up. One was put in very innocently by the Senator from Colorado. He did not know the animus of it. Pretty soon my friend and colleague from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE] comes in with another. They generally are the same in scope, very blind and rather fair on the face, but when you come to analyze them they are giving away the rights of thousands of good, honest homesteaders as against corporations, and their rights should be adjudicated instead of being legislated away.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator object to adding a provision setting forth exactly what he has said, that nothing in this act shall affect the rights of these parties?

Mr. PALMER. My subsequent amendments, I think, if the Senator from Massachusetts will permit them to be read, will convince him that that is my intention. It is not to legislate away the rights of any man or any company.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Michigan to the fact that there was a demand that all the amendments proposed by him should be read for information. Only part has been read.

Mr. PALMER. I should like to have them read, but we were interrupted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will order that they be read, so that they may appear in the RECORD.

Mr. PALMER. That is satisfactory to me.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend by striking out all after the word "Provided," in line 10 of the amendment of Mr. STOCKBRIDGE, as follows:

That there were no pre-emption or homestead settlers, bona fide, residing thereon on January 1, 1888.

And inserting in lieu thereof:

Nothing herein contained shall be construed to confirm any sales or entries of lands upon which there were bona fide pre-emption or homestead claims on the 1st day of January, 1888, arising or asserted under color of the laws of the United States.

It is proposed to amend further by adding:

And no sales or entries shall be hereby confirmed to the prejudice of any pre-emption or homestead claims now valid under existing decisions of the Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. These amendments have been read for information. The question will be on the adoption of the first amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] to the amendment of his colleague [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE].

Mr. CALL. I have an amendment to the bill, to be printed, as it goes over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Inasmuch as the hour of 2 o'clock has about arrived, and this measure will go over until to-morrow, I move that the bill, with the amendments that have been adopted in Committee of the Whole and those that have been suggested, shall be printed, in order that we may have them all before us to-morrow.

Mr. DOLPH. Let the amendment just presented by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] be read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as new sections the following:

SEC. 8. All actual settlers on any of the public lands affected by the grants hereinbefore referred to who made actual settlement on any of said lands, or who made application for the same after the time limited in the granting act for the construction of the railroad, or who made actual settlement before the location of any line of railroad after the expiration of the time of completion with the authority of the Legislature of the State, shall have their title confirmed, and a patent shall be issued to them on compliance with the homestead law; and all lands affected by any grant where the granting act required a disposal by the Legislature of the State, and there has been no legislative disposal by the State Legislature in the time required by the granting act, are hereby declared subject to homestead entry and settlement.

SEC. 9. The lands embraced in the act entitled "An act granting lands to the States of Florida and Alabama to aid in the construction of certain lines of railway," approved 17th of May, 1856, be, and the same are hereby, excepted from the operations of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa moves that the pending bill, with the amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole and all proposed amendments, be printed for the use of the Senate. It is so ordered, unless there be objection.

Mr. PALMER. I wish to offer an amendment, so that it may be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be received and ordered to be printed.

The amendment is as follows:

Amend section 1 by adding thereto:

And provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to except from forfeiture that portion of the grant made by "An act making a grant of alternate sections of the public lands to the State of Michigan, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1856, or acts amendatory thereof, conferred by the State of Michigan on the Marquette and Ontonagon Railroad Company, lying west of L'Anse in said State.

Mr. MITCHELL. I want to offer an amendment at the proper time, and wish to have it read now and printed so as to go in the RECORD.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to have all the amendments, those adopted, and those proposed, and those that may be offered, printed.

Mr. MITCHELL. Let mine go in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Oregon will be inserted in the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

Provided, That the rights of way and riparian rights heretofore conveyed to the city of Portland, in the State of Oregon, by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and the Central Trust Company of New York, by deed of conveyance dated August 8, 1886, and which are described as follows: A strip of land 50 feet in width, being 25 feet on each side of the center line of a water-pipe line, as the same is staked out and located, or as it shall be hereafter finally located according to the provisions of an act of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, approved November 25, 1885, providing for the means to supply the city of Portland with an abundance of good, pure, and wholesome water over and across the following-described tracts of land: Sections 19 and 31 in township 1 south, of range 6 east; sections 25, 31, 33, and 35, in township 1 south, of range 5 east; sections 3 and 5, in township 2 south, of range 5 east; section 1, in township 2 south, of range 4 east; sections 23, 25, and 35, in township 1 south, of range 4 east of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon, are hereby granted and confirmed unto the said city of Portland, in the State of Oregon, its successors and assigns forever, with the right to enter on the hereinbefore-described strip of land, over and across the above-described sections for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and repairing a water-pipe line as aforesaid. And there is also hereby granted to the said city of Portland, its successors and assigns forever, all riparian rights whatever which rightfully and properly attach to such of the above-described lands as lie contiguous and adjacent to the stream in the above-named sections known as Bull Run.

ADMISSION OF DAKOTA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 185) to provide for the admission of the State of Dakota into the Union, and for the organization of the Territory of Lincoln, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. BUTLER to the amendment reported by the Committee on Territories as amended.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, it is not my intention to consume any considerable time in the discussion of this bill. We have heard repeated declarations on the opposite side of the Chamber that there was no party feeling there in regard to this matter. I have never yet myself arrived at that esthetic and sublimated view of politics when I could forget that I was a Democrat. I mean to say that I could never entirely divest myself of the idea that I best preserved the interests of the country by proving myself loyal to the party of which I am a member. I would not for a single instant acknowledge that any partisan feeling could induce me to violate the rights of the humblest citizen or my settled convictions as to the Constitution and general policy of the country; but when I hear Senators declare that they have no sort of partisan feeling in this matter, that they look upon it from the solar-walk standpoint, I must be permitted without discourtesy to doubt the correctness of that statement.

There has never yet been admitted a State in this Union without more or less partisan or sectional feeling; and until we arrive at the millennium and the world is flooded with the sunlight of a new era, all men will more or less be actuated by partisan considerations on all such questions.

Gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber speak as if this were a question local to Dakota. Why, Mr. President, two Senators in this Chamber from the State of Dakota would legislate for my people and yours, Representatives in the other branch of Congress would enact laws which affect the interests of your people and mine. Is it a local question that more Senators, more Representatives, more electoral votes shall be called into existence, or is it true that Dakota is a State outside of the Union coming into existence in proprio vigore from its own people alone? We should be fair with each other in the discussion of any question like the present, and where the status of political parties is to be changed I ask no advantage for the party to which I belong, and I do not intend that any unfair advantage shall be taken of it under any species of declamation, however sublimated may be the eloquence we may hear. I say that it is unfair for the Republican party to undertake the division of this Territory.

To judge from the speeches we have heard here it is only a question for the Territory of South Dakota. When and how did it become so? What act of Congress called it into existence? When before in the history of this country was it ever known that the people of a Territory had a right to subdivide their own Territory, their own area? Will Senators point me to one single instance of the twenty-five new States admitted into this Union since 1789 where any people of a Territory but those of Dakota undertook to divide their own area and then demand admission as a State?

Is it claimed now seriously by any lawyer or by any member of this body, whether a lawyer or not, that this new claim that we have heard from Dakota alone, that a State can be formed without the consent of Congress, is a substantial claim, is not revolutionary? Who made South Dakota? What connection did Congress have with any such Territory?

Mr. President, whilst the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] occupied the floor the other day on this question, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] interjected the remark that South Dakota had everything except barbaric politics; that Dakota, in other words, had everything except Democratic politics. What is barbarism? It is a status outside of the Constitution and outside of the law. It is savagery; it is anarchy; and when the Senator from Vermont used the word "barbaric" he used what he meant to be another phrase for the use of the word "Democratic."

Now, Mr. President, let me read what the Senator from Vermont said in regard to "barbaric politics" on the admission of Nebraska some years ago. In defining the power of the people of a Territory he said:

There is no inherent right in the people of any Territory to be constituted into a State. Congress may never organize a Territory at all; it may never dispose of its public lands there; when organized, it may keep it in the perpetual condition of a Territory if it pleases, because all the considerations which govern such questions are considerations which merely appeal to the ordinary legislative discretion of the law-making power, and therefore every circumstance and consideration which enters into the fitness of the thing itself which is proposed to be done is a matter that we have no right to set aside.—Congressional Globe, 1866-'67, Part I, page 215.

And the Senator from Vermont adheres, I take it, to that opinion today, as does every other member of this body who has any regard for the Constitution and laws of his country.

What is barbarism? Would it not be the converse of the proposition laid down by the Senator from Vermont? Would it not be a condition of barbarism when the people of a Territory denied the power on the part of Congress and assumed it to themselves? Will any Senator on that side of the Chamber rise in his place now and say that he believes a State can exist on American soil without the consent of Congress? Will any Senator pretend to say that a State can exist within the area of the public domain proprio vigore by any sort of inherent sovereignty in the people, without the consent of Congress? Is such a thing known in the Constitution? Was such a thing ever claimed until the people of Dakota deliberately asserted it in the face of the Congress and the people of the United States?

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] injected into this debate that ensanguined garment called the bloody shirt. He flaunted it around this Chamber. He spoke of secession, and said that there was no difference between trying to get out of the Union and trying to break into it. But what does he say of a State which is neither in nor out, and claims to exist as a State called the State of South Dakota in spite of the Constitution, in spite of the law, in defiance of Congress? Is not that a state of "barbaric politics?" Is not that a status which would justify the epithet applied by the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. President, let us see what was the initiatory step in this movement. In 1885 the following document was filed in the Senate of the United States, and I ask the attention of the Senator from Vermont to it as a supplementary commentary on the word "barbaric:"

OFFICE OF STATE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
Yankton, Dak., December 7, 1885.

SIR: We, the State executive committee of the State of Dakota, on this behalf appointed by a constitutional convention of that part of the Territory of Dakota south of the forty-sixth parallel of latitude, have the honor to herewith transmit to you a certified copy of the constitution of the State of Dakota and of a memorial from the constitutional convention to the President and Congress of the United States.

We have also forwarded through the hands of Hon. Benjamin Harrison, United States Senator, an engrossed and certified copy of the constitution for presentation to the Senate through the President thereof.

I am instructed, on behalf of the constitutional convention of Dakota, to request you to have the said memorial and constitution duly presented to the Senate of the United States for their consideration, and that the same be referred to the proper committee and acted upon as the application of said convention, for and on behalf of the people of said State, for the admission of the State into the Union.

Yours, respectfully,

HUGH J. CAMPBELL,
President State Executive Committee.
JOSEPH R. HANSON,
E. P. BEEBE,
A. J. SIMMONS,
JOHN CAIN,
JAMES A. WARD,
STEPHEN G. UPDYKE,
Committee.

To the honorable PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE of the Congress of the United States, Washington, D. C.

It is not an application from a Territory, no statement that the people of South Dakota came here asking that Congress should make them a State, but the State of Dakota, born and full-grown, without the consent of Congress and without the ceremony of baptism presents itself for admission into the Union.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator if it is at all inconvenient to him.

Mr. VEST. It is not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask him whether he really thinks that those documents he has read imply that the people of Dakota undertook to set themselves up as a State without the consent of Congress? When they say they present the constitution of the State of Dakota were they not bound to use the very technical and philosophic term which must be applied to the constitution that any people are to adopt, and that is the constitution of a State? They do not say they are a State. They only say that they present this constitution, and by its name and by its essence, if adopted, it must be the constitution of a State.

Mr. VEST. I may not be as expert in the use and understanding of my mother tongue as the Senator from Vermont. I may not be skilled in technicalities to the extent that he is well known to be, but if the English language means anything it means what I have said. I read it again, and leave it to the plain understanding of mankind:

We, the State executive committee of the State of Dakota.

Throughout this whole instrument there is this claim. I will undertake to show besides by testimony coming from this same Huron convention that they claim to be a State without any action on the part of the representatives of the people in Congress assembled.

I call attention in this connection to another memorial coming from another Territory adjoining Dakota, that of Montana.

To the honorable the President of the United States and the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

Your memorialists, the people of Montana Territory, through their representatives in Congress assembled, respectfully represent:

"The people of Montana Territory." There is no claim there that it was a State. There is no claim there that this sovereignty of statehood had sprung full-armed from the brains of a few politicians as Minerva from the brain of Jove. Look at the difference in the claim each of these two Territories made. I will put that question beyond any doubt. The Senator from Vermont asks me if I seriously entertain any such opinion. I hold in my hand an address from this "State executive committee," and here is what they say:

They—

can choose their boundaries, as they can fix all their institutions, absolutely as they please, and according to their sovereign will and pleasure, independent of Congress and subject only to the limitation that their government shall be republican in form.

That was their construction upon that application as to what they meant and what they mean to-day, and have repeated over and over again in every shape of declaration and enforced by every sort of specious argument.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was under the impression that we were not asked to admit the executive committee of any body of men in Dakota, but to set up that part of the Territory as a State; and I submit to my friend whether the excessive zeal (as we will assume it is, at this moment), or the want of wisdom, or whatever it may be called, of the men who signed themselves as an executive committee (that I know nothing about), is really to affect the broad question of the right of several hundred thousand people of supposed industrial habits and good conduct to come into this Union and to govern themselves in their local affairs as Missouri and Vermont do, and to relieve the United States from the expense of hundreds of thousands of dollars a year that we must expend in respect of Territories.

I appeal to my friend from Missouri whether really the Senate ought to be called upon to be influenced by such statements, assuming all that he says now about this executive committee "for the fun of it," as the phrase is. Is the Senate of the United States really going to be governed by any excess that the persons who sign these papers have set up for themselves? Suppose they had called themselves kings, or whatever it might be?

Mr. VEST. I yielded with all due deference to the Senator from Vermont to what I supposed was a question which would convey to me some information or elicit information from me to him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is what I want—the last.

Mr. VEST. His argument, as a matter of course, under the rules of the Senate, he could make when I conclude my remarks. He denied the proposition which I asserted, and which I assert now again, that these people, without appealing to Congress or recognizing the power of Congress at all, undertook to create a State government for themselves. I say here to-day in my place in the Senate that if any Southern community had dared to do this thing there would have been a cry "To arms!" upon that side of the Chamber never equaled since the attack on Fort Sumter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is entirely mistaken.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Vermont would have been here with another piece of legislation equivalent to that of 1876, when he created that celebrated board which put Hayes into the Presidential chair. He would have found some way to have reached these people. If any Southern community had dared such a thing, we would have heard immediately that another rebellion had commenced, and "To arms!" "To arms!" would have been the cry all through the loyal North. But the people of Dakota can do it. As the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] said the other day, they were a little imprudent—slightly imprudent, he said—in creating a State government without consulting Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from Missouri permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I only now interrupt my friend with his permission, for I do not wish to disturb him at all; I hope he will understand. In the allusion he has made to 1876, I wish to say with emphasis that I believe, and I think nine-tenths of the people of the United States who know anything about it believe, that President Hayes was lawfully and fairly and justly elected by the votes of the States according to the Constitution of our country, and that the only evil which existed in respect of that matter was the attempt of a body of men, whose headquarters was in the city of New York, to buy the electors of the State of South Carolina; and that body of men was not of the Republican party.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have never understood, and the people of this country have never been able to understand, why Packard was not elected governor with a larger number of votes than Hayes received for President. But Packard was thrown out and sent as consul to Liverpool, and Hayes was sworn in as President of the United States. I do not choose now to place my assertion upon Democratic authority or my own ipse dixit. I have heard the ablest Republican in this country, who now lies stricken in the city of New York, the foremost in every combat for the Republican party and its supremacy—I have heard Roscoe Conkling say upon this floor that it was by fraud that Hayes came to be President of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My kind and sincere friendship for Mr. Conkling in his present unhappy condition (which I am glad to hope is improving) leads me to say now, if my friend allows me to say it, that Mr. Conkling was one of the foremost men in the committees which conferred upon preserving the peace of the United States in settling the dispute by what is called the electoral commission bill; and my belief is that Mr. Conkling believed, as I did, and do now, that Mr. Hayes was lawfully elected. He believed, I think, as I did then, and do now, that the only fraud about the business was the fraud of persons in the party—I do not impute it to any person here, but persons in the party to which my friend belongs, and to which my friend would never have been himself made a personal party but would have objected to it strenuously; and that what Mr. Conkling may have been said to have said, to use a phrase of that kind (if he ever said it, which I do not believe), arose from certain unhappy difficulties and differences which occurred later on in regard to matters after Mr. Hayes had come in.

It is due to President Hayes, it is due to the Democrats and to the Republicans, and to Mr. Conkling himself, to say that thing; and I think my friend from Missouri is mistaken (and I will not say anything further about it) in bringing Mr. Conkling's name in here at this time in that connection, because, I repeat, Mr. Conkling was one of the ablest—and of course we would all know that—and the foremost of those who engaged with great Democrats (almost as great perhaps as there are here now—Senator Thurman for one, and others who need not be named) in trying to preserve the peace of the United States by having some lawful way of deciding a disputed question.

Mr. VEST. My allusion to Senator Conkling was not at all premeditated, and it was elicited by the remarks of the Senator from Vermont. Mr. Conkling made the statement which I have repeated here, and he made it not once but over and over again. Ex-Justice Strong, of the Supreme Court of the United States, made it in different language and to the same effect. The conviction is settled to-day with the people of the United States irrespective of party, in my judgment, that Rutherford B. Hayes was not fairly elected President of the United States. The Senator from Vermont says that he has no doubt in regard to his election. As a matter of course no one expects that distinguished Senator to disavow his own offspring and to bastardize the result of his own labors upon that commission; but when he states that the people of this country, and I will put it in the strongest way, a large majority of them, have any doubt in regard to the fact that I have mentioned, I take issue with him and put my opinion and judgment against his.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask my friend from Missouri, who is a great lawyer and a patriot, whether he thinks that the principle upon which the Electoral Commission proceeded was sound or unsound? It proceeded, I may remind him, which I need not do, upon the ground that the State authorities, according to the course of the Constitution, having passed upon a question of who were elected their electors, that commission was bound by it, and it was not within the competence of Congress to go into an inquiry as to the conduct of those State authorities short, I may say, of a revolutionary proceeding, which was not that case.

Mr. VEST. Oh, Mr. President, we have heard all this again and again, in regard to the action of that commission and its necessity to avert civil war. In my judgment there was no such necessity. In my judgment the Democrats who consented to it made a great mistake; and if they had only stood by their legal and constitutional rights, with the great public opinion of the country behind them, Mr. Tilden would have been inaugurated by right indisputable into the executive chair of this country.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator again pardon me?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator, I think, has not answered the question I put to him, which is of great importance in the future, to the next hundred or three hundred years; and that is whether the principle upon which the Electoral Commission proceeded, of the right of the States under the Constitution to decide who were their own electors, each State for itself, was not a sound principle?

Mr. VEST. I will answer the Senator by simply stating that I neither indorse the principle nor the practice of that commission.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That comes to the point. Then it is for Congress.

Mr. VEST. I was opposed to the whole movement, and if I had been in Congress I would have opposed it with my vote and influence to the last extremity under the Constitution. It was a bad precedent, it was bad practice; and it can result in nothing else in the future but the adoption of doubtful expedients for partisan purposes.

Now, I hope the Senator from Vermont will do himself the justice to admit that if barbaric politics has existed anywhere in this country it has been in Dakota—politics outside of the law, outside of the Constitution, in defiance of the authority of Congress; and if there be any doubt to-day in regard to the purposes of the men who have made this claim here, the English language is not susceptible of any meaning.

"Barbaric politics," Mr. President! We have heard a great deal here in regard to the vast soil and territory of the United States. How was that soil acquired? Whose statesmanship, whose genius, whose valor won to this country the immense territory of which we are now debating? Who was the founder of this party of barbaric politics? What party took this country when it was thirteen weak and trembling colonies and built up upon that foundation the most immense and magnificent empire in the world? Who acquired this vast territory stretching from the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean and from the mouth of that great river to the frozen zone? It was the genius and statesmanship of Thomas Jefferson, the founder of this party of barbaric politics.

Whose hand wrote the ordinance of 1787 of which we have heard so much in this debate? It was that of Thomas Jefferson, the founder of this party of barbaric politics, twice President of the United States, leaving his scepter by lineal political descent to his two followers, Madison and Monroe. Who acquired this Louisiana purchase from the great Napoleon in 1803, and for the pitiful sum of $15,000,000 extended our empire to almost an immeasurable extent? Thomas Jefferson, the founder of this party of barbaric politics.

Barbarism in connection with his name! Mr. President, of all the public men in this country Jefferson was the most accomplished, and, in my judgment, the greatest. Devoted to science, art, music, and painting, the man who wrote the Notes upon Virginia, which stand next only to the writings of Addison for purity and vigor of the English tongue, the man who with a prescience almost divine saw the necessities of this Government and the greatness that was to come after him. Yet the Senator from Vermont says the party that he founded, the principles he invoked and defended represent the barbaric politics of the present era.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would the Senator mind an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not say that. I think I believe in almost everything that Mr. Jefferson believed in and said; but the difference between the principles of Mr. Jefferson as stated and those I suggested to a friend of mine the other day as "barbaric politics" I think is very wide indeed. The Notes of Mr. Jefferson on Virginia may bear a pretty striking contrast (perhaps it is not pertinent to this case) with the later notes of Virginia, which are in some trouble at the present time.

Mr. VEST. I know nobody who is more capable of managing the question of the latter-day notes of Virginia than the Senator from Vermont. If there is any necessity of invoking any professional assistance he is always ready in emergencies of that kind. The Senator interjected in the speech of the present occupant of the chair the statement that Dakota had everything but barbaric politics; in other words, that Dakota was not Democratic, and that this was the crime committed now in the eyes of the Democratic party in the Senate.

Mr. President, I have said something in regard to the ordinance of 1787. I do not understand that any Senator who has spoken upon the other side of the Chamber has taken the position that Dakota has any legal right to admission into the Union. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] (and he could not fairly do otherwise) admitted that the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in 10 Howard had done away with the ordinance of 1787 as it applies to this question, and that the Constitution of the United States was to be the guide for Congressional action now; but we hear the extraordinary statement that whilst no legal right exists there is, to use the expression adopted by the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Connecticut, a moral right. In other words their contention, as I understood it (and I will not misstate it), is that under the ordinance of 1787 and the cession of Louisiana in 1803 any portion of this country organized as a Territory and having 60,000 inhabitants has a moral right to come into the Union of States; that whilst the Constitution of the United States gives to Congress the greatest latitude of discretion in regard to the admission of new States, still this moral, nebulous right under the ordinance of 1787 and the cession of 1803 exists in favor of these Territories having 60,000 inhabitants. If I misstate that position I beg my friends to correct me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish to admit that proposition as stated by the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. VEST. Of course.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If he is appealing to me, I did not admit the proposition which he has stated.

Mr. VEST. I did not say the Senator had said it. I referred to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] went further and, as I understood him, declared that the ordinance of 1787 and the act of cession of Louisiana of 1803 gave the absolute legal right to a State to be admitted into the Union with 60,000 people.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. VEST. Certainly. I do not wish to misstate the Senator's position.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course.

Mr. DAVIS. I based my position mainly upon the ground that the ordinance of 1787 had been extended over this Territory time after time by act of Congress after the adoption of the Constitution.

Mr. VEST. Exactly; but how extended? The ordinance of 1787 provided that the Territory called then the Northwestern Territory, whenever it should be subdivided into States, and those States had 60,000 inhabitants and a republican form of government, should be admitted into the Union. Then the Senator from Minnesota claims that by subsequent legislation in 1836 the provision was made to extend to the Territory of Louisiana, of which Dakota is a part, and that it has an absolute legal right to be admitted into the Union.

Mr. DAVIS. Earlier than that; the act of 1804.

Mr. VEST. The act of 1804 and subsequent acts. The Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Wisconsin do not go as far as the Senator from Minnesota. They say there is not a legal right, but there is a moral right growing out of the terms used in the ordinance of 1787 and in the act of cession of 1803.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. What I mean to say is not that the people of any Territory can set up a State and come to Congress and demand to be admitted as a matter of right against the will of Congress. I have never claimed that.

Mr. VEST. I understand that.

Mr. PLATT. I did not know that anybody did claim that; but I do claim that when the people of a whole Territory or a part of a Territory, acting within the historical precedents of this Government, form a constitution and come to Congress asking to be admitted under that constitution, having all the qualifications which have ever been required of any people, it becomes the duty of Congress to admit them; that to keep them out is a grievous wrong; and that inasmuch as it is a wrong to keep them out, it is their right to be admitted. In that sense I do claim it.

Mr. VEST. Then the commission of the wrong is the violation or the denial of the right. That follows logically and mathematically.

Now, what sort of right has Dakota here? I say that the Senator from Vermont announced the proper logical and constitutional doctrine, and that is that Congress alone can determine in its discretion when a Territory shall be organized as a State and admitted into the Union; that Congress alone, from whose judgment there can be under our form of government no appeal, can absolutely determine the question whether the people of a Territory shall organize as a State and come into the Union; and I say that there is no power in the autonomy of our Government outside of Congress that can create a sovereign State. I declare here to-day that the doctrine asserted in Dakota that the people can get together and make a State of themselves and exist outside of the Union upon American soil is treason to the Constitution and revolutionary against every principle of our Government.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. VEST. Oh, certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If it disturbs my friend in the least I will not interrupt him.

Mr. VEST. Not at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Because we are all striving to get at the right in this matter, I suppose.

Mr. VEST. I hope so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator whether the right of petition, of application to the supreme power which admits States must not be considered as what is ordinarily called sacred; and, secondly, if 300,000 or 400,000 people, whatever the number may be, whose habits and course of conduct in their own little autonomy under the Territorial state have been good and regular in the administration of justice, the preservation of private rights, and all that, appeal to Congress to be admitted as a State, what is the ground of objection to it unless it be put upon the idea the Senator has stated, that some of their committees have used language in papers which seem to imply, read on their face—I am putting it now in the strongest way for my friend—that they were setting up a State for themselves, which in fact I feel bound to say they never attempted to do, or, as some other people have done, like Michigan, for instance, whether after all the question is not, "You have a community with a sufficient territory for a great population, great industry and development, of good morals, of well ordered local regulation," and if that sort of people ought not to come in, being now in a Territory, as one of the States of the Union? That is what I should like to get some answer to, for I can not understand how the application can be denied.

Mr. VEST. What is that but the exercise of the discretion of Congress?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is nothing else, I admit; but the question is what discretion we ought to exercise.

Mr. VEST. The Senator talks about the right of petition. Who has denied the right of petition? How does that come into this debate? Here is a statement filed in the Senate from the "State of Dakota." What State? When was it ever created? Did Congress create it? What other power can create it but Congress?

In 1861 we passed an act for the organization of the Territory of Dakota—not South Dakota, but the Territory of Dakota—and in a section of that act we provided that Congress could divide that Territory whenever Congress saw proper to do it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is just this time.

Mr. VEST. Did they wait until Congress did it? They defied Congress. They met there under the leadership of certain so-called constitutional lawyers, and declared that under the ordinance of 1787 and the cession of 1803 they had a right to create a State themselves, and they came here and insulted Congress by saying that "We, the State of Dakota, apply for admission into the Union. Take our petition and refer it to a committee, but whether you refer it or not, we are a State. Whether you take any action or not, we exist. The sovereignty of the State of Dakota is a thing in esse which no Congressional action is necessary to vitalize or continue." Yet the Senator from Vermont says he can not see anything wrong in that. No, Mr. President, if it was Mississippi or South Carolina it would take neither microscope nor telescope for the Republicans in this Chamber to see revolution and rebellion in such proceedings.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is entirely mistaken.

Mr. VEST. I think not, Mr. President, and I think I can show by the history of this case that party feeling has entered into it on the other side of this Chamber from the beginning.

I will proceed with my argument in regard to the ordinance of 1787, in order that there can be no misunderstanding about the position assumed on the other side of this Chamber in regard to the ordinance of 1787 and the cession of 1803. The Senator from Connecticut, to use his own language, says that under the ordinance of 1787 and the cession of 1803, if a Territory has 60,000 people and a republican form of government, it is a great wrong on the part of Congress to refuse it admission into the Union. I put it in his own modified form.

Mr. PLATT. And with the other qualifications?

Mr. VEST. And with the other qualifications.

Mr. PLATT. I assent to that.

Mr. VEST. And that the people are law-abiding, honest, etc., with a republican form of government, as a matter of course, to quote the Constitution itself.

Here is a document which goes very far to evidence the real feeling of our Republican friends. Here is an amendment offered to the bill to admit Washington Territory into the Union two years ago, offered by my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], not now in his seat. My friend from Indiana was the only Democrat who for reasons entirely laudable, and I have no criticism to make upon them, voted with the Republican party for the admission of Dakota.

Mr. PLATT. Washington.

Mr. VEST. And Dakota, too. He voted for the admission of South Dakota, and then offered it as an amendment to the Washington Territory bill. The amendment I have here provides for the admission of Montana as a State into the Union. General Harrison, the then chairman of the Committee on Territories, admitted that Montana had 115,000 inhabitants. There was no dispute in regard to population. Its constitution was brought here republican in form. The bill upon its face so recites. No issue was made in this Chamber in regard to it. They had repudiated no debt; they had churches, schools, and civilization; but, unfortunately, they were supposed to have barbaric politics.

This was a part of the Louisiana purchase. If the ordinance of 1787 is conclusive in this matter, or if it even creates a moral right to admission when the Territory has 60,000 people, why did every Republican in this Chamber vote against the admission of Montana? It had 55,000 more people than the ordinance of 1787 demanded. It had, according to the claim of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], a population of 135,000, but it was admitted by General Harrison to have 115,000. Yet there was not one single Republican who favored it, including the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Connecticut. The Senator from Minnesota was not then a member of this body. There was an unbroken vote on the part of the Republicans here, notwithstanding the ordinance of 1787 and the cession of 1803, against the admission of Montana into the Union. No, Mr. President, barbaric politics was in the way. They did not want the vote of Montana because it might be Democratic; but Dakota would be certain to give three electoral votes to the next candidate of the Republican party for the Presidency, and therefore the ordinance of 1787 and the cession of 1803 are invoked.

When this question first came here the great and salient argument made in regard to this matter was that the Territory should be divided because there was a hiatus in area between Northern and Southern Dakota; that the middle portion of the Territory had not been settled up; that the railroads ran in the northern and southern extremities, leaving a sort of desert between the two cultivated and thickly-populated sections of that Territory. All that has disappeared. There are eighty-seven organized counties in Dakota to-day. Railroads are projected and being built, running from north to south. The argument that was used then with such eloquence and vehemence in favor of the division of the Territory has disappeared before the march of civilization and the progress of population, and now we hear that South Dakota should be admitted as a State simply and solely because the people demand it, because the people are in favor of it.

Mr. President, this movement for division came from the politicians and not from the people. I undertake to say there never was anything more susceptible of demonstration than that statement. What are the facts in regard to it? If it be true that this is a popular movement, it ought to be evidenced by some sort of expression on the part of the people at the polls and in an authoritative and regular shape. Now, what are the facts?

The constitution (of 1885) was framed and submitted to a vote of the people of that part of the Territory—on the first Monday in November, 1885, the vote resulting as follows: For the constitution, 25,226; against, 6,565; showing a total vote of 31,791. There was a separate vote on the constitutional provision prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the State of Dakota, which resulted as follows: For the prohibitory amendment, 15,570; against, 15,337; being a majority of 233 in favor thereof.

Another constitutional provision was voted upon separately, namely, the provision providing for minority representation in the election of members of the house of representatives of the State Legislature. This provision received 11,273 votes; and there were 16,765 against it.

At the last general election in Dakota, November, 1884, Mr. Gifford, Republican candidate for Delegate in Congress, received in the whole Territory 71,579 votes; and Mr. Wilson, the Democratic candidate, received 15,124 votes; and 61 votes were cast for other candidates, making a total vote in the Territory at that time of 86,764.

As the total population in 1885 was 415,664, the number of votes in 1884 to each inhabitant would be 4.77 inhabitants to each voter. As there were 263,465 inhabitants in that part of Dakota which is organized by the Senate bill into the State of Dakota, upon the same ratio there would be 57,330 voters in the proposed State of Dakota; but of these, however, only 31,791 electors voted on the question of adopting the constitution, and of these but 25,226 voted in favor of the constitution, showing that 32,104 electors in the proposed State of Dakota either voted against the constitution or did not vote at all.

If this popular feeling existed there was certainly no intimidation; there were certainly no Southern shotguns or bowie knives or revolvers, no ku klux, no night-raiders. Why is it that when this popular demand existed, when old and young, when the children in the night were crying for statehood, 32,000 voters in that Territory remained away from the polls and refused to vote upon this constitution?

It must be remembered, however, that the census of 1885 was taken one year after the vote on election of Delegate in Congress in 1884, and that there had been a large increase in population during that year. It is safe to estimate that there were four inhabitants to each voter, according to the census of 1885. This would show a voting population in the proposed State of Dakota of 65,866 on November 3, 1885, when the constitution was submitted to a popular vote. The constitution having received only 25,226 votes, there were at least 38,642 electors who either voted against the proposed constitution or absented themselves from the polls.

In order to bring out this vote there were a full set of State officials to be elected, two Representatives in Congress, judges of the courts, a Legislature, both house and senate, and besides this five towns competed for the location of the capital of the proposed new State. In addition to this, the question of local option was also submitted, and that of minority representation; but notwithstanding all this, nearly 40,000 voters in 1885 refused to vote at that election, or neglected to do so.

The only other election was that held in 1887.

In November, 1887, there was submitted to the people of the Territory, in pursuance of an act of the Legislature approved March, 1887, the question of division of the Territory. In that election there were cast upon the proposition of division 37,784 votes for division and 32,913 votes against division, making a majority in the whole Territory of 4,781 in favor of division.

There must have been, then, at that election over 60,000 voters who refused or neglected to go to the polls and deposit their suffrage. According to that election there was a majority of 30,000 in the Territory against its division. In the whole of Northern Dakota there were but two counties that voted for it. Northern Dakota voted by over 10,000 against division; Southern Dakota voted 15,000 and some hundred in favor of it; and yet we are to ignore the wishes of the people of Northern Dakota, we are to trample under foot their expressed will at the polls, and we are to consult the supposed necessities of politicians in Southern Dakota who want two seats in the Senate, places upon the bench, seats in the House of Representatives and in a State Legislature, to say nothing of the subordinate and minor positions.

Mr. President, a great deal has been said here and dragged into this debate about the votes in the Southern States. It is not pertinent to this discussion, but as a Democrat I deny the truth of those statements. I say there is no evidence that the vote in the Southern States has been suppressed by violence and fraud as has been repeatedly charged upon the hustings and in both Houses of Congress.

I know it is a part of the political staple of the Republican party to make the statement that one vote in the South counts as much as two votes in the North in electing a President. My distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] made that charge. Mr. Blaine, the Republican candidate for the Presidency, commenced his canvass by a gushing effusion in regard to the patriotism and conservative tendencies of the Southern people, and after he had been defeated denounced in a violent speech in his own State the people of the South, and said that by shotguns and revolvers and fraud they had elected Grover Cleveland to be President of the United States. This statement has been made so often in the press and by orators of the Republican party that uninformed persons throughout the country have come to believe it.

It is true that at local elections, North and South, men absent themselves from the polls. It is true that in every State in this Union where there are not personal issues, where there is not a close election, there is an absence of suffrage to be found in the returns; but in a Presidential election the returns show that within a margin of a very little per cent. the vote in the South is equal to the vote in the North. I do not content myself with this statement, but I will prove it from the figures themselves. I hold in my hand a statement taken from the census of 1880 and the official returns of votes in the respective States of the Union in 1884, when Mr. Cleveland was elected President, and we will see from an examination whether the statement is true that one vote in the South counts as much as two votes in the North in the election of a President of the United States. I have taken the trouble to put these States together, one voting the Republican ticket and the other the Democratic ticket.

Rhode Island in 1880, by the last census, had 76,898 voters. That State cast, in 1884, 32,771 votes, the per cent. being 42.6.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What do you mean by voters?

Mr. VEST. I mean persons who were qualified to vote, and returned by the census as such.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You mean people over twenty-one years of age?

Mr. VEST. I mean the people who were voters. I can not use any other word.

Mr. COCKRELL. Under the laws of that State.

Mr. VEST. Under the laws of that State qualified to vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; but under the laws of that State one must have paid a tax, I think; I am not sure about it.

Mr. VEST. One must own, as I understand it, $134 or $144 worth of real estate. We have heard a great deal about fraudulent elections. I know nothing about the recent election in Rhode Island, but I received a Republican paper, I believe, called the Providence (R. I.) Journal.

Mr. PLATT. Hardly a Republican paper.

Mr. VEST. Well, what is it? It is not Democratic.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the question. [Laughter.]

Mr. VEST. I leave my friends on the other side of the Chamber to determine its politics. Rhode Island is a Republican State. That paper never has supported a Democrat for office within my knowledge. If it is not Republican, it is nothing. The Democratic party is not responsible for it. It is a reputable journal, and it says that votes were recently sold to the highest bidder in the streets of that city. Yet, we hear a great deal about fraud and corruption in the South and other parts of the Union.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would the Senator mind—I do not see a Rhode Island Senator here now—if I should interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have been informed from what I consider to be the best authority that for every $1 that any misguided and wicked Republican, I will say, offered or paid for a vote at that election there were $10 offered and paid by some misguided, I will say, and wicked Democrat; and I sincerely believe that that is true.

Mr. VEST. If there is no other subject of congratulation, it is that a little money is found in the hands of the Democrats. In other times the Republicans have had it all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There has been a good deal more for the last three years.

Mr. VEST. All the money power of this country, the national banks, the moneyed industries—everything that has money in it—has been controlled and used by the Republican party.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator mean that all the industrial establishments of the United States are in the hands of the Republicans? Do not the Democrats work, and have they not some capital?

Mr. VEST. It is useless for us to bandy words about it. The Senator's party, according to his idea and that of leading Republicans, is the party of wealth, and education, and refinement, and civilization, and Christianity, and universal education. All the virtues are found there; but barbaric politics is found alone with the Democratic party.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that is true. [Laughter.]

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir; no doubt. I have no question that the Senator from Vermont believes that identical thing, that if a Democrat is ever saved under the plan of redemption it is a great mistake. There is no doubt about it. The table I have had prepared is as follows:

States.	Total voting population.	Vote cast in 1884.	Per cent.
Rhode Island	76,898	32,771	42.6
South Carolina	205,789	91,578	44.5
Nevada	31,255	12,797	40.9
Georgia	321,438	143,543	44.6
California	329,392	193,738	58.8
Alabama	259,884	153,489	59.0
Massachusetts	502,648	303,383	60.3
Arkansas	182,971	125,508	68.6
Vermont	95,621	59,382	62.1

If that be not satisfactory, as of course it is not, take the votes of every State in the Union. Take the sixteen former slaveholding States, Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, Missouri, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and West Virginia, and the aggregate of the per cent. of votes in those States at the Presidential election of 1884 was 1162.2. Divide it by sixteen, the number of States, and the average per cent. of the voting population that appeared at the polls was 72.6 per cent.

Take the non-slaveholding States, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, and Wisconsin, numbering twenty-two, and the aggregate per cent. in all those States was 1732.3 per cent. Divided by the number of States, twenty-two, it would make 78.8 per cent. of the whole voting population, or in the Northern States, to use that sectional expression, in the non-slaveholding States 6 per cent. more of the voting population only appeared at the polls than in the Southern States or the former slaveholding section of the Union. The statement in detail is as follows:

Arkansas	68.6
Delaware	78.6
Florida	97.0
Georgia	44.6
Kentucky	73.3
Louisiana	50.4
Maryland	80.1
Mississippi	50.3
Missouri	81.5
North Carolina	91.1
South Carolina	44.5
Tennessee	78.6
Texas	84.7
Virginia	85.2
West Virginia	94.7
Total, 16 States	1162.2

Divided by 16 equals 72.6 per cent. of whole voting population.

Colorado	71.0
Connecticut	77.4
Illinois	62.1
Indiana	99.3
Iowa	90.2
Kansas	100.0
Maine	69.1
Massachusetts	60.3
Michigan	85.7
Minnesota	89.0
Nebraska	104.0
Nevada	40.9
New Hampshire	80.4
New Jersey	87.0
New York	83.0
Ohio	94.9
Oregon	88.3
Pennsylvania	82.2
Vermont	62.1
Wisconsin	93.9

Divided by 22 equals 78.8 per cent. of whole voting population.

Yet in the face of these figures, which can not be denied, taken from the census and the official returns, we are told by the Senator from Ohio, and Mr. Blaine, the recent Republican candidate for the Presidency, and by every Republican newspaper throughout this country, that one vote in the South counts as much as two votes in the North in the election of a President of the United States.

We are told that we are keeping Dakota out of the Union for partisan purposes. I stand here to-day and make the proposition that I made in 1886: I will vote for the admission of Dakota as an entire State within this Union to-morrow. I am not afraid to give the Republican party three more electoral votes in the electoral college in the next Presidential contest. My confidence in my party and in the people of this country is such that I believe Cleveland will be elected President by a majority in which three electoral votes will be so small a fraction as not to affect the result to any perceptible extent.

I pledge my word and honor here, and I believe that every Democrat present will do the same, I will vote for the admission of Dakota as one State; but I will not vote for the division of Dakota, because I believe that no consideration of public policy demands it. I believe that State will not be too large, considering its climate and soil.

We have heard the most extravagant panegyric on the soil, the climate, the people of Dakota. Notwithstanding what we know of that region we have heard here of roses and flowers and cloudless skies and balmy zephyrs. We have heard of a people so elevated, so honest, so civilized, so Christianized that hardly any population in this country can be brought in safe comparison with them.

Mr. President, who has kept Dakota out of the Union? For two years it was kept out by the Republican party. Let me read you a little history. I read now an extract from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, published in the National Republican of the city of Washington. There is no doubt, I suppose, about the politics of that paper. There is no barbaric politics here, I will say to the Senator from Vermont. It is the organ of the Republican party at the Capital.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is mistaken about its being an organ. It is a Republican paper.

Mr. VEST. Well, we will take it in the modified form.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We do not have organs in our party.

Mr. VEST. No, no organs, of course! There are some very active organs occasionally on the other side of the Chamber in the way of statements. The Washington Republican of March 22, 1882, says:

Mr. HALE, in presenting a protest against the admission of Dakota as a State, said it disclosed the following remarkable condition of affairs—

I commend this to my Republican friends who are always so extremely active in discussing the repudiating tendencies of the Democratic party, and of the Southern States particularly—

In 1872 the county of Yankton, one of the largest in the Territory, under an act of the Legislature, sought for by the people of the county, issued bonds to the amount of $200,000 to aid the construction of the Southern Dakota Railroad. The bonds being issued were put upon the market accompanied by representations of the leading men of the Territory as to their being sound and good, and were taken by people all over the United States, representing many different States. The road was built. It is the only road going into Yankton County, is running to this day, and everybody concerned is receiving the benefit of it. After paying interest for a short time, the county repudiated, or declined to pay further, and the bondholders were thrown into the courts. They passed through all the stages of litigation in the Territory and in the United States courts, made out their case and were awarded judgment, upon which the officials of the Territory at once invoked the action of the Dakota Legislature—

I ask the attention of my friend from Illinois, if he is in the Chamber, to that statement. In his address the other day he said that but one county in Dakota was concerned in this. Now the facts are, as the record shows in the Supreme Court and as the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] said, that the Legislature of the whole Territory came to the assistance of the repudiators and passed the acts that are now recited—to aid them in their repudiation, and the Legislature at once passed different acts operating in favor of his repudiation by the county. The protest sets forth "that among the acts so passed was one which repealed a previous law authorizing a levy upon the property of the county for the payment of any judgment obtained against the county."

Another act was passed enabling the county commissioners to effect an immediate termination of their official powers by filing a resignation in the office of the county clerk. The operation of this act was that when a mandamus was issued in favor of the creditors the county officers at once filed their resignation, and there was no board for the writ to operate upon.

Mr. HALE added that upon these facts the petitioners, located in different States, respectfully submitted that the people of Dakota had not yet shown themselves capable of self-government unrestrained by Federal supervision, and that, as the petitioners invested their money on the faith of Congress, they had a right now to ask Congress to see to it that the people of that Territory are not encouraged in their efforts at repudiation. He asked that the protest be tabled and printed, and gave notice that when the bill admitting Dakota, already reported, came up he would offer an amendment deferring the admission until the record of the Territory is cleared.

From the New York Tribune—I believe that is a Republican paper, if not an organ—of March 23, 1882, I read the following, as briefly as possible:

The protest made by Senator HALE against the admission of Dakota as a State presents an issue upon which it may be exceedingly important for the Republican party to place itself on record. Mr. HALE's statement of facts makes out a prima facie case against admission. He states that in 1872 Yankton County issued bonds.

For two years the Senator from Maine prevented the passage of the bill through the Senate. He prevented it until these bonds were paid, principal and interest. The Senate of the United States was made a collecting agency. If this crime exists against the people of Dakota, what must be said of this action on the Republican side of this Chamber which perpetrated this crime, as it is called, for two years in order to collect so much money for certain people in different States of the Union?

But the Democratic party is assailed. It is said that by fraud, by trickery, by evasion, almost by violence we have denied these people the highest rights of American citizenship. Mr. President, we have not denied them anything that has been hitherto given to the people of any of the Territories or States of this great Union. We say now, and I have no hesitation in saying it to any one and anywhere, we are willing to admit this Territory as a whole. We are not willing to divide it. We believe that there are no reasons for its division. We believe that this thing springs from unfair motives and to achieve personal and party ends.

There are already two States admitted into the Union that are larger in area than this proposed State of Dakota if not divided—Texas and California; but the Senator from Wisconsin makes the extraordinary argument that no more empire States are wanted; that the Republican party does not want an empire Republican State in the Northwest to offset politically and otherwise the empire State of Texas, which he says is hopelessly Democratic and given up to the party of barbaric politics.

Mr. President, I choose to say nothing more in regard to this question, and I leave it before the American people upon the record that has been made here by the two parties. I shall vote, as I said, for the admission of Dakota as a whole. I shall not vote to divide it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. (Putting the question.) The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. PLATT. I ask for a division.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. BUTLER. The amendment has been read in full to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina is to strike out and insert.

Mr. ALLISON. I thought it was another amendment.

Mr. PLATT. There was an amendment to the amendment, as I supposed, pending, and I supposed it was upon that we were to vote. I do not know that the amendment has been offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment that was proposed to be offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina was not formally offered. It was presented as an amendment proposed to be submitted, and ordered to be printed, but it has not been submitted. The question therefore recurs upon the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, upon which a division has been called for.

Mr. STEWART. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. DOLPH. Does the Senator from Nevada understand that the amendment is a very long bill and is an enabling act, the proposition being to substitute an enabling act for the bill reported from the committee?

Mr. STEWART. I withdraw my request for the reading.

The question being put, the ayes were 23——

Mr. DOLPH. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BLAIR. Do I understand that my colleague [Mr. CHANDLER] proposed an amendment to be moved to the amendment now pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] had an amendment printed that he said it was his intention to offer as an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BLAIR. My colleague seems to be temporarily absent from the Chamber, and I desire that there shall be no action taken that will interfere with his offering that amendment, if he desires to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has through misconception misstated what the purpose of the Senator from New Hampshire was. It was to amend the part proposed to be stricken out, and not the part proposed to be inserted.

Mr. BLAIR. I am not aware of the condition of the bill. I understood that he desired to offer an amendment which he deemed quite important, at some stage, and if this is the point where it should be done I hope that the vote may not be pressed so hastily that he can not be sent for to his committee-room. I have no doubt he is there. I have sent for him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I should like to say a word or two about this business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will pause one moment until order is restored in the Chamber.

Mr. BUTLER. It is quite evident that the Senate will not get to a vote on the bill this evening or on any of the amendments. It is now getting late, and perhaps the Senator from Vermont would yield to a motion for an executive session. If he does, I will make that motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. DOLPH. I wish to call up a bill on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PLATT. Can not we have some understanding as to when the vote shall be taken?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina withdraw his motion?

Mr. BUTLER. I will suspend it for the time being. If it is understood that this measure shall be laid aside informally and the Senator from Oregon desires to call up a bill which will not occupy much time, I have no special anxiety about an executive session. I will withdraw the motion for the moment.

Mr. PLATT. I have not spoken on this matter since the debate was opened. I should like a little time before the vote is taken to reply to some arguments which have been made on the other side—not a long time. I would suggest to the Senator from South Carolina whether we can not have an understanding that we shall take the vote on the amendments and the bill some time to-morrow.

Mr. BUTLER. That will be entirely agreeable to me, though I think it not at all unlikely that I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate for a short time in response to some observations on the other side.

Mr. PLATT. Say as soon as 5 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BUTLER. I should not like to name any particular hour. I would say to-morrow, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. PLATT. Well, say that we will vote on it to-morrow.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no objection to that, but I have no right to speak for anybody else.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ought to say, if I may, that I shall not probably occupy more than twenty minutes in what I have to say; so that very likely we can get to an early vote to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Connecticut to ask unanimous consent that the vote upon the bill and amendments be taken to-morrow. Is there objection? [A pause.] The Chair hears none. Such is the agreement of the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. If there is no Senator who desires to continue the debate this evening, I would ask unanimous consent of the Senate that the bill be informally laid aside, and then I shall ask, if that be agreed to, unanimous consent of the Senate to consider a bill reported by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds this morning.

Mr. COKE. I wish to say a word.

Mr. SAWYER. I do not wish to interfere with my friend from Tennessee, but when his bill is concluded I should like to ask the Senate to take up pension bills.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill reported by the Senator's colleague will not take five minutes; but I yield to the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], who wishes to submit some remarks on the pending bill.

Mr. SAWYER. Then I have not anything to say.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, yesterday the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] placed upon record a statement with reference to a construction of the joint resolution under which the Republic of Texas was admitted as a State into the Union, which I do not propose to discuss at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will pause. Senators will please resume their seats.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to the Senator that my colleague is absent, and it might be as well for him to make his suggestions at a subsequent time when my colleague shall be present.

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator's colleague be here to-morrow?

Mr. DAWES. I presume he will. I know not why he is absent now.

Mr. COKE. At the request of the Senator I will postpone what I have to say until to-morrow. It is simply in reference to the statement made by the Senator's colleague on the subject of the joint resolution by which Texas became a part of the Union, he having made a statement in regard to it from which I entirely dissent and in relation to which I desire to make a few remarks. I will, however, postpone what I have to say until to-morrow.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

Mr. HARRIS. I renew my request, if there be no Senator who desires to continue the debate on the pending measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the pending order be informally laid aside to enable him to move the consideration of House bill 7220.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7220) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn.," approved February 25, 1885, and the act amendatory thereof approved February 21, 1887.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. SAWYER. I move now to take up the private pension bills favorably reported for present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed now to the consideration of private pension bills on the Calendar favorably reported. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. COCKRELL. Unobjected cases?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Cases in which there is a favorable report and to which there is no objection.

RAILWAY BRIDGES OVER RED AND LITTLE RIVERS.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin to yield to me for the purpose of calling up a brief bill which I desire to have passed, and which is No. 698 on the Calendar, being Senate bill 2179.

Mr. SAWYER. If it does not lead to any discussion, I will yield.

Mr. STEWART. I have a joint resolution which I desire to have passed, and I am certain it will lead to no discussion.

Mr. SAWYER. It will only take a few minutes to pass the pension bills. However, I will not object to these requests.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2179) authorizing the Kansas City, Texarkana and Gulf Railway Company to bridge the Red and Little Rivers, in the State of Arkansas.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 3, line 14, after the word

"in," to strike out "which" and insert "whose jurisdiction;" so as to read:

And in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river, caused or alleged to be caused by said bridge, the case may be brought in the district court of the United States for the State of Arkansas, in whose jurisdiction any portion of said bridge may be located.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 22, after the word "as," to strike out "Congress" and insert "the Secretary of War;" in line 26, after the words "revocation by," to strike out "law" and insert "the Secretary of War;" in line 27, after the word "in," to strike out "the" and insert "his;" in the same line, after the word "judgment," strike out "of Congress;" and in the same line, after the word "so," to strike out "require" and insert "requires;" so as to make the clause read:

And the said structures shall be changed at the cost and expense of the owners thereof, from time to time, as the Secretary of War may direct, so as to preserve the free and convenient navigation of said rivers, and the authority to erect and continue any and all of said bridges shall be subject to revocation by the Secretary of War whenever the public good, in his judgment, so requires.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add the following:

SEC. 7. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge or bridges herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the repealing and modifying section read.

The Secretary read section 6, as follows:

SEC. 6. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LOAN OF SCIENTIFIC INSTRUMENTS.

Mr. STEWART. I ask to set aside the regular order temporarily, for the purpose of taking up Order of Business 654, being the joint resolution (S. R. 24) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to loan certain scientific instruments.

Mr. SAWYER. I will yield provided it does not lead to debate.

Mr. STEWART. It will not lead to debate.

Mr. EDMUNDS (to Mr. SAWYER). Take up your pension bills.

Mr. SAWYER. I will immediately after this. I reserve the right to resume the floor if this measure leads to debate.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. 24) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to loan certain scientific instruments. It authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to loan any scientific instruments in the possession of any of the bureaus under his charge, and not in use, to persons taking observations, or making investigations in connection with, or for the use of, any department of the public service, under such regulations as he may prescribe, taking such security for the safe-keeping and return of the instruments on demand as he may deem necessary.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES ANDERSON.

Mr. SAWYER. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first private pension bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 2283) granting a pension to James Anderson was announced as first in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James Anderson, late a private in Company B, Fourth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY ROBINSON.

The bill (H. R. 6759) granting a pension to Mary Robinson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary Robinson, dependent mother of Andrew J. Robinson, late a member of Company C, Eighth New York Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THEODORE GARDNER.

The bill (H. R. 5118) granting a pension to Theodore Gardner was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Theodore Gardner, late sergeant First Battery Kansas Volunteers, at the rate of $17 per month, in lieu of the pension he now receives.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEPHEN THURSTON.

The bill (H. R. 6812) granting an increase of pension to Stephen Thurston was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Stephen Thurston, of Belfast, Me., late a private in Company G, First Regiment of Maine Volunteers, at the rate of $45 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER April 10, 1888:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6812) granting an increase of pension to Stephen Thurston, have examined the same, and report:

This bill passed the House on the 30th of March. The House report is adopted, and is as follows:

"Claimant was a private in Company G, First Maine Heavy Artillery, and was wounded by two rifle-balls in the thigh at the battle of Petersburgh, Va., July 18, 1864. In consequence of the wound the leg became shriveled and entirely useless, and also gangrenous. From the time of his discharge he has been compelled to use two crutches. A medical examination on January 19, 1865, is as follows:

"'Applicant is totally disabled by gunshot wound of right thigh; gangrene destroyed nearly all the fleshy part of posterior portion of thigh; the leg is permanently flexed upon the thigh; he is much prostrated, etc.'

"Other medical examinations from time to time revealed the fact that the use of the leg was wholly and permanently lost.

"The following recent medical certificates are filed with your committee:

"BELFAST, ME., February 14, 1888.

"This is to certify that I have this day examined Stephen Thurston, formerly Company G, First Maine Heavy Artillery, and find that the right leg is in such condition from wounds received while in the service of the United States as to place him upon the pension-list rated as an amputation at middle third of femur. The condition of the limb is such from the effects of gangrene that it is useless, and no suitable stump could be made for the support of an artificial limb. I consider his condition worse than one of amputation of the thigh. I am disinterested.

"HORATIO H. JOHNSON, M. D.

"STATE OF MAINE, Waldo, ss:

"Subscribed and sworn to before me February 18, 1888.

"[SEAL.] WM. H. FOGLER, Notary Public.

"This certifies that I have this day examined Stephen Thurston, formerly Company G, First Maine Heavy Artillery, and find his right leg useless from wounds received while in the service of the United States. The present condition of the limb is such, from the effects of gangrene, that no suitable stump could be made for the support of an artificial limb. In my opinion his condition is worse than amputation of the thigh. I have no interest in the claim.

"G. C. KILGORE, M. D.

"STATE OF MAINE, Waldo, ss:

"Subscribed and sworn to before me February 18, 1888.

"[SEAL.] WM. H. FOGLER, Notary Public.

"In addition to the above, a petition signed by the county treasurer, the judge of probate, judge of police court, the collector of taxes, the editor of the local newspaper, and a large number of lawyers, merchants, manufacturers, and other business men, citizens of Belfast, Me., is in the hands of your committee, setting forth the merits of this case, and urging that the increase of pension be granted.

"Claimant is now receiving a pension of $36 per month, which is the full amount that can be allowed under the pension laws; but it is evident that this case is one that Congress can properly take cognizance of. It is conclusively shown that the leg is utterly worthless, and that, even if amputation should be resorted to, the tissues have been so completely destroyed by gangrene that it would be impossible to wear an artificial limb. This fact makes the disability clearly equal to that for which $45 is allowed under the general law."

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM P. MADDEN.

The bill (S. 2233) granting a pension to William P. Madden was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William P. Madden, late private Company I, Sixth United States Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CYRUS TUTTLE.

The bill (S. 2008) granting a pension to Cyrus Tuttle was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Cyrus Tuttle, late private Company D, Fifteenth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call attention to the fact that according to the report in this case there has been no application for a review or reopening of it since August 19, 1884. The last action of the Pension Office seems to have been in 1884. As a matter of course, no additional evidence has been secured since that time——

Mr. SAWYER. I will let the bill pass over.

Mr. COCKRELL. No, I do not want it passed over. I merely call attention to it. If the committee is satisfied that no additional evidence can be procured, that action would be final; but, as a matter of course, the Pension Office considers these claims pending all the time, and at any time receives additional evidence.

Mr. SAWYER. We were satisfied we could not procure the additional evidence and that it was a just case, and we consequently reported it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM KELSEY.

The bill (S. 2106) granting a pension to William Kelsey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William Kelsey, late of Company G, Sixth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ELIZABETH WHITE.

The bill (S. 2089) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth White was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth White, mother of Charles H. White, late of Company K, Seventeenth Regiment Iowa Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROSALOO SAGE.

The bill (S. 2137) for the relief of Rosaloo Sage was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Rosaloo Sage, late of Company A, Eighth Iowa Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MERCY A. CUTTS.

The bill (S. 888) granting a pension to Mercy A. Cutts was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mercy A. Cutts, mother of Enoch F. Cutts, deceased, late of Company A, Thirty-first Maine Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH VERBISKY.

The bill (S. 2105) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Verbisky was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Joseph Verbisky, late of the Second Regiment United States Infantry, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER April 10, 1888:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2105) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Verbisky, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant under this bill enlisted in the regular Army of the United States as a private in Company I, Second Regiment of Infantry, on the 8th day of October, 1851, and was honorably discharged January 18, 1853. He was pensioned October 8, 1853, from January 18, 1853, "for amputation of left arm and fracture of right wrist," which has been increased at sundry times until the present, and he is now in receipt of $36 per month. He made application for increase under the act of August 4, 1886, which was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions on the ground "that his arm was not amputated at the shoulder-joint, or so near the joint as to prevent the use of an artificial limb." Assistant Surgeon C. Ewen, United States Army, certifies "that upon examination of claimant, he finds that he has lost his left arm at the elbow; the use of the right arm is impaired from a fracture of the ulna, and the arm is weak; there is great difficulty of speech (partial paralysis), apparently resulting from gunshot wound of head." Margaret J. Verbisky, wife of claimant, testifies "that for eleven years claimant has been helpless, unable to dress or feed himself; one side is paralyzed, and he has to be covered and turned over in bed; that he requires the constant care and attention of another person."

Henry Hamborg and Max Haselby swear that the claimant requires the help of his wife in dressing and washing himself, and in cutting his victuals. Under the statement of facts presented your committee are of the opinion that the claimant is very nearly totally disabled, and that if a rating was allowed for this disability to right arm the pension would exceed the amount proposed by the bill, and they therefore report the bill with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Haines, late a member of Company D, Forty-fourth Massachusetts Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 a month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLODGETT, April 10, 1888:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred a bill granting a pension to Frances H. Plummer, have examined the same, and report:

Frances H. Plummer, the applicant, is the widow of General Joseph H. Plummer, who graduated at West Point in 1841 and served during the Mexican war, and later in the regular Army. He was brigadier-general in the war of the rebellion, serving under General Lyon in Missouri. During an engagement at Springfield, Mo., he was severely wounded by being struck in the hip by a rifle-ball, which was not extracted. While suffering from his wound, and against the advice of the army surgeon, who warned him that to engage in active service in his then enfeebled condition would endanger his life, he, however, chose to respond to the call of his superior officers, and reported for duty at Corinth, Miss., where he very soon died quite suddenly on August 9, 1862.

From abundance of medical testimony it appears that General Plummer's death was caused from exposure incident to army life, together with the wound received in the service. Therefore, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Raymond, late a corporal of Company I, Twentieth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and a private of Company B, Fortieth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $20 per month, in lieu of the amount per month he is now receiving.

OLIVE WALLACE.

The bill (H. R. 4106) granting a pension to Olive Wallace was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to put on the pension-roll the name of Olive Wallace, formerly Olive Burbank, mother of Charles H. Burbank, late of Company C, Third Regiment Vermont Volunteers, on account of whose death pension certificate No. 68800 was heretofore issued to her as dependent mother, but vacated on account of subsequent marriage.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. DAVIS April 10, 1888:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4106) granting a pension to Olive Wallace, have examined the same, and report:

Your committee agree with the House committee in making this case an exception to the rule, and recommend the passage of the bill, for the reasons set out in the following copy of the House report:

"Charles H. Burbank, private in Company C, Third Regiment Vermont Volunteers, was killed in action in the battle of the Wilderness. His mother, Olive Burbank, was pensioned as a dependent, but pension was discontinued on account of subsequent remarriage. Her second husband died in 1872, and she now asks to be again placed on the roll, and furnishes a large mass of testimony showing that she is extremely destitute, and has been totally blind for seven years.

"The fact that the son was actually killed in the battle, and that the mother is destitute and blind, makes this an exceptionally strong case of its class, and as there are various precedents for the passage of such bills, your committee report the bill back with a recommendation that it be amended by adding after the word 'pension-roll,' in the fourth line, the words 'subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws,' and with this amendment recommend its passage."

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from Minnesota if there is any danger this bill will carry pension back to 1872, when it was vacated by her remarriage?

Mr. DAVIS. Not in the least, in my opinion.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Pay D. M. Fox, late colonel of the Twenty-seventh Regiment Michigan Volunteers, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of that which he is now receiving.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay D. M. Fox, late colonel of the Twenty-seventh Regiment Michigan Volunteers, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of that which he is now receiving.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report in that case be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. TURPIE April 10, 1888:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mary Curtin for a pension, have examined the same, and report:

That the claimant is the widow of Timothy Curtin, who was a sergeant in Company I, Forty-eighth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry. He enlisted at a time not shown; was discharged September 3, 1863. The soldier was a pensioner at the time of his death by reason of gunshot wound in right arm, received at battle of Port Hudson, at the rate of $16 per month. He died at Boston, Mass., September 17, 1880. His death is recorded as of pneumonia.

The physician in attendance at last illness says that his disease was consumption; that he would have died in a few weeks from this latter disease; that the attack from pneumonia only hastened death. The claimant and her neighbors testify that the soldier upon his return home, immediately after his discharge, was greatly broken in health; that he had an incessant hacking cough and was thoroughly disabled for work; that his wound remained almost constantly an open sore; that when suppuration ceased the cough became worse, and that the waste from the wound weakened the system so as to prevent a cure of the cough; that this was his condition continuously until he died.

Medical testimony supports this view, and although the claim was rejected by the Pension Office, yet we think it is shown sufficiently that the wound and its consequent results were the causes of the husband's death. We therefore report herewith a bill for the relief of the petitioner, and recommend its passage.

Mr. COCKRELL. I would suggest to strike out in the last line the words "and pay her at the rate of $12 per month," so as to place her on the same footing with others; I think that would be fair and right. Let her be subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and let her be on an equality with all others.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] reported that bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I make the motion to strike out that clause. Let her be on an equality with others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 7 strike out the words:

And pay her at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that amendment ought to be adopted. I remember only the other day that a House amendment of exactly that character was made to one of our bills and we all agreed that it was right. It strikes me, as far as I am now informed, that the amendment ought to be agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER. There is no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THADDEUS S. STEWART.

The bill (S. 1922) for the relief of Thaddeus S. Stewart was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the rate of pension now allowed to Thaddeus S. Stewart, late a private in Company K, One hundred and thirty-seventh Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers, under certificate No. 99554, from $30 to $50 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILHEMINA HOSBAND.

The bill (S. 2260) restoring the name of Wilhemina Hosband to the pension-roll was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to restore to the pension-roll the name of Wilhemina Hosband, widow of the late Sandy Hosband, deceased, private in Company K, Eighty-second Regiment United States Colored Volunteers, of the city of New Orleans, and to pay on her pension certificate numbered 177761 the original amount allowed her from the date her name was dropped from the roll.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. TURPIE April 10, 1888:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2260) restoring Wilhemina Hosband to the rolls as a pensioner, have examined the same, and report as follows:

The claimant is the widow of Sandy Hosband, who was a private in Company K, Eighty-second Regiment of United States Colored Infantry, of State of Louisiana. The soldier enlisted September 1, 1863, and served until September 15, 1864, when he died of small-pox contracted in the service, at the regimental hospital in Barrancas, Fla.

The claimant drew a pension as his widow, duly granted, until 1878, when her name was dropped from the pension-rolls upon the claim that she had remarried since death of her husband. The evidence in the case is very voluminous, conflicting, and unsatisfactory. We are only convinced, upon a somewhat careful perusal of it, of two facts: First, that the claimant was the wife of the soldier at the time of his death; second, that he died in the service.

Although there is some evidence which might lead us to the conclusion that she had been guilty of illicit intercourse with men since she became a pensioner, we do not think that it is at all established that she has since her husband's death remarried, or that it is shown that her cohabitation with any one has been so continuous or notorious, acknowledged or reputed, as to be equivalent to marriage.

We recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out all after the word "Louisiana," in line 8, as follows:

And she shall be paid on her pension certificate numbered 177761 the original amount allowed her from the date her name was dropped from said roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Please state the ground of that.

Mr. COCKRELL. The ground is apparent on the face of the report. Her name was dropped from the roll on the ground of remarriage in 1878, and this bill restores her to a pension from 1878 up to this time on the ground that she has not lived with any one man long enough to become his notorious wife, according to the report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This woman could only be debarred of her pension as the widow of the soldier if she had lawfully remarried. The pension laws and the Pension Office, I hope, do not go into an inquiry in regard to the morals of the pensioners. If that were done, it would be a very unpleasant performance in a great many instances, and in others it would be quite the reverse, a very pleasant performance, because we should only see the utmost virtue and the utmost destitution combined. But it does seem to me that if the remarriage is not proven Congress could hardly fail to correct this error, as it turns out to have been if she has not been remarried, on the ground that she had not led the kind of life that she ought to have led. Are we to go into that sort of question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Here is a case of a widow pensioned on account of the death of her husband, and in 1878 a Commissioner of the Pension Office who could not be charged with any unkindly feeling to the colored people, officially and judicially found that this woman had remarried, and thereupon he dropped her name from the pension-roll. Now, after the lapse of ten years, she comes to Congress and asks that her name be restored to the pension-roll, and not only that, but that she be given arrears of pension from 1878 to this time. The Committee on Pensions find these facts established:

First, that the claimant was the wife of the soldier at the time of his death; second, that he died in the service.

As to whether she has remarried or not it is uncertain, but she has lived in illicit intercourse with men, and not with any one particular man long enough to establish the presumption of the relation of wife. That is the evidence according to the committee. The Pension Office had judicial authority to act upon this matter, and the Pension Office in 1878 said they found that she was a married woman, and that finding has not been reversed by any evidence here, and I say it is enough that Congress shall place her back on the pension-roll and let her draw a pension from this time, and not give her back pension from 1878 up to this time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the suggestion of my friend from Missouri, whose views I almost always agree with, is, if I may say so, not altogether logical. If the evidence does not satisfy the Senate, as it now stands, that this woman has not been remarried, and the Senate now believes that she has been remarried, she ought not to have any pension at all. But if, on the report of this committee and the facts that they have found, there is no satisfactory proof that she has been married to any person since the death of her husband, whatever her life may have been in regard to morality, she is legally entitled to her pension, because the law says that she shall have it as a widow until she is remarried. It is, therefore, as somebody said about 54° 40′ or fight, "the whole or none." If she has been remarried, or there is any fair ground to believe that she has, we ought not to pass this bill at all. If there is not satisfactory evidence that she has been remarried, then she has been unlawfully deprived of a right that the law gives her as the widow of a soldier to have the pension from the time of his death; and that brings up simply the question of whether we are to go into the personal life that the widows of soldiers lead and to say, affirming the opinion of the Commissioner of Pensions or others, that if these widows have led immoral lives, and we are satisfied of it, their pensions shall stop.

That is not the law; and if the Congress of the United States are to set themselves up to go into inquiries into the morality of the lives of the widows of soldiers (although in ninety-nine cases in one hundred it would be an inquiry that would be honorable to those women, I have no doubt, and in the hundredth it might not), we should make a great mistake. So, we either ought to pass the bill as reported, or not pass it at all, as it seems to me, with great respect to my friend from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not agree with the Senator upon that proposition. If this widow never remarried, the Pension Office had no right to drop her name from the roll, and if she is entitled to her pension she can go into court and enforce it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know about that.

Mr. COCKRELL. She does not come to Congress because she has a legal right. Scarcely any of these pension claims are based upon a legal right. We have passed twenty cases to-day where under the law the parties were not entitled to a pension. They come to Congress asking special relief. Here this woman is not entitled legally to be restored to the pension-roll. If she is, she can enforce her remedy before the Commissioner of Pensions, and there will be ample authority for doing so. She comes, however, to Congress, and now Congress can grant this relief in whole or in part. It is a matter of gratuity, a matter of favor, a matter of kindness. If she has lived with so many men since 1878 that she has not established her identity as the wife of any one of them, how can she ask Congress to go back and pay her a pension during that entire period? She is doubtless old, decrepit, and in want, and I suppose that is the principal ground upon which she is at all to be placed on the pension-roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I assume that this woman does not live in Utah, for in that case—I am not sure about that, as I do not know the Mormon doctrine—it would not be any objection at all, that is to say, it would not be if she were a man; but in this case I assume that she does not live there.

The Senator from Missouri is correct in saying that the Commissioner of Pensions had no right to strike this woman's name from the pension-roll until she had remarried; and if she has not remarried I will assume that she had a legal claim that she could prosecute in the Court of Claims for the payment of her pension. I do not know whether she could or not, but I will assume it. But what can a poor, sorrowful, and desperate and lost woman do in prosecuting a suit in the Court of Claims of the United States, requiring retainers and counsel fees and everything that goes to make up the compensation of gentlemen who engage in the prosecution of claims there? That is a total impossibility. Therefore, if we are satisfied from the evidence our committee reports that she has not been remarried, or are not satisfied that she has been remarried, we ought to correct what I will assume is a legal error of the Commissioner of Pensions in 1878, not because she requires an act of Congress to enforce her right, but because she is perfectly incapable in point of money and capacity to carry on a lawsuit with the United States; and so Congress comes in and gives her what we do every day here in claims bills, pay people who can not enforce their rights in the Court of Claims.

If there is any ground to believe that this woman has been remarried—I am not speaking of the life she has led, but if she has been remarried—we ought not to grant her a pension at all; but if we are not satisfied that she has been remarried, then she is entitled as of right, according to law, to have her pension without going into an inquiry into what kind of a life she has led, sorrowful and wicked and immoral as it may have been.

Mr. COCKRELL. I trusted the Senator would have paid very careful attention to the reading of the report in this case. The report says:

> We are only convinced, upon a somewhat careful perusal of it, of two facts: First, that the claimant was the wife of the soldier at the time of his death; second, that he died in the service.
> Although there is some evidence which might lead us to the conclusion that she had been guilty of illicit intercourse with men since she became a pensioner, we do not think that it is at all established that she has since her husband's death remarried, or that it is shown that her cohabitation with any one has been so continuous or notorious, acknowledged or reputed, as to be equivalent to marriage.

That is a finding after the Commissioner of Pensions, a quasi-judicial officer, had examined the case, and had the advantage of special agents to go and make examinations in the field; and after a full investigation he found that she was remarried, and thereupon he struck her name from the roll. She has had ever since 1878 to file additional testimony to try to rebut, to overthrow the fact of the remarriage, and yet it is a question in doubt, and she has not been able to satisfy, if she has gone to the Commissioner of Pensions—and there does not seem to be any evidence here that she ever went there—she has not satisfied the Commissioner of Pensions, the officer appointed by law and endowed with full authority to pass on the question of her right to be restored to the roll. There is not anything here to indicate absolutely that she has applied for restoration. She thought probably that it was easier to come to Congress.

We all know that the Commissioners of Pensions, not only the present Commissioner, but all Commissioners, have always given a kindly hearing to applications for restoration to the pension-roll. They have always given a kindly hearing to applications for rehearings in pension cases, and it is not right that Congress should be encumbered with this class of legislation. If we grant relief, it is because the applicants can not get the relief legally before the Commissioner of Pensions, and we ought to put such restrictions upon the relief as we deem proper and just.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, in respect of the investigation which the special agents made, on which the Commissioner acted in dropping this woman's name from the rolls, I have this to say: I know nothing whatever about this case, of course.

Mr. COCKRELL. Nor I. I never heard of it before.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I am speaking, as is my friend from Missouri, on general principles. I have known in the State of Vermont investigations made by the Commissioner of Pensions, through special agents when the special agents would go and take ex parte testimony and the pensioner would appeal to the special agent for liberty to hear the evidence against him or her, as the case might be, so as to know what was being said against him in respect of the question of dropping and so on, which was refused. The special agent thought that his authority was that of a kind of detective, to go and pick up ex parte information, which might or might not be true—I am not on that question—and report it. So I say in respect of the dropping of anybody from the pension-roll it has almost always been ex parte. I do not commend it; I condemn it; but that is the way the thing is done.

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator sits down I wish to ask him a question. I am not questioning the argument, but simply asking for information. I have it not in my memory exactly, but I should like to understand what is the authority on which it is the practice of the Pension Office to drop from the roll widows who are found to be leading evil lives. I am sure such a practice exists. What is the authority for it? Is there an express statute for it? I have it not in my memory. Perhaps the Senator from Vermont can inform me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have it not in my memory at all. It may be that it is in the statutes, but I did not know that the Commissioner of Pensions was invested with the authority to oversee the lives of widows.

Mr. HOAR. There is such a practice to some extent.

Mr. BLAIR. I have the statute here which provides for the termination of widows' pensions when living in open adultery. It was passed, I think, in 1882.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the same statute authorize that widow to appear before the investigating officer, or whatever, and be heard on her side?

Mr. BLAIR. No doubt there is an inquiry into the facts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the question is, whether she is by the law entitled to be heard on this accusation against her?

Mr. BLAIR. My recollection is that the statute simply provides that where the fact exists the pension shall terminate. I do not think the law fixes the method of determining the fact.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then, Mr. President, we have this case as a dropping from the rolls on the ground of a remarriage, and not on the ground of any discretion on the part of the Commissioner of Pensions in respect of the evil life, if there be such a statute, as I rather think now there is.

Mr. HOAR. I will state to the Senator that I had a request from a pensioner in my neighborhood lately, expostulating with the Pension Office for being dropped under these circumstances, maintaining that the Commissioner must be wrong, and desiring a rehearing. I asked the Commissioner to reconsider his action, and he cited the law under which he had deemed it his duty to drop that woman from the roll. I have sent for the letter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it probable that there is such a statute; I think I remember it now; but I want to repeat what I said a little while ago, that in one instance in the State of Vermont where a woman was accused of this same sort of thing, and her counsel (I knew her counsel—I never heard of her before—as being a respectable gentleman) wrote to me imploring that I would do whatever I could to get the Commissioner of Pensions to command his special agent, who was purporting to investigate that case, to allow her with her counsel to be present and hear what her accusers said; but the special agent would not allow it.

Mr. KENNA. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. KENNA. I ask only for information. Suppose that there is a statute, as the Senator from New Hampshire suggests, which provides that the Commissioner of Pensions may drop from the roll or shall drop from the roll a widow under the conditions which have been discussed here, and yet suppose that in this case or in any other case a special act of Congress is passed giving a pension in such a case, would it then be in the power of the Commissioner to cease to pay that pension?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it would, because we always do it subject to the limitations and conditions of the pension laws.

Mr. KENNA. But Congress, acting in the full force of the fact, with the full knowledge that the Commissioner had acted, gives the pension; would not that embarrass the Commissioner in future dealing with the case?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would embarrass the exercise of his discretion as to any preceding fact. Supposing this bill passed to-day and were approved by the President, I do not think it would be the right thing, and probably not the legal thing, for the Commissioner of Pensions to go into previous misconduct; but I think under the form in which we pass all these bills, as we ought to, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, if the Commissioner found—if there be such a law—that her life was openly and notoriously dissolute afterwards, he might drop her, and this act of Congress would not restrain him in the least degree from the exercise of that discretion. But in this case, as the committee inform us in their report, which I have no doubt is true, the Commissioner of Pensions did not drop the woman from the pension-roll on the ground of leading an open and notoriously immoral life, but on the ground that she had remarried.

Mr. KENNA. I understand that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, supposing that to be so, I submit again whether, if we find that she was not remarried, she is not of right entitled to the pension that she was illegally denied by the Commissioner of Pensions. That is the point, and it would seem to be clear that she was.

Now let us see what the law is, not necessarily for this point, but to illustrate:

> And the open and notorious adulterous cohabitation of the widow who is a pensioner shall operate to terminate her pension from the commencement of such cohabitation.

This is an open and notorious leading of an evil life; but in this case the Commissioner of Pensions dropped this woman from the rolls, not on that ground, as it is stated in the report, but upon the ground that she had remarried, which she had a perfectly lawful right to do. If she had remarried that was the end of it, and she ought not to have any pension at all. If she had not remarried, then the Commissioner was wrong and illegal in dropping her, and, as the Senator from Missouri says, perhaps she might have prosecuted her case in the Court of Claims to get that pension; but we all know for a person in that condition that is out of the question. So it really presents to our consideration—I thank the Senator from Missouri for bringing it to our attention—the question whether the evidence shows, as the committee say it does not, that she was remarried. If she was not, she is entitled to go back, and if the Commissioner chooses to-morrow to suspend her pension again on the ground that she leads an open and notoriously evil life, he will have a perfect right to do it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Commissioner found the fact on the evidence presented to him and he dropped her from the roll on the ground of remarriage, is not the burden of proof then on her to show affirmatively that she had not remarried? Ought she not to be required to prove affirmatively that there had been no remarriage before we can be justified in reversing the judgment of the Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. EDMUNDS. In many cases the suggestion of my friend from Delaware would be perfectly true; but it would be utterly impossible for the Senator, or I should rather say for myself, a married man, to prove that I had not married at all or had not married some one else, because it is the proof of a negative, and that can never be established. I recognize the principle my friend suggests. If it was an affirmative fact she could prove it. If she had committed some act like adulterous intercourse, it might be one thing; but here is a case where the burden of proof is to prove a thing that in the nature of things is impossible of demonstration or even probable proof. You can not prove anything about it. All you can say is, "I have not been remarried," but I can not bring a single witness to prove that I have not been. You might bring the whole neighborhood to say, "We never attended any wedding;" you might bring all the clergymen in the neighborhood to say, "We never celebrated a marriage;" but that would not prove that there had not been a remarriage. So the difficulty lies in the fact that she is called on to show, on the suggestion of my friend from Delaware, a negative, which can never be proved by anything that amounts to a demonstration or to anything else than a probability.

If you found a widow who, in the opinion of all her neighbors, reputable people, had led a moral and regular life, and they had never heard of her cohabitation with anybody—they had never heard of any marriage—you might say it is altogether probable she has not been married; but that does not amount to anything in the nature of proof in the sense that the law speaks of proof.

So when the Commissioner drops her on that ground, and a committee of the Senate find that that ground is not maintained by the proof, she is remitted to her original condition. The open and notorious evil life is quite another thing; the Commissioner did not find that, and the committee does not find it. The committee only say that there is a lot of talk about this widow. We leave the Commissioner with the power, if he finds that her life is now evil, to drop her to-morrow if he chooses. This is, of course, a mere question of principle, applying to the widows of all the soldiers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, I should like the Senator from Vermont to answer a question. I have sent for the papers in the case to see what was the exact ground of the decision, and I have not been able to find it. I take it for granted that the Commissioner of Pensions, in 1878, acted perfectly fairly and impartially with reference to this colored widow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On the evidence he had.

Mr. COCKRELL. Upon the evidence he had. He believed that this colored woman was remarried, and upon that ground he struck her name from the roll, as it was his duty to do. Now it is proposed to restore her to the pension-roll and give her arrears of pension from 1878 up to this time; and the evidence upon which that is proposed shows conclusively that she has been living in adulterous cohabitation with different men, but not long enough with any to establish her identity as the wife of any one of them. Now, she can not be restored to the pension-roll while living in that condition, and under the law of August 7, 1882, that fact of itself would have caused her name to be stricken from the roll. I have sent for the act of August 7, 1882, and I will find it in a moment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The point, if my friend will pardon me, that I wish to call attention to is this——

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me read this. I have it now. Section 2 of the act of August 7, 1882, says:

SEC. 2. That marriages, except such as are mentioned in section 4705 of the Revised Statutes, shall be proven in pension cases to be legal marriages according to the law of the place where the parties resided at the time of marriage, or at the time when the right to pension accrued; and the open and notorious adulterous cohabitation of a widow who is a pensioner shall operate to terminate her pension from the commencement of such cohabitation.

That is a solemn law of Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I wish to ask my friend whether the report of the committee shows, or any evidence in it—I do not know how that is—that this woman has done that thing? You will notice that the statute speaks of "adulterous cohabitation." A woman who cohabits with an unmarried man is not guilty of any "adulterous cohabitation," however immoral and improper it may be, as we all agree that it is, and the statute appears to have not intended to take from the widows of soldiers their pensions when the Commissioner of Pensions was satisfied that they were not leading moral lives; but they must go beyond that, invading a more sacred relation to society and living in adulterous intercourse. I should like to hear the Senator on that.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not agree with that view of the law. I do not believe that Congress ever dreamed of such a construction being put upon that law. I do not believe that the "adulterous cohabitation" was meant to be confined on the part of the widow to a married man, and I do not think Congress ever thought of any such thing, and the Pension Office never has confined, under Republican or Democratic administrations, its interpretation of that law to any such narrow construction.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But what does the Senator think the law means?

Mr. COCKRELL. I have read it. I will read now from the Digest of Pension Laws, Decisions, and Rulings, published in 1885. Section 2 is the section of the law I have read.

Mr. HOAR. What year was that?

Mr. COCKRELL. This is a Digest of the Pension Laws, published in 1885.

Mr. HOAR. I understand; but what is the year of the statute?

Mr. COCKRELL. I am referring to section 2 of the act of August 7, 1882, which I have just read. The decision of the Secretary of the Interior and the Pension Office under that I will read. It is as follows:

1. Upon a careful consideration of the act of August 7, 1882, it is believed that it was not intended that it should be applied to any other pensioners or applicants for pension than those who claim as widows of soldiers.

That was decided by Secretary Teller July 19, 1883.

2. In the view of the Department the provisions of the act of August 7, 1882, above referred to, has no effect to deprive a widow of her pension if the adulterous cohabitation ceased before the passage of the act.

That decision was by Mr. Joslyn.

[Ruling No. 105, May 20, 1885.]

Where soldier died in service, and about the date of his enlistment his mother and father separated, the mother leaving home and joining a man with whom she has continued to live and cohabit to the present time: Held, that this relation of mistress and paramour precludes the idea of the dependence of the mother upon the soldier, and her claim for that reason should be rejected.

[Ruling No. 113, June 3, 1885.]

Pensioner's (widow's) name dropped from the rolls January 1, 1866, because of her assumption of marriage relations with one Creighton.

That was the ruling of the Pension Office in 1866—

Pensioner's (widow's) name dropped from the rolls January 1, 1866, because of her assumption of marriage relations with one Creighton. Claim made to restore her name to the rolls from date of dropping to August 7, 1882, the date of the approval of the act of Congress bearing upon the subject: Held, that the action by which the pension was terminated was proper, even admitting that the pensioner had not performed such an act as could be held to constitute legal marriage under the laws of the State of Maryland, where she resides.

It clearly has been the intent of Congress at all times, even prior to the passage of the act of August 7, 1882, to discountenance the claims of a certain class of soldiers' widows who dishonor the dead by living in adulterous cohabitation while drawing the pension allowed for the loss of the husband's support. A contrary view would simply have the effect of putting a premium upon a system of prostitution.

[Ruling No. 154, December 4, 1885.]

In a case where the widow of a colored soldier, since the death of her husband, was shown to have given birth to two illegitimate children, one before and one after the passage of the act of August 7, 1882, the Commissioner Held, that there could be no stronger proof of open and notorious adulterous cohabitation than the birth, out of wedlock, of two bastards.

No inquiry made as to whether the fathers were married men or single men—

The case is governed by the provisions of the act above referred to, and should be rejected.

There are a number of other decisions upon this identical question, and I say that it is as clear to my mind as a sunbeam that this widow is not entitled even to be restored to the pension-roll, except as a mere act of kindness on the part of the Government to an aged and decrepit woman, the widow of a deceased soldier. I say it would be simply a reward to prostitution and indiscriminate cohabitation to place this colored woman back upon the pension-roll and give her arrears of pension from 1878 up to this date, notwithstanding this law, which would have required the Commissioner of Pensions to have dropped her name long ago, and notwithstanding that the fact of illicit cohabitation is established beyond any question. And now I submit that the Committee on Pensions have gone entirely too far in recommending that she shall be paid arrears of pension in this case.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me, Mr. President, that this case ought to be recommitted to the committee for their reconsideration with a view of making their statement a little more distinct. The report does not say that this woman was dropped on an adjudication or finding by the Commissioner of these facts, or that they were established to his satisfaction. The report says she was dropped upon a certain claim. That might be ordinarily supposed to mean the same thing, but everybody who is familiar with the operations of the pension administration knows that there have been many cases where the mere claim in the Pension Office has been heeded and the pensioner temporarily, at any rate, dropped, where there has not been any thorough, rigid investigation, certainly where the parties have had no hearing.

In the next place, the committee report that the evidence is not sufficient to satisfy them, or something to that effect, of the character of the petitioner or of her behavior. There is no distinct finding one way or the other, whether they have got all the evidence the Pension Office had or whether the committee put it on the ground that on a re-examination they understand that there is such an error in the finding of the Pension Commissioner as to warrant the interposition of Congress.

It seems to me that the report should make the thing clear. I move, therefore, that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the best thing to do.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think that is a very good disposition of it. I want to read the papers myself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR. Before passing from that case I wish to say that I have this moment read the report, and I submit if this bill is to go back to the Committee on Pensions this woman is entitled to the ordinary rule in criminal cases, that the crime must be proved by evidence before the committee beyond reasonable doubt.

Mr. COCKRELL. I believe the Senator from New Hampshire is a member of the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR. I am a member of that committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then I suppose he will see that justice is done to this woman. But when an officer of this Government as high in position as the Commissioner of Pensions in 1878 made an adjudication, I think that adjudication is entitled to some consideration as well as a pretension that that adjudication was wrong.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRIS. Has not the bill been recommitted?

Mr. BLAIR. The committee has considered this case once, and has reported:

Although there is some evidence which might lead us to the conclusion that she had been guilty of illicit intercourse with men since she became a pensioner, we do not think that it is at all established that she has since her husband's death remarried, or that it is shown that her cohabitation with any one has been so continuous or notorious, acknowledged or reputed, as to be equivalent to marriage.

It will be seen by examining the report that the case has been carefully examined by the member of the committee to whom it was referred.

PUBLIC BUILDING IN LANSING, MICH.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 858, Senate bill 1200.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1200) for the erection of a public building in the city of Lansing, in the State of Michigan.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 4, after the word "purchase," to insert "or acquire by condemnation proceedings;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, or acquire by condemnation proceedings, a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices at the city of Lansing, in the State of Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OMAHA TRIBE OF INDIANS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 675, Senate bill 2267. It will take but a moment, and it is of importance.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2267) for the relief of the Omaha tribe of Indians in Nebraska. In view of the advanced condition of civilization of the Omaha tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska, and to enable the tribe to further improve their condition by making improvements upon their homesteads by the purchase of stock, cattle, agricultural implements, and other necessary articles, and in accordance with their wishes, the bill appropriates $70,000, being the last seven installments of $10,000 each, unappropriated and secured to the Indians under the fourth article of their treaty dated March 16, 1854, to be paid per capita in two annual installments of $35,000 each.

Mr. DAWES. There is another Senate bill before the Committee on Indian Affairs in reference to these Indians which may very properly be joined to this as an amendment, and I offer it as an amendment. I believe every one has agreed to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as new sections the following:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to extend the time of the payment of the purchase-money due for land sold on Omaha Indian reservation under the sales made by virtue of an act to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes, approved August 7, 1882, as follows: The time of each payment shall be extended for the period of two years beyond the time now fixed: Provided, That the interest on said payments shall be paid annually at the time said payments of interest are due: And provided further, That the act above mentioned, except as changed and modified by this act, shall remain in full force.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to declare forfeited all lands sold under said act upon which the purchaser shall be in default, under existing law, for sixty days after the passage of this act, in payment of any part of the purchase-money, or in the payment of any interest on such purchase-money for the period of two years previous to the expiration of said sixty days. The Secretary of the Interior shall thereupon without delay cause all such land, together with all tracts of land embraced in said act not heretofore sold, to be sold by public auction, after due notice, to the highest bidder over and above the original appraisal thereof, upon the terms of payment authorized in said act. And the proceeds of all such sales shall be covered into the Treasury, to be disposed of for the sole use of said Omaha tribe of Indians, in such manner as shall be hereafter determined by law.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior, with the consent of the Omaha tribe of Indians, expressed in such manner as he may determine, be, and he hereby is, authorized to set apart, from the unallotted and unassigned lands of said Omaha Indians in the State of Nebraska, not to exceed 5 acres of land, for the use and occupancy of the Woman's National Indian Association, to be used by the said association for missionary and educational purposes among the Indians; and the use and occupancy of the land so set apart to inure to said association and its successors so long as the same is used for the purposes herein specified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DAWES, the title was amended to read: "A bill for the relief of the Omaha tribe of Indians in Nebraska, and to extend the time of payment to purchasers of land of said Indians, and for other purposes."

PUBLIC BUILDING IN PAWTUCKET, R. I.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the Senate to proceed to Order of Business 798, being Senate bill 164.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 164) for the erection of a public building in the city of Pawtucket, R. I.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds reported the bill with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "sixty;" so as to read:

The site and the building thereon, when completed according to plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed the cost of $60,000.

Mr. ALDRICH. With the assent of the Senator reporting the bill [Mr. SPOONER] I move to amend the amendment by striking out "sixty" and inserting "seventy-five;" so as to make the amount $75,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was, in line 16, to fill the blank before the word "thousand" with the word "sixty;" so as to read:

And for the purposes herein mentioned the sum of $60,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to amend that by striking out "sixty" and inserting "seventy-five."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONUMENT TO MAJ. GEN. HENRY KNOX.

Mr. FRYE. I ask the Senate to take up Order of Business 688, being the bill (S. 449) for the erection of a monument to the memory of Maj. Gen. Henry Knox at Thomaston, Me.

Mr. BERRY. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Senator will withdraw the motion and let us pass this bill.

Mr. BERRY. I am not very much in favor of the erection of any more monuments. It is late in the evening, and I think I must insist on my motion. I want to reflect whether I am in favor of the bill or not.

Mr. KENNA. I hope the Senator will withdraw his motion. There are two or three matters that ought to be attended to.

Mr. BERRY. I withdraw the motion.

The bill was read.

Mr. BERRY. Is that bill subject to objection? ["No!"] I then renew the motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. DOLPH. On which I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FRYE. Rather than have several Senators disappointed in calling up bills, if the Senator from Arkansas objects to this bill I will withdraw it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I give notice now that bills which are objectionable will not be passed at this hour without a great deal of trouble.

Mr. FRYE. I did not suppose this would be objected to. Everybody knows who Henry Knox was.

Mr. KENNA. The Senator from Maine has yielded because of objection to his bill. That ought not to prejudice others who have bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. FRYE. I withdraw my request.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to state to the Senator from Maine that I think he has more bills passed than any other Senator. I do not know that there is any objection to this bill which would not apply to all other bills of a similar nature for monuments. I have made up my mind that so many appropriations for monuments all over the country are not proper, and I desire to submit a few remarks on this bill when it comes up. I was not ready to do so this evening, and that is the reason of my objection.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not understand the Senator to object to the consideration of other bills not of that character.

Mr. BERRY. I do not. I withdraw the motion to adjourn with the understanding that this bill goes over.

Mr. FRYE. I give notice that I will endeavor to call up the bill at an early day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be returned to the Calendar.

GOVERNMENT BUILDING AT CHARLESTON, W. VA.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed at this time to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3253) appropriating the sum of $52,000 for the enlargement and improvement of the United States Government building at Charleston, W. Va.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. The bill was reported this morning.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SALEM, OREGON.

Mr. DOLPH. I move to take up Order of Business 723, Senate bill No. 21, for present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 21) to provide for the construction of a public building at Salem, Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 29, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five;" so as to read:

And no purchase of site, nor plan for building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $75,000 for site and building.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BEACON LIGHTS ON ILLINOIS RIVER.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask consent to take up Senate bill 2085, Calendar No. 657.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "exceed," to fill the blank by inserting "seven;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Light-House Board be, and it is hereby, directed to establish such number of beacon-lights along the Illinois River as may, in the judgment of said board, be necessary for the proper protection of the navigation of said river: Provided, That the cost of the same shall not exceed $7,000, which sum is hereby appropriated for that purpose, to be expended under the supervision of the Light-House Board for the purpose herein provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BURLINGTON, IOWA.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask the Senate to take up Senate bill 2121, a bill reported this morning.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2121) authorizing the construction of a public building at Burlington, Iowa.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire by purchase or otherwise provide a site, and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fireproof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the post-office, internal-revenue office, and for other Government uses, at Burlington, in the State of Iowa. The site and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed the cost of $75,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited, after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site nor plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $75,000 for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Iowa shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein; and for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act the sum of $75,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended as directed herein.

The amendments were agreed to.

COUNTY OF LATAH, IDAHO TERRITORY.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask for the consideration of Order of Business 1005, being Senate bill 2671.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2671) to create and organize the county of Latah.

The bill was read.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to amend the bill by striking out the letter "s" at the end of the word "Nez Perces" wherever it occurs in the bill. The word is spelled wrong. It should be "Nez Percé."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the proposed amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be considered as agreed to. There will be no objection to it. It is simply a typographical error.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the letter "s" be stricken from the word "Nez Perces" wherever it occurs in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to that correction being made.

Mr. COCKRELL. Here is a bill to be passed by Congress which proposes to divide a county in a Territory and create a new county, define its jurisdiction and its liabilities, and all that. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Territories how it is that that committee has assumed jurisdiction in this matter, which is purely a local matter belonging to the Territorial Legislature, and which that Territorial Legislature alone is competent to pass upon, in my judgment.

Mr. PLATT. I am sorry this bill came up at this time. I do not think it ought to have been called up at such a stage.

Mr. MITCHELL. After that remark by the chairman of the committee, I will consent that it be laid aside with this statement——

Mr. PLATT. I should like, now that the bill is up, to make a statement about it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The word "Nez Perces" where it occurs will be amended by striking out the final letter "s."

Mr. PLATT. Have I the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut has the floor, if the Senator from Oregon has yielded.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the chairman yield to me one moment? I simply desire to state in justification of my calling up the bill at this late hour, that bills were being called up pretty generally in the Senate and this bill was introduced in both branches, referred to the Committee on Territories, and reported favorably. The delegation from the Territories, especially from Idaho Territory, are very anxious to have the bill passed, and they came to me as a delegation to-day urging as early action as possible. That is why I called it up.

Mr. PLATT. I do not wish to be understood as opposing the passage of the bill, but I do not think it ought to pass without an explanation of the circumstances why the Committee on Territories reported in favor of the bill, when, as I think, the Territorial Legislature has perfect authority to deal with such matters; and that would take some little time. I simply desire to say now before the bill passes from the consideration of the Senate, in order that it may not be supposed that I opposed the passage of the bill, that I wish, when the bill comes up, to state the circumstances which seem in the opinion of most of the committee to make it necessary that the bill should be reported favorably and passed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that the bill retain its place on the Calendar, and I give notice that I shall move to proceed to its consideration at the first favorable opportunity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will retain its place on the Calendar.

EMORY R. SEWARD.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (H. R. 7319) for the relief of Emory R. Seward.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to add the following proviso:

Provided, If in the judgment of the Secretary of War an amount exceeding the sum of $625, the estimated cost of completing the contract out of which this claim arises according to its terms, is necessary to complete such contract according to its requirements, or in a manner to meet the necessities of commerce at such point—the general plan of the work heretofore ordered being considered—then such excess shall be deducted from the above amount in making settlement with said Emory R. Seward.

So as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Emory R. Seward, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $8,174.79, for balance due said Seward for work done in removing rock at the entrance of New Rochelle Harbor, State of New York: Provided, If in the judgment of the Secretary of War, etc.

Mr. HISCOCK. I doubt if it is necessary in this case that the amendment should be adopted, and therefore I will give a word of explanation in reference to it.

This was a contract by which the contractor undertook to remove rock and make a certain depth of water at a certain point. He waited some eight or ten days for the engineers to examine and see if he had made the proper depth of excavation, believed that he had, and then removed his dredges and blasting apparatus. Afterwards a measurement was made, and it was ascertained that there were certain points at which the rock projected three or four inches above the point to which it should have been removed. A measurement was made by the Government, and it was ascertained that on both sides of the point the water was more shallow than where the excavation had been made. Nevertheless, the Government itself estimates that the cost of excavation will be the $625 which are indicated in the amendment. The report exhibits that the engineers in charge have estimated that amount, and the amount which the bill itself carries is the amount due the contractor, less the $625.

I dislike very much to have the bill sent back to the other House and go to the bottom of the Calendar, which would probably delay its passage and the payment of this sum of money to the contractor. Therefore I oppose the amendment and hope it may be voted down.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that the Senator will not ask the Senate to reject the amendment of the committee made to the bill at this late hour. Let us agree to the amendment and order a conference.

Mr. HISCOCK. Very well.

Mr. COCKRELL. There will be no trouble, then, in adjusting it, so that it will not go back on the House Calendar.

Mr. MITCHELL. What is the proposition?

Mr. HISCOCK. The proposition is that the amendment be adopted and a conference ordered. I will take that course, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment, and request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. WILSON of Maryland, were appointed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT STILLWATER, MINN.

Mr. SABIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 327) for the erection of a public building at Stillwater, Minn.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments, in line 4, after the words "directed to," to insert "acquire by condemnation or;" in line 5, after the word "building," to insert "with a fire-proof vault;" and in line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to acquire by condemnation or purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with a fire-proof vault, for the accommodation of the United States post-office at the city of Stillwater, Minn. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to the law, and shall not exceed, for the site and building complete, the sum of $50,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 18, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

NATHANIEL Q. HENDERSON.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Under Rule XXII is it proper to put into the petition-box a House resolution for the relief of a House employé, or should it be introduced in open House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that all these House resolutions should be introduced in the House. The rule to which the gentleman refers mentions bills only, while the other rule, which provides for the call of States and Territories on Monday mornings, includes resolutions.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The spirit of Rule XXII, however, would include a resolution of the kind to which I allude.

The SPEAKER. That would be perhaps the spirit of the rule; but the letter of the rule seems to be otherwise.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Then, in view of the ruling of the Chair, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for reference a House resolution which I send to the desk.

There being no objection, the following resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be requested to inform the House of Representatives what instructions, if any, have been given with reference to rates of postage on seeds, plants, bulbs, and printed circulars received from the Dominion of Canada; and whether existing postal laws, regulations, or treaties give any advantage to Canadian citizens over citizens of the United States engaged in similar business.

The committee report back the resolution, and recommend that it be passed.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask the gentleman in charge of this report whether he will admit an amendment to add these words: "And all correspondence or orders in relation to the interpretation and carrying out of the treaty subsequent to its ratification."

Mr. ENLOE. I have no authority to accept any amendment; but I presume this resolution is broad enough to cover the inquiry which the gentleman suggests. I will say that I am satisfied when this matter goes to the Department, the Postmaster-General will furnish the information which the gentleman seeks, provided it is not incompatible with the public interest, as that is within his discretion.

Mr. BINGHAM. As the gentleman from Tennessee says his resolution will include the information which I ask for, I am content.

TARIFF.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. MILLS. I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of taking up the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue. I will yield for a moment to my friend from Florida [Mr. DAVIDSON] to make a statement.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Mr. Speaker, in the hour for the consideration of bills the regular order would be the further consideration of the bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the claim of the State of Florida for expenses incurred in the suppression of Indian hostilities, which was pending before the House during the last consideration hour. But I am aware, sir, of the very great importance of the bill which the gentleman from Texas now proposes to call up, and I desire to state that if it were right for me to do so, I believe it would be altogether useless to attempt to antagonize the consideration of that bill by calling up the Florida bill, and hence I will not do it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills raising revenue.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of revenue bills.

The Clerk will report the title of the pending bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, in veiw of the importance of the debate about to take place, I ask that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means shall have unanimous consent to speak without limit as to time. I hope that consent will be given.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HARE. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. KELLEY. I understand the objection is withdrawn. The gentleman did not understand the request.

Mr. HARE. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. I am very much obliged to the House and to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for the courtesy extended to me.

Mr. Chairman, during our late civil war the expenditures required by an enormous military establishment made it necessary that the burdens of taxation should be laid heavily in all directions authorized by the Constitution. The internal-revenue and direct taxes were called into requisition to supplement the revenues arising from customs, to aid the Treasury to respond to the heavy demands which were being daily made upon it. The duties on imports were raised from an average on dutiable goods of 18.84 per cent. in 1861, to an average of 40.29 per cent. on dutiable goods during the five years from 1862 to 1866, inclusive. This was recognized at the time as an exceptionally heavy burden. It was stated by the distinguished gentleman who then presented to the House the bill so largely increasing the duties, and which to-day bears his honored name, that it was demanded by the exigencies of war and must cease on the return of peace. In his own words he said: "This is intended as a war measure, a temporary measure, and we must as such give it our support."

More than twenty years have elapsed since the war ended. A generation has passed away and a new generation has appeared on the stage since peace has returned to bless our common country; but these war taxes still remain; and they are heavier to-day than they were on an average during the five years of the existence of hostilities. The average rate of duty during the last five years, from 1883 to 1887, inclusive, on dutiable goods amounts to 44.51 per cent., and during the last year the average is 47.10 per cent. Instead of the rate of taxation being reduced to meet the wants of an efficient administration of government in time of peace, it continues to grow and fill the coffers of the Government with money not required for public purposes, and which rightfully should remain in the pockets of the people.

After Congress had so largely increased the duties on imports, and thus bestowed most liberal and generous bounties on our manufacturers, a light internal tax was imposed on the products of domestic manufacture to help the Government meet the heavy demands of war. The internal tax imposed on home manufactures was but a tithe of the heavy burden imposed on the people by the increased duties on foreign goods. It brought to the Treasury in 1866 $127,000,000—a sum which was less than 5 per cent. upon the value of the manufactured product of that year. It was thought not to be unreasonable to require this small contribution from those whose bounty Congress had increased from 18 to 40 per cent. in the price of their products.

But, Mr. Chairman, that tax is gone. It could not be retained. It was a tax on wealth. It came out of the pockets of the manufacturer. As soon as the war was ended complaint was made that this tax was a war tax, that it was no longer necessary, and it was repealed. Congress imposed a tax on incomes, too, to help the Government to meet the expenditures of war. It brought to the Treasury, in 1866, $72,000,000. The official reports showed that four hundred and sixty thousand one hundred and seventy persons out of the whole population had incomes above the exemption, and they had $707,000,000 of net annual income, while the balance of the people had nothing beyond what was required for annual support. Yet scarcely had the war ended until this tax was declared to be exceedingly odious, inquisitorial, and oppressive; and Congress was asked to repeal it, and it is gone.

Congress thought it was unjust to require 460,170 persons who had an annual income of $707,000,000 to pay anything to support the Government, and they hurriedly swept that "odious" measure from the statute-book. Besides these there were taxes on the receipts of railroad companies, taxes on insurance companies, taxes on express companies, taxes on bank capital, bank deposits, and bank checks, but they are gone. Congress lent a willing ear to the demands of wealthy corporations and individuals and took all the burden from them, but the war taxes on clothing, like the poor, we have always with us. These taxes were given up at a time when our interest-bearing debt of more than $2,000,000,000 was staring us in the face and demanding from the Government more than $140,000,000 annually to meet its interest.

With these facts before their eyes they made haste to roll all the burdens of taxation off the shoulders of the wealthy and lay them upon the shoulders of those who could only pay as they procured the means by their daily toil. Could not that $127,000,000 contributed by the manufacturers from the rich bounties which the Government had given have been retained until the war debt was paid? Could not the $72,000,000 from incomes been held for a few years longer? Could not the tax on the receipts of the wealthy corporations have been continued for one decade?

If these taxes had been kept ten years longer we would to-day have no national debt, and in addition to the moderate reductions now proposed we could give back to the people the hundred millions now required to pay its interest and sinking fund. Upon what economic principle or principle of justice were these taxes repealed and the whole burden laid on articles going into daily consumption, and which must be obtained by the labor of mind and muscle?

Was the tax of 3 per cent. on the domestic blanket paid by the manufacturer more oppressive then than the tax of 79 per cent. on both foreign and domestic blankets paid by the people?

Was the tax of 3 per cent. on a wool hat paid by the manufacturer more oppressive than the tax of 73 per cent. on both paid by the consumer? Was the tax of 3 per cent. on women's and children's clothing paid by the manufacturer more oppressive than the tax of 82 per cent. on both foreign and domestic goods of the same kind paid by the consumer? Was a tax of 3 per cent. on railroad companies, banking companies, insurance companies, express and telegraph companies, more oppressive than an 88 per cent. tax on woolen shawls? Was a 3 per cent. tax on incomes more oppressive than an 80 per cent. tax on a woolen shirt?

The party then in power certainly thought so, for the taxes on wealth are gone, but the war tax on clothing, the war tax on food, the war tax on the implements of labor still remain with us, and the war against our prosperity, our labor, and our commerce is still being vigorously prosecuted—a war that is exhausting in its destructive invasions on labor, whether it is employed in agriculture, manufactures, commerce, or mining. Every effort that has been made to bring this war on the industries of the country to an end and to restore the Government to the peace establishment has been resisted at every step, and so far every effort to end this unjustifiable invasion of the rights of the people has been defeated.

The gentlemen who represent the minority of the Committee on Ways and Means boast that they have reduced taxation $360,000,000. They point with pride to the splendid column which they have erected, but that column has no stone in it to tell of their devotion to the masses who live by daily toil. It is built of blocks of marble, every one of which speaks of favoritism to the wealthy, of special privileges to rich and powerful classes. In 1883 they finished this magnificent shaft, which they have been for years erecting, and crowned it with the last stone by repealing the internal tax on playing-cards and putting a 20 per cent. tax on the Bible.

We on this side of the House have been trying to reduce taxation on the necessaries of life to the people, and so far without success. The minority of the committee charge that we have accomplished nothing to compare with what they have done. That indeed would be a grave charge if the gentlemen who make it could show that their united opposition had not been thrown across our path at every step. But it does not lie in their mouths to charge this side of the House with failing to reduce taxation. Whenever we have brought bills into the House to reduce taxes on the necessaries of life they have mustered nearly their entire strength to defeat us.

The members from that side who have come to our help could be counted on the fingers of one hand. Twice they have stricken out the enacting clauses of our bills to reduce taxation and twice they have refused even to consider the question of reducing taxation on the people.

Now, sir, what has been the result of this policy? Enormous taxation upon the necessaries of life has been a constant drain upon the people—taxation not only to support all the expenditures of Government, but taxation so contrived as to fill the pockets of a privileged class, and taking from the people $5 for private purposes for every dollar that it carries to the public Treasury.

This is one of the vicious results of the war tariff. The taxes, both for public and private purposes, are paid by labor. They are assessed on labor. Now, let us see how it benefits labor, as it is claimed to do. Suppose a laborer who is earning a dollar a day by his work finds a suit of woolen clothes that he can buy for $10 without the tariff tax, then the suit of clothes can be procured for ten days' work; but the manufacturer comes to Congress and says, "I must be protected against the man buying this cheap suit of clothes," and Congress protects him by putting a duty of 100 per cent., or $10 more. Now it will require the laborer to work twenty days to get his suit of clothes. Now tell me if ten days of his labor have not been annihilated? Has he not been required to work twice as long under the tariff as he would have done without to obtain his suit of clothes?

But how has that duty affected the manufacturer? If it required him to work ten days to produce the suit of clothes worth $10, he now produces them by five days' work, for he receives $20 for ten days' work, and, of course, $10 for five days' work. The manufacturer has had his work reduced half, the laborer has had his increased double. But it is said that the tariff helps the laborer by doubling his pay, because it builds up manufactures everywhere. But if that is true the tariff at the same time that it doubles the value of the manufacturer's product ought to double the value of the laborer's pay; but the tariff takes his money and puts it in the pockets of the manufacturer and pays him in promises which it never redeems.

There are woolen goods, as we have shown in the report of the committee, bearing duties from 100 to 180 per cent., but I have taken 100 per cent. for the greater ease of illustrating the effect. The benefits of the tariff all go one way. They go from the consumer to the manufacturer, but not from the manufacturer to the consumer. Suppose that the tax on the 60,000,000 of consumers amounts to $10 per head, then it is a tax of six hundred millions; if it is only $5 per head, it is three hundred millions taken out of the pockets of the consumer and put into the pockets of the manufacturers. The tax on the four hundred millions of goods imported goes into the public Treasury; the tax levied on domestic manufactures, by raising their price, goes into the pockets of the manufacturers.

But, Mr. Chairman, the excessive taxation imposed on the people is not the largest injury that it inflicts upon them.

The greatest evil that is inflicted by it is in the destruction of the values of our exports. Remember that the great body of our exports are agricultural products. It has been so through our whole history. From 75 to over 80 per cent. of the exports of this country year by year are agricultural products. Cotton is first, then bread stuffs, pork, beef, butter, cheese, lard. These are the things that keep up our foreign trade, and when you put on or keep on such duties as we have now—war duties which were regarded as so enormous even in the very midst of hostilities that they were declared to be temporary—when you put on or retain those duties, they limit and prohibit importation and that limits or prohibits exportation. It takes two to make a trade. All the commerce of all the countries of the world is carried on by an exchange of commodities—commodities going from the country where they are produced at the least cost to seek a market in those countries where they can either not be produced at all or where they can be produced only at the highest cost of production.

We are the great agricultural country of the world, and we have been feeding the people of Europe, and the people of Europe have got to give us in exchange the products of their labor in their shops; and when we put on excessive duties for the purpose of prohibiting the importations of their goods, as a necessary result we put an excessive duty upon the exportation of our own agricultural products. And what does that do? It throws our surplus products upon our own markets at home, which become glutted and oversupplied, and prices go down. So it is with the people of Europe who are manufacturing and producing things that we can not produce, but which we want. Their products are thrown upon their home markets, which are glutted and oversupplied, and their prices likewise go down. And whenever, from any cause, prices start up in Europe, our tariff being levied mainly by specific duties upon quantity, not upon value, the tariff goes down, and then we see large importation and, as a result, large exportation.

Then we see a rise in agricultural products; then we see the circulation of money all through the whole of our industrial system; we see our people going to work, our manufactories starting up, and prosperity in every part of the land. Witness the history of 1880. After the long depression lasting from 1873 to 1880 prices suddenly rose in Europe. The prices of all the products which they export to us began to rise in the latter part of the year. What was the result? As prices rose there the tariff went down, the obstructions became lower, and the imports came in.

Our imports increased about $200,000,000 in one year. What was the result of that? Our exports increased largely. The prices of wheat, of cotton, of corn, of all the products that we export went up; not only the prices of that which was exported, but also the prices of that which was consumed at home. We exported in 1880 $685,000,000 worth of agricultural products, and in 1881 $730,000,000. During last year we exported only $523,000,000 worth of agricultural products. About 15 per cent. of our agricultural products have to seek a foreign market, and in 1881 the proportion rose to 20 per cent.

I have a letter here, which I will not stop to read, from the statistician of the Agricultural Department, in which he places the value of the present crop of the United States at three billions five hundred millions, and he says that if the prices of 1880 now obtained the value of the crops would be in excess of four billion dollars. Here, then, is a loss, according to this estimate, of not less than $500,000,000. How much greater the value of the crop would be he does not say.

But when we see the prices of agricultural products in 1881, when we exported $730,000,000 worth of agricultural products, and then compare them with 1887, when the export of agricultural products fell to $523,000,000, we can form some estimate of the great loss to our farmers by stopping exportation. In 1881 wheat was worth $1.19 per bushel; it is now 68 cents. In 1881 corn was worth 63 cents per bushel; it is now worth 44 cents. The exports of our agricultural products have fallen during the last year far below those of 1881, and the prices have correspondingly fallen.

If the prices of 1881 obtained to-day the wheat crop of 1887 would be increased over its present value $232,000,000, and if by exportation to foreign markets we could have each year since 1881 realized the price of that year, the wheat-growers would have realized on their annual crops since then a thousand millions of dollars more than they did. In the low prices of corn since then they have lost double that. Some part of the low prices is to be attributed to large crops, but by far the greater cause is the restriction of the market for the sale of farm products.

If the tariff imposed a revenue duty sufficient to obtain money enough to support the Government but not high enough to impede importation, then our foreign trade would grow rapidly and our agricultural products would find ample markets and good prices. But just as long as we continue to stop importation by high duties, just so long will we stop exportation; and our agricultural surplus continuing to increase and its markets being limited the prices must continue low. The tariff robs the farmer on one side by increasing the prices of what he buys; it robs him on the other by decreasing the price of what he sells.

But it is insisted that if we lower the duties and let foreign goods be imported it will stop our manufactories—that it will turn our people out of employment or reduce their wages. It will do nothing of the sort. What will we import and what did we import when prices rose and the duties fell in 1880? We imported more of the same articles which we were importing before the prices rose. We will import more of the things we can not produce or which can be produced cheaper in other countries than at home. If we look to our table of imports in 1880, we will see that over sixty millions of the increase was of articles in the free-list and about one hundred and twenty-five millions in the dutiable list. The increase of imports free of duty will not hurt the manufacturer or the laborer.

We always import more coffee, more tea, more of everything that is required to meet the wants of the people when prices are high, because when prices are high the country is more prosperous and the people are better able to buy and pay for what they want, and the tariff is then lower and dutiable articles are more largely imported to compete for sale with the home products. In looking through our consumption statement we see that a certain line of articles are imported from year to year; then observing the periods when prices are high and the tariff low you will see that the same articles are imported in larger quantities.

Our manufacturers do not then stop. They go on with increased activity. They did not stop in 1880 when the large importation set in. It gave them renewed life; their wheels flew faster, their machinery worked more constantly, and their operatives were all employed. Why is this? Why, Mr. Chairman, we can produce at least 90 per cent. of all the manufactures consumed in this country more cheaply at home than they can be produced anywhere in the world and delivered here. This 90 per cent. which we can produce at a lower cost than any other people can will not be hurt by importation.

I have here a letter from the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, which shows that in 1850 with a low tariff the consumption of domestic manufactures in the United States was 88.39 per cent. of the whole, and of imports 11.61 per cent. In 1860, with a still lower tariff, our home manufactures constituted 87.57 per cent. and the consumption of imports was 12.43 per cent. In 1870 the consumption of domestic manufactures was 93.14 per cent. and 6.86 per cent. of imports, and in 1880 were consumed 92.58 per cent. of home manufactures and 7.42 per cent. of foreign manufactures. Now, it is evident from these figures that under any circumstances we can hold 90 per cent. of the market against the world.

If we had no tariff, if all the custom-houses were torn down and the Government was supported by direct taxation, not more than 10 per cent. of all the manufactured products consumed by all the people would be imported into the country. Senator SHERMAN, in a speech delivered three months ago, quoted a statement of ex-Consul Dudley, that nine-tenths of all the articles of manufacture consumed by the people could be procured as cheaply here as in England. He indorsed the statement as correct. I deny the accuracy of the statement. If he had said that nine-tenths of all the manufactures consumed in the United States could be produced more cheaply here than in England he would have been nearer the truth. If nine-tenths of all the manufactures consumed here are cheaper here than in England it is because they are produced at a lower cost. Then what objection does he see to reducing the tariff?

What use have our manufacturers for the tariff at all? Why are they constantly beseeching Congress not to ruin them by reducing the war rates? They can produce nine-tenths of their products and sell them cheaper than their rivals in England, but they do not do it. If they do sell nine-tenths of their products cheaper than English manufacturers, why is it that they and our friends on the other side not only resist every effort that we make to reduce these war taxes, but are asking now that the tariff on woolen goods shall be raised? Why are they demanding that woolen cloth shall be raised to 128 per cent., women's and children's dress goods to 102, flannels to 121 per cent., hats to 134 per cent., and knit goods to 135 per cent.? Why do they resist the reduction of the duty on steel rails to $11 a ton? Why oppose the slight reduction we propose in cotton goods?

The manufacturer is not so much interested now in the foreign market as the farmer. Less than 2 per cent. of the $7,000,000,000 of his annual product goes to the foreign market; but the farmer sends 15 per cent. of his products there, and would send a larger per cent. if the way was open. The manufacturer looks to the home market for the sale of 98 per cent. of his product. Then is it not a matter of the deepest concern to him to have that home market prosperous? Is not every one who sells goods interested in having customers able to purchase and pay for everything they want? Would not manufacturers make more money by selling their goods to American people with pockets full of money than to wild Indians who had none?

It is essential to the American manufacturer that he shall have a prosperous market in which there is a constant and active demand for his goods, and that he have such market both at home and abroad so that his customers may be as many as possible, that they be constantly increasing in pecuniary ability so that they can buy largely and pay promptly for all they buy. These things being true, and his dependence being almost exclusively on the home market, he should do everything in his power to help his customers grow in wealth. Who are his customers? The farmers. How are they to become prosperous and grow in wealth? By selling their products in the markets that demand them and offer for them the highest price. Where are those markets? In foreign countries. But those markets are closed to him unless Congress will let him bring back the goods he will obtain in exchange. If to-day the barriers against importation were broken down and our imports should increase from two to three hundred millions, that importation would create a demand for that amount of agricultural products to be exported to pay for them, and that would increase the price of farm products all through the land. It would distribute money among the whole sixty millions of people, placing a dollar beside every want with which it could be satisfied. He would find that he had a market then at home far more valuable to him than it would be with the 10 per cent. of importations kept out and the prices of all farm products forced down so low that the farmers would have nothing with which to buy.

But, Mr. Chairman, it is said that this will injure our labor. It is said a high tariff makes high wages for labor. It is said if we reduce the tariff wages must be reduced. How is it high tariff makes high wages for labor? How can it be explained? Why, they say, as a matter of course, if you increase the value of the domestic product, the manufacturer is able to pay higher wages. Unquestionably he is, but does he do it? No. Mr. Jay Gould, with his immense income from his railroad property, is able to pay his bootblack $500 a day, but does he do it? Oh, no; he pays the market price of the street. He gets his boots blacked and pays his nickel like a little man. [Laughter.] Mr. Vanderbilt, from the income arising from the interest on the immense amount of bonds of the Federal Government he has got, can afford to pay his hostler $10,000 a year. He is able to do it; his bonds enable him to do it, but does he do it? Oh, no; he goes out into the market and employs his labor at the market value, and pays the same price that the humblest citizen in New York does.

High tariff does not regulate wages. Wages are regulated by demand and supply and the capacity of the laborer to do the work for which he is employed. If high tariff regulated wages how is it the wages in the different States of the Union are different while the tariff is all the same from Maine to California? In every part of the territory of the United States the tariff is the same. How is it the wages are not the same? How is it that wages in the different localities in the different States are different? What is the cause? What is it which disturbs the tariff and prevents it from fixing a high rate of wages all over the country for labor?

We find by the census the rate of wages in the cotton industry is lower in Rhode Island than in Pennsylvania, and we find the wages in the iron business are higher in Rhode Island than in Pennsylvania. Why is that so? It is not the tariff that does it, it is the demand and supply of the people to do the work demanded of them. There are more cotton operatives in Rhode Island and the supply is greater, and therefore the wages are lower. The same thing is true about the iron business in Pennsylvania. The wages of cotton operatives in Pennsylvania are higher because there are fewer in Pennsylvania than in the State of Rhode Island. It is not the tariff that regulates the wages. Well, what is it that fixes the high rate of wages in this country?

It is admitted by all who are well informed on this subject that our rate of wages is higher than anywhere else in the world, that England is higher than France, and that the rate of wages is higher in France than in Germany. Why is this? Germany and France both have a protective tariff to guard against the free-trade labor of England. What then is it that makes higher wages? It is coal and steam and machinery. It is these three powerful agents that multiply the product of labor and make it more valuable, and high rate of wages means low cost of product. A high rate of wages means that cheap labor has got to go; and the history of our country in the last fifty years demonstrates that as clearly and as conclusively as any mathematical problem can be demonstrated.

Fifty years ago, Mr. Edward Atkinson shows, it required five persons, two carders, two spinners, and one weaver, working by the old methods, to make eight yards of cloth in one day. They got 20 cents a day; a dollar for the whole five. The labor cost of the cloth was 12½ cents a yard, and calculating 300 working days in a year the whole product of these five cheap laborers was 2,400 yards of cloth; but when coal and steam and machinery were harnessed together to produce cloth, five persons to-day in New England produce 140,000 yards of cloth. The labor cost of the cloth is 1.08 cents per yard. The wages of labor, instead of being $60 a year, or 20 cents a day, is $287 per annum for each.

The result of the labor-saving machinery used was an enormous increase in productive capacity. The result of that was a great increase in the rate of wages, and the further result was a great decrease in the cost of production. The old hand-wheel and the old methods of labor have had to depart before the all-conquering march of coal and steam and machinery. They had to go because the small amount of product of the article drove them out of the field. It is not the rate of wages, it is the article which the labor makes and the cost at which that article can be produced—the lower cost—which drives the rival article out of the market. Such is the history which has been written in our country in the last half century.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Edward Atkinson, one of the clearest thinkers and writers on political economy of the present day, in his little book on The Distribution of Products, lays down the principle that high rate of wages means low cost of product, and low rate of wages means high cost of product. He says that "the cheapest man is the one who works the greatest amount of machinery with the least stops." I read a paragraph from his book, on page 44:

> In any given country like the United States, where the people are substantially homogeneous, where the means of intercommunication are ample, where there are no hereditary or class distinctions, and where there is no artificial obstruction to prevent commerce, high rates of wages in money will be the natural and therefore necessary result of low cost of production in labor.

Again, on page 46, he says:

> Hence, it follows that although the total production of any given thing may not be concentrated at the very best point, it will yet be found to be true that where the conditions are the best, the cost, measured in terms of days of labor, will be lowest, and the wages, measured in terms of money per day, will be the highest, the high money wages being the necessary consequence of the low labor cost. Conversely, low rates of money wages are the natural and necessary result of a high labor cost of production.

Now, then, "it follows," he says, on page 56,

> That the nation which has diminished the quantity of human labor in greatest measure by the application of machinery produces goods at the lowest cost, and by exchange with the hand-working nations, who still constitute the majority of the people of the world, is, by way of such exchange, enabled to pay the highest rate of wages in money, because their goods are made at the lowest labor cost.

In order to prove that fact Mr. Atkinson made an investigation into the condition of two old manufacturing houses in the State of New Hampshire; he compared two periods—1830 with the year 1884. He found that in 1830 the wages per annum were $164 in gold to each operative. This increased until 1884, when it amounted to $290 in gold.

Now as to the efficiency of the labor employed. In 1830 the total number of yards of cloth produced by each operative was 4,321 per annum, while in 1884, mainly by the aid of improved machinery, it had been increased to 28,032 yards. The cost of the labor per yard was 1.9 cents in 1830, and but 1.07 cents in 1884.

Let us now reduce these differences to percentages and compare them in that form. There was, as I have shown, a great increase in the productive capacity of each operative, but there was a decrease in operatives per thousand spindles of 60 per cent.

The pound of material turned out by each spindle or operative was taken as a unit of measurement, and Mr. Atkinson's table shows that the pounds that each spindle turned out was increased 22 per cent., and the pound that each operative turned out in a day had increased 190 per cent.; the pounds that each operative turned out per hour increased 240 per cent. The increase of wages of operatives per hour (for the number of hours were made less) increased 240 per cent. The wages of the operative per annum had increased 64 per cent., and per hour 94 per cent., while the labor cost per yard had decreased 41 per cent. The other house showed the same condition. It showed that productive efficiency had increased in spindles 276 per cent., in pounds per operative 214 per cent., while wages increased 77 per cent., and labor cost per yard decreased 44 per cent.

This great revolution in production, wages, and cost is not the work of the tariff, but of coal, steam, and machinery. These three powerful agents have produced these marvelous results. The effects inevitably follow the cause—high rate of wages because so much more service is rendered the employer, low cost of product because so much more is done in a given time. I repeat it, the tariff has had nothing to do with bringing about the great change, and it is impotent, utterly impotent, to increase the rate of wages.

But, Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to a statement found in the report of the United States Census. This is the report in reference to the wages in the manufacturing industries of the country, and I call special attention to a report of an ax-manufacturing establishment in Connecticut on page 158. This gentleman who makes the report compares the operations of his house from his books in 1840 with 1880. In steel fitting, in ax making, each operative turned out 600 pieces per day in 1840. In 1880 each operative turned out 1,250 pieces per day. Each operative received in 1840 24 cents per hundred pieces, and received in 1880 20 cents per hundred pieces. He earned in 1840 $1.44 a day, and in 1880, though he received less for each piece, he earned $2.50 per day.

And this table includes all the different parts of the manufacture of the ax—the poll-making, rough-polishing, tempering, finishing, grinding, painting, backing, etc.; and in every department of this manufacture in making axes the same rule is observed—that is, the increased productive power increases the wages and decreases the cost of the product. That follows as shadow follows substance, as night follows day. It is the effect following the cause. It is the cause producing the effect—that as the laborer is more efficient and more valuable to his employer, as he turns out more work, he is entitled to and receives more pay. He receives more wages by the day, even though he is paid less for each piece of work he turns out.

Now, was the increase of the daily wages of these operatives due to the tariff? Let the manufacturer answer. He says: "The following table shows the results of labor-saving machinery, together with the increase in the efficiency of labor in the manufacture of axes, from 1840 to 1880." When I saw these tables, proving the principle so clearly presented and so strongly enforced by Mr. Atkinson, I went to our very able and efficient chief of labor, Hon. Carroll D. Wright, and asked him to have a table like this in the Census Report prepared, and to send an intelligent agent into some of the oldest houses in the country and get a statement from their books and send it to me, that I might see if there was a different result in other establishments. I now give you the testimony of those houses to add to the others.

There are here seven establishments. The first one is in Massachusetts. A comparison is instituted between 1849 and 1884, and the industry is cotton print cloth. Each operative made in 1849 in this factory 44½ yards per day; in 1884 he made 98.2 yards, an increase of productive power of 120 per cent. What wages did he get? The average daily earnings of the laborer in 1849 were 66 cents, and in 1884 $1. His wages increased 50 per cent. The labor cost of the product decreased 32 per cent.

In that same establishment in 1849 the wages of weavers were 65 cents a day, and each man turned out 113 yards of cloth. In 1884 the wages had risen to $1.06, and each weaver turned out 273 yards of cloth.

In the second house, also in Massachusetts, manufacturing printed cloths, each laborer in 1850 produced 42 yards; in 1884 he produced 102 yards, an increase of 142 per cent. His earnings were 65 cents a day in 1850 and $1.05 in 1884. The increase in wages was 61 per cent. The decrease in the labor cost of the article was 33 per cent.

The third house, manufacturing sheeting in Massachusetts, showed that each laborer in 1852 produced 41 yards, and in 1886 73 yards of cloth. His productive efficiency increased 77 per cent. His wages increased 49 per cent. The labor cost of the cloth decreased 15 per cent.

In the fourth house, in New Hampshire, manufacturing print cloth, each laborer in 1852 produced 42.5 yards and in 1886 103 yards. The increase in productive capacity was 142 per cent. The increase in wages was 56.7 per cent., and the labor cost per yard decreased 35 per cent.

Without going all through these figures the facts as to each one of these houses show in every instance that the productive efficiency of the laborer had increased, and that corresponding with that the wages had increased and the cost of the product had decreased.

Now, then, the tariff had nothing to do with any of these results. During this time we had high tariffs and low tariffs, but whether high tariff or low tariff, or no tariff, the productive efficiency continued to increase, the multiplication of production by the power of machinery continued to increase, and wages rose with it, and the cost of the product sunk. So that the tariff conferred no benefit on the laborer; none whatever.

But now let us see what effect a reduction of the duties will have by letting in the goods of England and other foreign countries into our markets to compete with our people and to endanger the laborers of our country, as it is charged it will do. I say the same proposition for which I have been contending is demonstrated again when we compare the laborer of this country with the laborer of England. We produce cheaper than in England because a high rate of wages means low cost of product, and a higher rate of wages means lower cost of product, and the highest rate of wages means lowest cost of product.

Mr. Wright, Chief of the Labor Bureau, instituted a most painstaking examination into the rates of labor in England and Massachusetts a few years ago, and showed the rates of labor higher in this country than in England; 12 per cent. higher in cotton manufacture; 25 per cent. in the manufacture of woolens, 26 per cent. in iron and steel, 128 per cent. in boots and shoes. That would seem to indicate, according to the philosophy which has been taught in this country by protectionists for many years, that we are on the road to ruin because our rate of labor is higher than in England and other countries. But the reverse of that proposition is true; and the fact that the rate of wages is higher here than in England shows that England is distanced in the great industrial contest into which she has entered.

Now let me give you an instance here in boots and shoes. If we pay so much higher wages in producing boots and shoes, if the proposition we hear on the other side be true, we can not enter into any contest with Great Britain when we pay 128 per cent. higher wages than she does. Yet we import no boots and shoes at 30 per cent. duty from England. We make the cheapest boots and shoes and the finest made in the world. In that England can not contest with us; and the fact that the rate of wages is so much higher here than in England shows that she is far behind in the race.

Let us see. Here is a gentleman writing in Harper's Magazine in 1885, a very able article entitled "A pair of shoes." He takes the history of the hide from the cow and follows it through all its mutations into the finest products of manufacture. This is not an article on wages; but it contains a paragraph on wages.

Mr. COX. By whom is the article written?

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Howard Newhall is the writer. He says:

American ladies' shoes wholesaling at $1.50 per pair, cost for labor of making 25 cents. English ladies' shoes wholesaling at $1.50 per pair, cost for labor of making 34 cents. American men's shoes wholesaling at $2.60 per pair, cost for labor of making 33 cents. English men's shoes wholesaling at $2.60 per pair, cost for labor of making 50 cents. In the report of the Massachusetts bureau of statistics for 1884 the general average weekly wage in Massachusetts is given as 128.9 per cent. higher than in Great Britain. The general average weekly wage in Massachusetts is given as $11.63 per week, and in Great Britain $5.08.

Now, what is the solution of all this? What does it mean? In Massachusetts wages are 128.9 per cent. higher than they are in Great Britain, but the labor cost of a pair of ladies' shoes in Massachusetts is less than the labor cost of a like pair of shoes in Great Britain. The cost is 25 cents in Massachusetts against 34 cents in England. The labor cost of men's shoes in Massachusetts is 33 cents per pair; the labor cost of men's shoes in England is 50 cents. If our people are to be injured by the importation of English shoes into this country the English shoe must be produced at a lower cost than the American shoe; otherwise it can not take the market.

It is not the rates of wages in England and in America respectively, $5.08 against $11.63, that we have to consider, but it is the labor cost of the pair of shoes. Now, the man holds the market who can sell his goods cheapest, and the man can sell cheapest who gets his goods at the lowest cost, and that is the man in Massachusetts. What, then, does this difference of wages mean, $11.63 per week in Massachusetts against $5.08 in England? It simply means increased productive efficiency; it means that the productive efficiency of the American workman engaged in this industry is greater than that of the British workman by 128.9 per cent.

In order for the American to earn his $11.63 a week he makes 35 pairs of men's shoes in a week; the Englishman, to earn his $5.08 a week, makes 10 pairs of men's shoes. In order for the American workman to earn his $11.63 per week he makes 46 pairs of ladies' shoes; in order for the Englishman to earn his $5.08 per week he makes 15 pairs of ladies' shoes. The tariff did not make the American workingman's wages $11.63 per week. It was the number of shoes he made that regulated his wages, and superior skill in using machinery gave him the capacity to make more shoes than the Englishman.

Here is the solution of the whole question, and the principle is the same that I have been supporting all along. That principle is that the higher rate of wages means a higher productive power; it is increased pay for increased work; it is not the tariff; it is more work; it is more efficient work; it is better work; it is cheaper work. It is that that holds the market; and it holds the boot and shoe market of this country against the importation of a single pair of shoes from Great Britain, notwithstanding the fact that wages there are $5.08 a week as against $11.63 in Massachusetts.

Mr. HERBERT. Free hides also help you out on that point.

Mr. MILLS. England also has free hides. A few years ago, in 1879, our English friends across the water took alarm about the growth and development of our cotton industry in the United States, and they sent an expert—a gentleman thoroughly conversant with the cotton business of England—to the United States to make a thorough and searching investigation into the whole business of cotton manufacture in this country, and to report to them whether their industry was imperiled by that of the United States. That gentleman went to New England, the seat of the cotton industry in this country. He made a thorough and searching investigation, and in every instance he showed that we could produce cotton goods at a lower labor cost than they could be produced at any point in Great Britain. I have here the tabular statement that he gave to his people when he returned.

The following are the rates of wages for weaving and spinning cloths in some of the principal districts of England and America, as shown by his report:

A piece 28 inches, 56 reeds, 14 picks (?), 60 by 56, 58 yards, costs at Ashton-under-Lyne, in England, 24.68 cents to weave; in Rhode Island it costs 16.82 cents. At Blackburn, in England, it costs 25.4 cents; at Providence, R. I., it costs 17.26 cents; at Stockport, England, 25.4 cents, at Fall River, 19.96 cents; at Hyde, England, 25.28 cents; at Lowell, 19.96 cents. In every instance the labor cost of the production of the cotton goods is lower here than in England. Now let us turn to the summary. At Fall River the wages in a pound of print cloth, about 7 yards, is 6.907 cents; at Lowell it is 6.882 cents; in Rhode Island it is 6.422; in Pennsylvania, 6.44; in England, 6.96 cents. In every place in the United States, in Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island, the labor cost of producing a pound of print cloth was lower than at any point in England.

A MEMBER. And the wages higher.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Then what harm does the tariff do?

Mr. MILLS. What good does it do? It enables you to make "trusts," combinations, and "pools" by keeping foreign products out of the market. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. I will answer the gentleman if he will give me the opportunity. I will tell him what good it does. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. MILLS. Now, Mr. Chairman, when we come to look at the last column of these figures the picture changes. What do we find when we come to look at the total product, with the cost of the material thrown in, and all the other elements besides labor? While the labor cost is lowest in the United States, where the rate of wages is highest, yet when we come to examine the cost of the material, England beats us, because she produces the goods at a total cost lower than ours. It is not the labor that causes this difference; it is the cost of the material. The machinery by which you run your establishments costs you 45 per cent.; your dye-stuffs are more costly than in England; all these things which enter into the manufacture of goods cost more here than on the other side. But do not charge this increased cost to labor. You are not paying the laborer, in proportion to the work that he does, as much as he receives in England.

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman allow me——

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. MILLS (to Mr. BRUMM). Go ahead.

Mr. BRUMM. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the cost of cotton in England was less than the cost of cotton in this country?

Mr. MILLS. You understood me to say that the labor cost of producing a pound of print-cloth was lower in this country than in England. You understood me further to say that the total cost, including materials and everything else, is lower in England than in the United States.

Mr. BRUMM. Therefore, does not that say that cotton, being the raw material out of which the cotton goods are made, must be lower in England than in this country?

Mr. MILLS. Oh, no; not at all; of course not.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MILLS. It means that England procures her machinery at less cost than we do ours. It means that England produces the dies which enter into the manufacture of these goods cheaper because untaxed. That is what it means.

Mr. KELLEY. I protest against these interruptions of the gentleman's speech.

Mr. MILLS. I do not. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman, as the organ of his party, is expounding its doctrine, and these interruptions are, in my judgment, impertinences. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLS. Now, Mr. Chairman, when we come to look at the total cost of this pound of calico cloth we find that at Fall River it is 14 cents (leaving off fractions); at Lowell, 13 cents; in Rhode Island, 11 cents; in Pennsylvania, 15 cents; in England, 12 cents. England produces the goods at a total cost less than ours, and that gives her the market; but while the goods cost more here, she pays more in the form of wages.

Now, when this gentleman goes back home after this general survey of the whole business he reports to his people elaborately. I refer to this little book published in England, given to me by my friend, Hon. Carroll D. Wright, the Chief of the Bureau of Labor. He goes back and tells his people——

Be still, sad heart, and cease repining;
Behind the clouds the sun is still shining.

These people over in the United States, while they beat us in labor, while they can produce anything in the cotton business at a labor-cost cheaper than we can, are, like Ephraim "joined to their idols." They maintain high tariff on raw materials, and therefore the cost of materials entering into their manufactures is higher than with us. It will take a great revolution to change their minds on this subject; and as long as they hold to the policy of high tariff on materials which enter into manufactures you may go to sleep in security, for England holds the markets of the world.

This is his language:

> While, however, the American nation heaps duties upon the import of foreign machinery, thus increasing the price of mill construction, and in other ways by her tariff arrangements artificially raising the cost of production, American manufactures will continue too high in price to compete with English in all but exceptional cases.

Now, this statement in regard to the cotton industry is supported by a statement from Secretary Blaine. A few years ago, while he was Secretary of State, he said in his report, in speaking of the cotton industry:

> Undoubtedly the inequalities in the wages of English and American operatives are more than equalized by the greater efficiency of the latter and their longer hours of labor. If this should prove to be a fact in practice, as seems to be proven from official statistics, it will be a very important element in the establishment of our ability to compete with England for our share of the cotton trade of the world.

I am reading from Mr. Blaine's report on the cotton-goods trade of the world.

Mr. Charles S. Hill, statistician of the State Department, makes a statement that I think is extravagant, and I would not quote it but he is a pronounced protectionist. I would not quote it if he were a revenue reformer, because I think it is too strong.

In his argument before the Tariff Commission he says that our manufacturing product in 1882 was $8,000,000,000, made by 5,250,000 hands, and that for the same time the product of England was $4,000,000,000, made by 5,140,200 hands. In submitting this statement he says:

> Here is the positive proof that American mechanics in the aggregate accomplish exactly double the result of the same number of British mechanics. They are therefore very justly paid double in wages.

I think he places the value of the whole product far too high in the United States. He places it at $8,000,000,000 in 1882, when our best statisticians put it at $7,000,000,000 now. If he would reduce it to $6,000,000,000, and it was over $5,000,000,000 in 1880, it may be reasonable; but to say the product was $6,000,000,000 in 1882, it would show still that the efficiency of our labor is from 40 per cent. to 50 per cent. greater than that of Great Britain. Our consul at Tunstall, England, makes this report: That in cotton manufactures our productive capacity is 33 per cent. greater than England and 72 per cent. greater than Germany. In woolen manufactures our productive capacity is 23 per cent. greater than England and 40 per cent. greater than Germany. In silk manufacture our productive capacity is 18 per cent. greater than England and 32 per cent. greater than Germany.

Mr. FORD. That is the product per man?

Mr. MILLS. Yes, that is the product per man. Taking that as the average, how is it possible for these countries, where the rate of wages is low and the labor cost is high, how is it possible for those people to bring their product into our markets and drive ours out?

I will refer to another instance before I close, and that is to a table which is to be found in the first annual report of the Bureau of Labor, pages 132 and 133, which gives the cost of spinning one pound of cotton yarn in England and in Germany. Germany has a protective duty on cotton yarn, while England welcomes the whole world to contest with her.

England with a higher rate of wages exports annually into Germany cotton yarns to the value of ten to eleven millions of dollars, and that over a duty, if I remember rightly, of 10 per cent. The German manufacturers find that they can buy cotton yarns cheaper in England, where the rate of wages is much higher than in Germany. If we look at these tables we will see the reason. Here are two tables giving the labor cost and whole cost of spinning cotton yarns of any number from 1 up to 177. One is the cost in Alsace, Germany, and the other in England, and they show that in every number the labor cost and the whole cost per pound are less in England than in Germany, notwithstanding the higher rate of wages which is paid in England.

Is it the tariff that makes English wages higher than German? Germany has the tariff but England has the trade. If these statements are true, what is there to prevent us from being the greatest manufacturing and exporting country of the world? We are the greatest agricultural people in the world. We exceed all others in the products of manufacture, but we export next to nothing of our product. Why should we not export the three hundred and seventy-five millions of cotton goods which England is now exporting? She buys her cotton from us, pays the cost of transportation to her factories, makes the goods, and sends them all over the world. That trade, at least the most of it, is ours whenever we get ready to take it.

Why should we not make and send out the hundred millions of woolen goods which she is annually exporting? We have the advantage of her in almost everything except cost of materials. Why should we not make and export the hundred millions of iron and steel which she is making and sending away annually? There is no reason except that high tariffs and trusts and combinations are in our way, and they muster all their forces to prevent us from taking the place which our advantages entitle us to take.

We are the greatest people in the world. We have the highest standard of civilization; we have the highest and best diffusion of knowledge among our people.

We utilize the power of machinery more than any people in the world. We produce by our labor more than any people in the world. We have everything to command success in any contest over any rival. We are the first cotton-producing country. We have wool, flax, hemp; our country is full of coal, and ores, and lumber, and yet with all these advantages over all others we have pursued a suicidal policy of protection, which has closed the markets of the world against us; and not content to stop here, we have plundered the great body of our agricultural people out of a large part of their wealth. [Applause.]

We must make a departure. Instead of laying on the burdens of taxation upon the necessaries of life, instead of destroying our foreign commerce, we should encourage it as we would encourage our home commerce. We should remove every unnecessary burden. We should lay taxes to obtain revenue, but not restrict importation. We should place every material of manufacture on the free-list, start up our fires, put our wheels in motion, and put all our people to work at good wages.

A gentleman said here the other day, on the other side of the House, that our prosperity in this country was due to the tariff. I deny it. Our prosperity in this country is due to the intelligence of our labor, and to the unrestricted movements of our exchanges among sixty millions of people at home. [Applause.]

Mr. Nimmo, the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics a few years ago, in a most elaborate report upon the internal commerce of the country stated that it exceeded our foreign commerce by twenty-five times its amount. Then the internal commerce of this country is equal to $35,000,000,000 annually. Every dollar of these products increases in value as they go from the point where they are produced to the point where they are consumed. Take a ton of coal mined in West Virginia, for instance, worth $1 at the mouth of the pit. Start it on its road to Texas, and every hundred miles it travels some hand touches it, some machinery transports it. It has got to pay the cost that increases as it goes, because its value is increased; and when it it delivered finally in the little city where I live in Texas it is worth six to eight dollars a ton, and my neighbors buy and consume it because it is cheaper to them than wood, and cheaper than they can produce the coal themselves.

And so, Mr. Chairman, it is with the cotton produced in Texas and sent towards Rhode Island to be spun. Every mile on the road it traverses between the producer and the consumer increases its value, and it is this interchange of internal commerce of this country, of $35,000,000,000 annually, that makes us rich and prosperous as a people, and we have grown so, not by the aid of restrictions imposed upon commerce with foreign countries, but absolutely in spite of it. [Applause.]

Our wealth would have been greater as a people if we had none of these restrictions upon our commerce. We will increase wealth if we lower the duties and let importations come in of those things which can be produced cheaper in other countries than in our own.

We will increase the value of all of the agricultural products by such methods. They will diffuse and scatter money amongst the laboring people throughout the country. It will set the wheels of machinery in motion, lay the foundation of happy homes, and a glad smile will light up the faces of the people in all sections of the country at the returning and increased prosperity of the nation. [Applause.]

This policy which is being pursued now may for awhile satisfy the demands of the capitalist who has money invested in the various factories and enterprises of that kind throughout the country. They may be able by the aid of these pools and trusts and combinations which seem to be springing out of the earth all around us to secure for a time the capital invested; but what, I ask you, is to become in the mean time of the poor laborer when they shut off their fires, when they turn him into the streets, and determine that they will limit the product of their establishments in order to keep up prices so as to save the profits on their investments? What is to become of the cotton and the iron and the wool, and all of the other interests that depend upon capital invested in manufacturing enterprises? Where are our markets when our factories are closed, when the wheels are still, when the fires are banked, and their laborers wandering as paupers around the streets seeking employment which is not to be found anywhere in the land? And yet they call this the American policy.

I repel it, sir; it is not American. It is the reverse of American. That policy is American which clings most closely to the fundamental idea that underlies our institutions and upon which the whole superstructure of our Government is erected, and that idea is freedom—freedom secured by the guaranties of government; freedom to think, to speak, to write; freedom to go where we please, select our own occupations; freedom to labor when we please and where we please; freedom to receive and enjoy all the results of our labor; freedom to sell our products, and freedom to buy the products of others, and freedom to markets for the products of our labor, without which the freedom of labor is restricted and denied. Freedom from restraints in working and marketing the products of our toil, except such as may be necessary in the interest of the Government. Freedom from all unnecessary burdens; freedom from all exactions upon the citizen except such as may be necessary to support an honest, efficient, and economical administration of the Government that guaranties him protection to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness;" freedom from all taxation except that which is levied for the support of the Government; freedom from taxation levied for the purpose of enriching favored classes by the spoliation and plunder of the people; freedom from all systems of taxation that do not fall with "equal and exact justice upon all"—that do not raise the revenues of government in the way that is least burdensome to the people and with the least possible disturbance to their business. That, sir, is the American policy. [Applause.]

Now another thing. I want to show that the tariff is not for the benefit of the workingman. We will have many appeals made to us for sympathy on account of the workingman. I have taken from the first annual report of the Commissioner of Labor and the report of the census on wages some figures given by manufacturers themselves of the total cost of the product and the labor cost of the articles they are making. I have put the tariff duty by the side of them to show whether in the little reductions we are asking in this bill we have gone beyond that pledge we as a party have made that we would not reduce taxation so low as to injure our laborers, or as not to cover the difference in cost of labor between American and foreign products.

This will show, and I ask your attention to it, that the tariff is not intended to and does not benefit labor. It will show that the benefit of the tariff never passes beyond the pocket of the manufacturer, and to the pockets of his workmen.

I find in this report one pair of 5-pound blankets. The whole cost as stated by the manufacturer is $2.51. The labor cost he paid for making them is 35 cents. The present tariff is $1.90. Now, here is $1.55 in this tariff over and above the entire labor cost of these blankets. Why did not that manufacturer go and give that money to the laborer? He is able to do it. Here is a tariff that gives him $1.90 on that pair of blankets for the benefit of his laborer, but notwithstanding that the tariff was imposed for the benefit of American labor and to preserve high wages, every dollar of that tariff went into the manufacturer's pocket. The poor fellow who made the blankets got 35 cents and the manufacturer kept the $1.90.

Mr. CRAIN. Will the gentleman please state how much the committee has reduced that duty?

Mr. MILLS. To $1.00 from $1.90.

Take another pair of 5-pound blankets. The total cost is $2.70. The labor cost is 70 cents. The tariff is $1.98. Now, how strange it is that none of these sums that were intended for the laborer ever get beyond the pocket of the manufacturer. Why is it, when the American Congress enacted this legislation for the benefit of our labor, that every dollar of this aid intended for labor stops in the pockets of the manufacturer, who goes into the highways and hedges and hires his laborer at the lowest price for which he can get him in the market and then pockets the tariff benefits that we are told every day is intended for the laborer alone—for the benefit of labor?

Here is another pair of 5-pound blankets. The cost is $3.39. The labor cost paid by this manufacturer, he says himself, is 61 cents. The tariff is $2.55. In the pending bill we have left him $1.35, and we have left the other man $1.08. And we have left all along not only enough to cover the difference, if there was any difference, between the labor cost of production in Europe and the labor cost of production in this country, but we have left enough to pay for all the labor and a bonus besides.

Let us go on a little further. Here is 1 yard of flannel, weighing 4 ounces; it cost 18 cents, of which the laborer got 3 cents; the tariff on it is 8 cents. How is it that the whole 8 cents did not get into the pockets of the laborer? Is it not strange that those who made the tariff and fastened upon the people these war rates in a time of profound peace, and who are now constantly assailing the Democratic party because it is untrue to the workingman, did not make some provision by which the generous bounty they gave should reach the pocket of him for whom they said it was intended? They charge that we are trying to strike down the labor of the country. Why do they not see that the money they are taking out of the hard earnings of the people is delivered in good faith to the workman?

One yard of cassimere weighing 16 ounces costs $1.38; the labor cost is 29 cents; the tariff duty is 80 cents. One pound of sewing silk costs $5.66; the cost for labor is 85 cents; the tariff is $1.69. One gallon of linseed oil costs 46 cents; the labor cost is 2 cents; the tariff cost is 25 cents. One ton of bar-iron costs $31; the labor cost is $10; the tariff fixes several rates for bar-iron. I give the lowest rate, $17.92. One ton of foundry pig-iron costs $11; the labor costs $1.64; the tariff is $6.72.

None of these tariff rates go to the laborer. The road is blocked up. They can not pass the pocket of the manufacturer. This "great American system" that is intended to secure high wages for our laborers is so perverted that all its beneficence intended for the poor workman stops in the pocket of his employer, and the laborer only gets what he can command in the open market for his work.

Let us take Bessemer-steel rails. We are told that the steel-rail industry is in great danger of utterly perishing away and departing from this continent, because we propose to reduce the duty from $17 to $11.

The whole cost is put down at $31, the labor cost at $7.57; the tariff is $17. The manufacturer has $9.43 more for each ton than all the labor cost. The labor cost of this ton is exceptionally high. I have a statement of the labor cost of a ton of steel rails at Bethlehem, Pa., taken recently by Mr. Schoenof, and it shows labor cost there $3.85 per ton. The labor cost of a ton of steel rails in England is not one dollar cheaper than here. Mr. Schoenof informs me that a ton of bar-iron costs, for labor, in England about $7.75, and here about $8. But let us leave these and proceed with the official figures. A keg of steel nails costs $2.34; the labor cost is 67 cents, the tariff is $1.25. A ton of pipe-iron costs $34.57; labor cost, $12.26, the tariff is $22.40.

Here is a car-wheel weighing 500 pounds; cost $13; labor cost 85 cents; tariff rate is 2½ cents per pound, equivalent to $12.50, to cover a labor cost of 85 cents! [Laughter.] Why, Mr. Chairman, these laborers of ours ought to get immensely rich if they could get all that Congress votes to them, if the manufacturers did not stop the bounties intended by the Government to reach the pockets of the workingmen.

Here is a coarse wool suit of clothes such as our working people wear in their daily toil in the shop and field. The whole cost is $12. The labor cost is $2. The tariff duty is 40 cents per pound and 35 per cent. ad valorem. As the weight of the suit is not given, we can not get the exact tariff, but the duty on woolen clothes imported last year averaged 54 per cent., and at that rate the tariff stands $6.48 to cover $2 of labor cost.

A cotton suit costs $10.50; the labor cost is $1.65; the tariff is $3.67. A dozen goblets cost 48 cents; labor cost, 15 cents; tariff, 19 cents. White lead, by the hundred weight, $9.50; labor cost, 50 cents; tariff, $3. A hundred weight of mixed paints, $8; labor cost, 41 cents; tariff, $2.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have gone through with a number of articles taken from these official reports made by the manufacturers themselves, and I have shown that the tariff was not framed for the benefit of the laborer, or that if it was so intended by those who framed it, the benefit never reaches the laborer, not a dollar of it. The working people are hired in the market at the lowest rates at which their services can be had, and all the "boodle" that has been granted by these tariff bills goes into the pockets of the manufacturers. It builds up palaces; it concentrates wealth; it makes great and powerful magnates; but it distributes none of its beneficence in the homes of our laboring poor.

It brings the tax-gatherer to them; it weighs them down as it goes; it compels them to pay out a large share of their daily earnings for the necessaries of life; and the money it raises by high prices on domestic manufactures it transfers not into the coffers of the Government, but into the coffers of private individuals. It is making a wide distinction in this country between two classes—one numerous, but poor; one small, but powerful and rich. It is a policy that is at war with the institutions of this country. The concentration of the wealth of the country in the hands of a few will in progress of time overthrow the very foundations of our free government.

Now, gentlemen, the time has come, after all these taxes on wealth have been swept away, after the people of this country have been bearing for years these enormous burdens that have been levied on the necessaries of life; now, when "trusts," and "combinations," and "pools" are arising all around us to limit production, to increase prices, to make the laborer's lot harder and darker—now the time has come for us to do something, not for classes, but for the great masses of our people.

I hope and trust that the bill which we have presented to you and which has met with favor throughout the whole country will receive a majority of your votes, a majority of the votes of the Senate, and become a law. I earnestly hope when the Treasury is full to overflowing of the people's hard earnings, you will lighten their burden, and reduce the taxes on the necessaries of life.

Although the bill we propose is not all that we could have asked, although it is a very moderate bill, yet it will send comfort and happiness into the homes and bosoms of the poor laboring people of this country, and I ask you now in behalf of them to consider their claims and help to reduce the burdens that have so long been laid upon their shoulders.

[Enthusiastic applause on the Democratic side, and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. KELLEY took the floor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, if the venerable gentleman from Pennsylvania will permit me, I desire to ask unanimous consent that he be allowed whatever time it may seem well to him to take in the remarks which he is about to submit.

Mr. KELLEY. I thank the gentleman.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

When Mr. KELLEY rose he was greeted by applause on the Republican side of the House.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairmaa, in the course of an address delivered at Corsicana, Tex., on the 21st of May last, the distinguished gentleman who now presides over the deliberations of the Committee on Ways and Means said:

We produce and exchange among ourselves and consume in the satisfaction of our wants more of the products of our own labor than the two hundred millions on the continent of Europe. We have invented and have now in successful operation more labor-saving machinery than all other people. We are turning out over six thousand millions of dollars' worth of products of manufactures every year, and producing them at lower cost of production, and at the same time paying higher wages to our workmen than any other people.

As I read this tribute to the enterprise, energy, and thrift of his countrymen, I hoped to find that the speaker had supplemented it by telling his hearers that the fostering influence of protective tariffs had in less than a quarter of a century lifted us from the national bankruptcy to which we had been reduced by the revenue tariffs of 1846 and 1857 and had exalted us to the lofty prominence among nations he so glowingly described. He could have supported these statements by reference to the report of the census for 1880, which shows that our manufacturing establishments numbered at that time more than a quarter of a million, employed $2,790,272,606 of capital, and paid 2,732,595 manufacturing operatives the higher rates of wages to which he referred.

In view of these magnificent triumphs, which were possible only by reason of the defense by the ægis of protection of our industries against overwhelming foreign assaults, I will be pardoned for entering an emphatic protest against the adoption of a measure which bears his name, and which, if its purpose may be inferred from its provisions, is intended to overthrow that system and scatter to the winds the magnificent results achieved in less than a quarter of a century under its fostering influence. The enactment of this bill would instantly paralyze the enterprise and energy of the people. Under the baleful influence of such a law the report of the census of 1890 will announce the overthrow of our manufacturing supremacy and the reduction of our commanding commercial position to that of colonial dependence. It is studiously designed to produce these dire results, and nicely adapted to its purpose. [Applause.]

A PARTISAN MEASURE.

It is confessedly a partisan measure, and was framed in the interest of a party whose leaders appear to be oblivious to the overwhelming social and economic changes wrought by the abolition of slavery. As slavery was an industrial system which permitted capital to own its laborers, and was adapted exclusively to the production of great agricultural staples, its prevalence prevented such aggregations of people in mining, manufacturing, and commercial towns and cities as would result from the development of the material resources and commercial possibilities of the South. Its abolition involved as inevitable consequences two changes which would be felt on every plantation and in every household throughout the territory in which the system prevailed. Neither of these consequences could be averted; they were both as inevitable as fate. The first was the creation of an imperative demand for remunerative employment for the millions of emancipated slaves, who as freemen must be invested with the privilege of earning their bread in the sweat of their faces, and providing for the sustenance and care of their families and the maintenance of homes. Involved in this change were also millions of poor and illiterate whites whose chief dependence for precarious subsistence had been the snare or trap and the gun and rod.

The demand for employment that would produce wages and subsistence was for these landless millions, as I have said, as imperative as fate. It could be neither resisted nor evaded. Yet it could not, consistently with the infirmities of human nature, be promptly acquiesced in by those who had inherited slaves as transmissible property, and been taught to regard poor whites as dangerous neighbors.

But for the presence of military power an era of lawlessness and strife would have followed these sudden and momentous modifications of the industrial and social conditions of the people of a number of great States. Happily for all parties it became apparent to many Southern men before the army was withdrawn that these changes were not, as had been believed, a desolating dispensation, but were a bounteous providence, which, as a return for the payment of living wages to those landless millions for labor performed in the diversification of the agriculture of their fertile empire and the utilization of its exhaustless supplies of minerals for manufacture, promised greater wealth, more perfect security for life and order, and higher developments of civilization than they dreamed of in the palmy days when they had counted their acres by the thousand and their slaves by the hundreds. Yet, strange to say, the gentlemen who framed this bill, and who could brook neither modification nor discussion of its provisions by their associates in the committee to which the preparation of revenue bills is confided by law, are with but two exceptions representatives of what was slave territory.

Contemplating the bill in the light of these facts one involuntarily recurs to the French maxim that "the Bourbons neither learn nor forget," for an examination of its provisions will satisfy unbiased minds that they have no adaptation to the existing industrial and financial condition of the country, but would have been nicely adapted to the era during which the exigencies of slavery demanded the maintenance of free foreign trade and the repression of mining and manufacturing throughout our broad domain.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, the bill is an anachronism; it has no relation to this era: it belongs to the saddest epoch in our national history, the period between 1832 and 1861. During that period slavery dominated our national councils and guided the administration of our national affairs, in hostility to national interests, and in the interest of free trade twice threatened war. It was, sir, in the interest of free trade that war was threatened in support of the doctrine of nullification, and it was in the interest of free trade that the country was involved for more than four years in a fratricidal war, the proportions of which were more gigantic than ever characterized a civil war. The entire South knows that free trade was essential to the perpetuity of slavery in the Republic, and it should also know that the logic that could defend free trade in a country endowed with the boundless diversity of the elements of manufacture and the immense supply of the forces for their conversion which we enjoy vanished when slavery was abolished.

THE REQUIREMENTS OF KING COTTON.

This, sir, is not mere theory; it is historic fact. Allow me to prove it to you and the country. It is now nearly thirty years since Pritchard, Abbott, and Loomis, of Augusta, Ga., printed, to be sold exclusively by subscription, this volume of more than 900 pages, by extracts from which I propose to demonstrate the accuracy of the position I have just announced. Its title is "Cotton is King, and Pro-Slavery Arguments, comprising writings by Hammond, Harper, Christy, Stringfellow, Hodge, Bledsoe, and Cartwright on these important subjects." It was edited by E. N. Elliott, LL. D., president of the Planters' College of Mississippi, who also contributed to its contents an essay on "Slavery in the light of international law." It is illustrated with fine engravings of the great and logical expounders of the philosophy which regarded the maintenance of human slavery as the supreme object of the American people and the Government of the United States. Here is that of the editor of the volume, Dr. Elliott, to whom I have just alluded; here is that of David Christy, who gave to the volume the title "Cotton is King, or Slavery in the Light of Political Economy;" here is Albert Taylor Bledsoe, LL. D., professor of mathematics in the University of Virginia, who contributed an essay entitled "Liberty and slavery, and slavery in the light of moral and political philosophy;" and here is J. H. Hammond, United States Senator from South Carolina, who gave to the anti-slavery agitators of the country the phrase, "Northern mudsills," as his characterization of the laboring men and women of that section, with which to inflame the passions of the entire laboring community of the North. There are also striking portraits of other apostles of the doctrine that slavery was national and freedom sectional, but I must not spend too much time on that part of the volume. I therefore proceed to submit the following extracts from its pages, which will serve to show that this bill was prepared in accordance with the requirements of the obsolete doctrines of this volume.

Slave labor has seldom been made profitable where it has been wholly employed in grazing and grain-growing; but it becomes remunerative in proportion as the planters can devote their attention to cotton, sugar, rice, or tobacco. To render Southern slavery profitable in the highest degree, therefore, the slaves must be employed upon some one of these articles, and be sustained by a supply of food and draught animals from Northern agriculturists. * * *

The attempt of the agricultural States, thirty years since, to establish the protective policy and promote "domestic manufactures" was a struggle to create such a division of labor as would afford a "home market" for their products, no longer in demand abroad. The first decisive action on the question by Congress was in 1824, when the distress in these States, and the measures proposed for their relief by national legislation, were discussed on the passage of the "tariff bill" of that year. The ablest men in the nation were engaged in the controversy. As provisions are the most important item on the one hand, and cotton on the other, we shall use these two terms as the representatives of the two classes of products, belonging, respectively, to free labor and to slave labor. * * *

The opposition to the protective tariff by the South arose from two causes, the first openly avowed at the time, and the second clearly deducible from the policy it pursued; the one to secure the foreign market for its cotton, the other to obtain a bountiful supply of provisions at cheap rates. * * *

The close proximity of the provision and cotton growing districts in the United States gave its planters advantages over all other portions of the world. But they could not monopolize the markets unless they could obtain a cheap supply of food and clothing for their negroes and raise their cotton at such reduced prices as to undersell their rivals. * * *

A manufacturing population, with its mechanical coadjutors, in the midst of the provision growers, on a scale such as the protective policy contemplated, it was conceived, would create a permanent market for their products and enhance the price, whereas, if this manufacturing could be prevented and a system of free trade adopted, the South would constitute the principal provision market of the country and the fertile lands of the North supply the cheap food demanded for its slaves. * * *

The planters were led to believe that the millions of revenue collected off the goods imported was so much deducted from the value of the cotton that paid for them, either in the diminished price they received abroad or in the increased price which they paid for the imported articles. To enhance the duties for the protection of our manufacturers, they were persuaded, would be so much of an additional tax upon themselves for the benefit of the North; and besides, to give the manufacturer such a monopoly of the home market for his fabrics would enable him to charge purchasers an excess over the true value of his stuffs to the whole amount of the duty. By the protective policy the planters expected to have the cost of both provisions and clothing increased, and their ability to monopolize the foreign markets diminished in a corresponding degree. If they could establish free trade, it would insure the American market to foreign manufacturers, secure the foreign markets for their leading staples, repress home manufactures, force a large number of the Northern men into agriculture, multiply the growth and diminish the price of provisions, feed and clothe their slaves at lower rates, produce their cotton for a third or fourth of former prices, rival all other countries in its cultivation, and monopolize the trade in the article throughout the whole of Europe.

It was in vain that the friends of protection appealed to the fact that the duties levied on foreign goods did not necessarily enhance their cost to the consumer; that the competition among home manufacturers and between them and foreigners had greatly reduced the price of nearly every article properly protected; that foreign manufacturers always had and always would advance their prices according to our dependence upon them; that domestic competition was the only safety the country had against foreign imposition; that it was necessary we should become our own manufacturers, in a fair degree, to render ourselves independent of other nations in times of war, as well as to guard against the vacillations in foreign legislation; that the South would be vastly the gainer by having the market for its products at its own doors, to avoid the cost of their transit across the Atlantic; that, in the event of the repression or want of proper extension of our manufactures by the adoption of the free-trade system, the imports of foreign goods to meet the public wants would soon exceed the ability of the people to pay and inevitably involve the country in bankruptcy. But Southern politicians remained inflexible and refused to accept any policy except free trade, to the utter abandonment of the principle of protection. Whether they were jealous of the greater prosperity of the North and desirous to cripple its energies, or whether they were truly fearful of bankrupting the South, we shall not wait to inquire.

In a speech at the Waterborough dinner, given subsequently to the passage of the tariff of 1828, Mr. Hamilton, of South Carolina, gave expression to their resolve when he said, "We must prevent the increase of manufactories, force the surplus labor into agriculture, promote the cultivation of our unimproved Western lands until provisions are so multiplied and reduced in price that the slave can be fed so cheaply as to enable us to grow our sugar at 3 cents a pound. Then, without protective duties, we can rival Cuba in the production of that staple and drive her from our markets."

AS A LAW IT WOULD CLOSE COAL MINES, ORE BANKS, AND FACTORIES, AND ARREST THE DIVERSIFICATION OF AGRICULTURE.

These few extracts, of which more than a hundred that are equally striking might be made, will suffice to show that this bill belongs to a past age. That as a measure proposed for future guidance it is, as has been said, an anachronism, and is illustrative of systems of ethics and economic philosophy against which history has written in blood decrees that are final and immutable. None of its provisions are in harmony with the spirit of the age: for they antagonize the aspirations of the American people and are not adapted to facilitate their efforts to supply their wants, gratify their desires, and provide for the future of their families. Its first effect, should it be enacted into law, would be to arrest the magnificent development of mineral wealth, of manufacturing power, and of the diversification of agriculture now taking place throughout the South, and to paralyze the organized industries of the North.

By putting wool on the free-list it would abolish sheep husbandry, destroy the immense capital embarked therein, and impoverish the more than a million men who own the flocks or are employed in their care, and by working this ruin it would diminish the supply of cheap and healthful animal food now furnished by wool-growers to the mining and manufacturing laborers of the country. It would also render the production of American tin-plates and cotton-ties impossible by placing those articles on the free-list with wool.

By the transfer of these and other products of coal and iron ore to the free-list, and by reducing the duties on steel rails, structural iron, and many other forms of iron and steel sufficiently to withdraw protection from them and permit foreign producers to flood our markets, it would, though it maintained existing duties on coal and iron ore, close a majority of the bituminous coal fields and ore banks which are now giving profitable employment to hundreds of thousands of laborers, not only in Northern States but in Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, and Alabama, and turn them adrift without prospect of other employment elsewhere than in cotton and corn fields. But while professing to have abandoned their purpose to put coal and ore on the free-list its framers have ingeniously contrived to make the importation of both free by such measures of indirection as may enable them to attempt to saddle the Treasury Department or the judiciary with the political consequences of their deliberate tergiversations.

No, the junto will not put coal and ore squarely and frankly on the free-list. They have, however, as effectually provided for the repeal of the duties that now protect them as could have been done by naming them in that list. Let us see whether I misrepresent the effect of the scattered and disingenuous provisions of this bill, when I say that they make coal and ore free. That bituminous coal and iron ore are covered by the phrase "mineral substances in a crude state, and metals unwrought not especially enumerated and provided for" can not be gainsaid. Coal is a mineral substance and iron ore a metal in a crude state and unwrought. If this be so, lines 130 and 131 of the free-list embrace them as "mineral substances in a crude state and metals unwrought not specially enumerated and provided for." Are coal and iron ore provided for in this bill? If they are I will be grateful to any member of the majority of the committee who will call my attention to the clause which enumerates and provides for them. Sir, they are not specially enumerated or provided for, and consequently the repeal of the existing duties on these articles is specifically provided for in lines 2 and 3 of section 41, the last paragraph of the bill, the language of which is that "all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed." This language applies to and repeals the provisions of law which now authorize the collection of duties on those "mineral substances in a crude state and metals unwrought" known to commerce as bituminous coal and iron ore.

JUTE AND RAMIE CULTURE IS ADAPTED TO THE GULF STATES.

But these remarks apply to mining and manufacturing enterprises, and it is natural that representatives of States in which manufactures are almost unknown, and but few of the vast mineral deposits of which have been opened, should regard with indifference or hostility the capital, skill, and labor embarked in such enterprises. But as it is now nearly a quarter of a century since the war closed, it would not seem to be a violent presumption to assume that representative men from the cotton-growing States, the value of whose mineral deposits and water power was till recently unknown or ignored, would endeavor to enhance the value of their farms by diversifying the agricultural productions of their section. But no evidence of willingness to permit the diversification even of Southern agriculture is disclosed by the provisions of this bill. On the contrary, it selects the farming industries of the country, North and South, as special objects of destruction. As the constant production of cotton impoverished the people of the South by exhausting the fertility of its alluvial fields, so, as our farmers are learning by painful experience, is the constant production of wheat and corn in the Western States and Territories exhausting the productive power of that region.

In proof of the necessity for a wider diversification of our agriculture I may point to the fact that, while the average production per acre of wheat and corn diminishes, the price also falls off. This is shown by the following statement from the Agricultural Department of the number of acres under wheat and corn, the total crop of each, and the average price per bushel throughout the year for the decade including 1878 and 1887:

Years.	Corn.			Wheat.
	Acres.	Bushels.	Price per bushel.	Acres.	Bushels.	Price per bushel.

These figures show that the increase of acreage in corn was more than 40 per cent. during the decade; the increase of the yield was less than 5 per cent., and in wheat the increase in acreage was 17 per cent., but in crops only 8 per cent. But the fact is patent that there is no department of American industry in which greater diversification is so imperatively demanded as in agriculture. Nor, except when Whitney's cotton-gin gave the South a monopoly of cotton-culture, has there been a time when the introduction of new plants and the adoption of new sources of supply and new methods of manufacture promised such profits to our farmers as do the domestication of jute and ramie in the Gulf States, and of sugar from cane in Florida, or from sorghum, beets, or corn in all parts of our country at this time. The enormous rewards which follow the cultivation of jute and ramie are but faintly intimated in the following extract from a recent open letter from my friend, Professor Waterhouse, of Florida and Washington University, St. Louis, Mo., from whom I parted in San Francisco in 1870, when he left our country to visit the jute and ramie fields of India and China:

The new tariff bill proposes the abolition of the imposts on foreign jute and ramie. There are weighty reasons which plead for the exemption of these fibers from the list of free imports.

Jute is one of the most important productions of India. The variety of its uses is almost illimitable. The range of manufactures from this textile extends from coarse matting and cotton-baling to fine imitations of linen and silk. The growing needs of mankind are steadily increasing the demand for this fiber. Jute is annually enriching India with a productive wealth of scores of millions.

Ramie is the strongest fiber in the world. Narrower than jute in the range of its applied uses, it is superior in its suitability for finer fabrics. Barely inferior to silk in beauty of luster, it surpasses its glossy rival in durability. It is woven into textures of practical utility and elegant luxury. It is wrought into cordage of extraordinary strength, laces of filmy delicacy, and plushes of exquisite beauty. The demand for this valuable fiber far exceeds the supply.

The luxuriant growth of jute and ramie in the Gulf States shows that the conditions of soil and climate are suited to their culture. Numerous experiments, continued through a succession of years, justify the assurance of Southern farmers that "these plants can be cultivated almost as easily as Indian corn." The success of repeated trials has dispelled every intelligent doubt that the soil of the South is adapted to the growth of these textiles.

A diversification of industries is essential to the highest welfare of the country. The Southern States have long been impoverished by an unwise devotion to the cultivation of a single staple. There is no truer economic maxim than that variety of employment is a productive factor of national wealth. The culture of jute and ramie meets an imperative requirement. The tillage of these plants would not only richly diversify Southern agriculture, but would employ labor at seasons when cotton needs least attention, and would bring returns at times when the income from cotton is not available. Industries opening such copious sources of public wealth, and so happily supplying the wants of both labor and capital, are worthy of legislative encouragement.

Under circumstances which seemingly assure the prosperity of the new culture, is it wise for Congress to make the proposed change? The abolition of duties on rival imports would benefit only a comparatively small number of people, but the successful growth of jute and ramie in the South would add large and richly productive resources to the wealth of the nation. In their crude and manufactured forms jute and ramie are yielding India and China an annual revenue of not less than $150,000,000; but Texas alone can raise more jute and ramie than India and China have ever yet produced. Under the patronage of wise laws, with the greater productiveness of intelligent agriculture, and with the economies of efficient machinery, the South ought at an early day to derive from the tillage of these staples as large an income as India and China now do.

These statements, coming from so careful an investigator and conservative thinker as Professor Waterhouse, convince me that the cultivation and manufacture of jute and ramie would increase the price of land throughout the Gulf States, and bring to the people thereof more than one hundred millions of dollars annually as the market value of an average crop; and that the location in their midst of factories which would soon rival those of Calcutta and Dundee would more than double this annual income. And I say without reservation to the enterprising men who are shaping the destinies of and assuring prosperity and wealth to the New South that it will need only the announcement that our fields furnish jute and ramie as well as cotton to bring Northern and foreign capital to their midst to share the enormous profits of the manufacture of the newly-domesticated fibers into thread and fabrics. Addressing this class of my fellow-citizens, I also invite attention to the fact that it is the representative voice of Texas, Arkansas, Georgia, Kentucky, Tennessee, and West Virginia that prodoses not only to repel the introduction of jute and ramie, but to render the growth of flax, hemp, manila, and other fibrous plants by huddling them together on the free-list. Some of them will probably doubt this statement; but it is an absolute truth, however incomprehensible it may seem to be.

I could understand the policy of the authors of the bill if the South still needed cheap provisions for its slaves as it did when cotton was king; but now that many of its native citizens and all the land-owning immigrants from the North and foreign countries who are taking part in the reconstruction of its fortunes are raising their own cereals, growing the grasses which give profits to dairies, and have really converted many portions of the South into agricultural districts, this resistance to diversification of Southern crops by Southern representatives is, at least to my mind, inexplicable. Should gentlemen desire to learn more of the value of jute and ramie as crops, and of the capacity of the Gulf States to produce them profitably, and of the extent and marvelous growth of their manufacture in India and Scotland, they will find a fund of information in the special report of the Department of Agriculture of 1883 on Jute Culture and the importance of the industry, which was prepared by Professor Waterhouse with the caution as to its statements of the values and amount of products which characterizes all the productions of its author.

THE WORLD OWES THE ABUNDANT SUPPLY AND LOW PRICE OF SUGAR TO THE PROTECTIVE POLICY.

The world is indebted to the fostering care of government for the bountiful supply of sugar which enables the humblest of our laboring classes to include it in the list of their daily necessities.

President Cleveland's free-trade message, by its assumption that the duty is always added to the cost, not only of imported commodities, but to the price of like commodities produced in this country, shows how profoundly ignorant he is of economic science. To illustrate the puerile absurdity of this assumption I invite the President's attention to the fact that, though the duties imposed by our Government on sugar when reduced to ad valorem standards were never so high as they now are, the price of sugar was never so low in this country as it now is. This condition of things is not exceptional, but is consistent with the history of the production of saccharine plants and the conversion of their juices into marketable sugar.

About the time of the birth of Napoleon Bonaparte French academicians who were distinguished as chemists had demonstrated the fact that sugar could be produced from beets; but while they put this fact beyond the region of doubt they were unable to produce beet sugar in quantity and at a cost that would make it marketable. The discovery was a noteworthy fact that was not lost sight of by the academy or the practical chemists of France, and when the allied powers sought to destroy the commerce of France by blockades, orders in council, and other devices they succeded in putting the price of sugar in Paris up to more than 5 francs per pound. Though sugar was a necessity to France she could not purchase it at that price. Bonaparte was a disciple of Colbert, the founder of the textile and ceramic industries of modern France, and he met the allies, as the great economist would have done, by proclaiming his determination to establish the independence of France in the matter of sugar and molasses by applying the resources of the empire to their production from other sources than cane.

Bringing to his counsels the most eminent chemists and mechanicians of France, he evolved two systems of bounties by which he hoped to establish new and profitable industries throughout France and secure a cheap supply of home-grown sugar for her people. He offered bounties, beginning with 100,000 francs, to him who should produce the greatest weight of sugar beets from a given number of acres, and descending by gradual scales to small sums to the farmer who should raise the most from a single acre, and 100,000 francs to the chemist who should extract the greatest amount of sugar-yielding juice from a given weight of beets. These stimulants with the inordinate prices demanded for cane sugar exalted the question of the production of beet-root sugar into a national enthusiasm; and little more than two years were required to add it to the commercial commodities of France. Napoleon's genius guided the organization of the industry and gave it instant popularity among the French people by rejecting the system which prevailed in the slave regions from which cane sugar had been procured. In place of immense plantations and costly factories in which cane sugar was produced, he proposed small central factories in agricultural districts in which every farmer, by devoting a portion of his land to beets, might share the bounties the government was bestowing, and hasten the production of such supplies of sugar as would meet the demands of France and her people.

In view of the magical success of Napoleon's plan, Germany hastened to adopt it, and to establish her system of bounties and central factories. So great and immediate was the success of this new industry that in a few years the taxes imposed on beet sugar began to refund the bounties which had called it into existence. But though France and Germany have each found in the industry a prolific source of revenue, they have both maintained a system of bounties upon the sugar produced by their people and shipped to foreign countries from their respective ports.

In view of these facts, who can deny that protection has augmented the supply and diminished the price of sugar? Yet this bill proposes a reduction of 20 per cent. on the duties now assessed on all grades of sugar above No. 13, Dutch standard.

THE EXTENT OF OUR SUGAR-BEARING TERRITORY.

The United States have more square miles of sugar-producing territory than any four other nations, and now when millions of dollars are being applied to the development of these lands shall Congress restrict the production of sugar by reducing duties under the fostering influence of which these important and costly enterprises have been entered upon? Sir, let us glance at the extent of our sugar territory and the manifold sources from which we may produce the commodity. To assume that we are dependent upon Louisiana alone for our supply of native sugar would be a great mistake; yet when we remember that when the war closed the plantations of Louisiana were overgrown, her sugar-houses in ruins, and the costly but neglected machinery they had housed was fit only for scrap heaps, I may cite the progress of sugar making in Louisiana since 1867 as an illustration of the vitalizing influence of protective duties. In spite of the steady decline in the price of foreign sugar, the poverty of her people, and the demoralization of her plantations, Louisiana, encouraged by protective duties, has added materially to the world's supply of cane sugar. But our sources of supply include the beet, corn, and sorghum, the last of which may be successfully grown wherever corn will mature.

But, sir, I would plead for the maintenance of the present duties on sugar were cane our only known source of supply, for it is predicted by Cuban and other insular experts, who are skilled in the production of cane and the manufacture of sugar therefrom, that the great North American cane-field will be found in Central and Southern Florida. In this belief, capital, skill, and enterprise are flowing into that State to utilize the reclaimed "swamp and overflowed lands," which are said to be equal to the best sugar lands of Cuba. There, too, climatic advantages are very great, and give cane from six weeks to two months more time in which to ripen than it enjoys in Louisiana. This greater duration of the season is said to add an average of 20 per cent. to the saccharine strength of the crop.

A company of Northern capitalists having planted large fields of sugar near the new town of Runnymede, in the Kissimmee Valley, are investing a million dollars in buildings, machinery, and general agricultural and manufacturing facilities. Of the possibilities of Florida as a producer of cane sugar I can speak from personal observation and extended inquiry while traversing the State; but of the reputed sugar fields of Texas I speak from report from trusted sources when I say that there is a large region of land in that State which is fitted by the character of its soil, and by a longer and more genial growing season than that of Louisiana, which may be applied to the growth of sugar without interfering with the vast area which Professor Waterhouse assures us is adapted to the production of jute and ramie. Had we no other sugar lands than those of Texas, Florida, Louisiana, and other Gulf States, I should regard it as unwise and unpatriotic to reduce the duty on sugar at a time when science has just furnished cheaper and more effective methods of extracting the juice from cane, beets, and sorghum; and the emancipation of Florida from the legal embarrassments which for nearly fifty years prevented her from making title to any portion of her land, and thus repelled settlement and improvement, has enabled her to open her fertile fields to energetic and patriotic men who will under the protection of existing duties strive to save to their country the $100,000,000 per year which we now pay Cuban slave owners for sugar, while abolishing a source which is this year contributing about $60,000,000 to the embarrassing Treasury surplus.

CORN SUGAR.

Let us turn from the consideration of cane sugar and glance hastily at our other sources of supply. As an element of the total supply of sugar the manufacture of glucose or corn sugar does not constitute an important element; but in view of the diminishing yield of corn per acre on lands on which it is a constant annual crop, and the decline in price, notwithstanding the diminished yield per acre, this industry is worthy of consideration by our farmers. The glucose factories in the States of New York, Ohio, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, and Kansas employ an invested capital of $11,000,000, with an annual capacity for the consumption of more than 19,000,000 bushels of corn. Estimating the average crop per acre at 26 bushels, 732,000 acres are required to furnish the present annual supply; and estimating the number of men required to raise corn at 3 to 100 acres, this industry employs 21,960 farmers, and 4,575 laborers in factories, at an average rate of daily wages of $1.50, and the value of their annual production of glucose is $17,128,000.

It is claimed for the committee's bill that it will open foreign markets to our productions, and in connection with this preposterous claim it may not be inappropriate to say that the corn consumed in this one industry, of which little is known to the farmers of the country at large, equals more than one-third of our total annual export of corn, and is about one-half the quantity consumed by our distilleries, whose interests are protected by the existing tariff and by the monopoly created and vested in the "whisky trust" by the internal taxes on distilled spirits, both of which methods of protection the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means seem to regard as vested rights of the "trust" which no legislation may repeal or modify.

BEET-ROOT SUGAR.

Let us now pass from the contemplation of a puny infant to the expanding proportions of one of the world's industrial giants that is seeking domestication in our country. The production of sugar from beets in Europe is six times as great as that of Cuba from cane, and that we can produce as much as Europe does is no longer a subject of doubt. The beet-sugar factory of Alvarado, Cal., made a success of the industry in 1879, and has pursued it with profit every year since then, and if the statements of Professor Hilgard, of the University of California, who is an accredited authority, may be accepted, there are at least 5,830 square miles of land in that State suitable for the profitable growth of sugar beets. Here, then, is a field from which the entire amount of sugar and molasses now consumed in this country may be produced. The ablest man connected with the production of sugar and the world's commerce in that commodity is probably Claus Spreckels, of San Francisco. He is a credible witness, and when recently examined by a Congressional committee on this subject he testified as to the availability of great stretches of land in Alameda and contiguous counties from which he says more saccharine matter can be obtained per acre through beet culture than has yet been done anywhere on the continent of Europe. He was brought before the committee to be examined as to his knowledge of the "sugar trust" and as to whether he was connected therewith.

But the course of the investigation led him to say to the committee that he had no doubt that if the existing duties on sugar and molasses should be retained this country would, in eight years from the time at which he spoke, produce its entire supply of both these commodities. As an acquaintance of some years standing, Mr. Spreckels favored me with a most instructive interview at my chambers on the evening following a casual meeting with him in the room of the Committee on Ways and Means. His statements were full of instruction, and his faith in their accuracy is demonstrated by the large expenditures of money and labor he is making to carry his convictions into effect.

When Mr. Spreckels determined to establish beet farms and a sugar factory at Watsonville, Cal., he departed for Europe, taking with him his son and a draughtsman and engineer in whose attainments and judgment he has the most implicit confidence. With these companions he explored the sugar regions of France and Germany, and studied the machinery he found in use in all the great works, together with the methods pursued in the culture of beets, and the machinery best adapted to the new processes of extracting juice from sugar-bearing plants. Having concluded his observations he contracted for machinery of sufficient capacity to exhaust 700 tons of beets in twenty-four hours. Leaving his engineer behind him he hastened home to erect a building capable of housing one half the machinery, by the use of which he will consume 350 tons of beets to the twenty-four hours and produce 5,000 tons of sugar during the present season. While this work in field and factory is proceeding he will construct the other half of the building to house the remainder of the machinery contracted for, which will increase the capacity of the factory to 700 tons of beets to the twenty-four hours and the production of sugar to 10,000 tons per annum. This plant he proposes to enlarge annually until its product shall reach 40,000 tons per annum. Though but a private citizen, Mr. Spreckles has adopted the Napoleonic methods of conferring a lasting blessing upon his adopted country.

He has imported 25 tons of beet seed, which, having been carefully selected, cost about 15 cents a pound, which he has distributed gratuitously among farmers in the vicinity, in accordance with the number of acres they will plant, while the question of success is open to doubt in their minds. He has made contracts at satisfactory prices with one hundred and sixty-three farmers for all the beets they will produce, and to stimulate their efforts has offered two systems of premiums, which, though not imperial as were those of Bonaparte, are sufficient to induce the beet-growers who have contracts with him to exercise good husbandry. To the one who having planted but 5 acres and produces best results of his class he will give a premium of $150; to the producer of the best results from 10 acres the premium will be $250; and for the best results from more than 10 acres it will be $500. Twelve per cent. is agreed upon by the contracting parties as a fair standard of average saccharine strength. To those farmers whose beets yield more than 12 per cent. and not more than 13 per cent. he adds a half-dollar per ton to the price of the entire crop; and to those whose beets yield more than 13 per cent. an additional half-dollar, making an increase of $1 a ton upon their entire crop.

Claus Spreckles knows what he is about. He believes that the way to fight the "Trust" is to locate beet fields and sugar factories in all parts of the country, and to defy the conspirators against the public weal by the immensity of the product and the saving of the cost of transportation by bringing the producer and consumer to each other's side. Mr. Spreckles insists upon it that in the hands of properly instructed farmers, and with competent machinery in the factories, beets may be grown and manufactured as profitably in Ohio, Illinois, and other central States as in Germany or California.

SORGHUM SUGAR.

But cane, beets, and corn are not the only plants from which we may extract sugar profitably and in quantities adequate to supply the demands of our home market. Agricultural skill and commercial enterprise have given us many and rich varieties of the sorghum plant, the value of which, under the influence of improved cultivation, recently invented machinery, and the discovery of the distributive process of extracting its juice, has assured its position with tropical cane and the beet as a source of saccharine supply. The profitable manufacture of sorghum requires the erection of factories within a radius of 6 miles from the fields upon which the plant is grown. At these factories farmers will find a cash market for their stripped cane at prices proportioned to its saccharine strength and purity. There are among the intelligent farmers of Kansas many who, having watched with interest the Government experiments at Fort Scott, are convinced beyond all peradventure that if the existing duties on sugar be maintained Kansas alone can supply the American demand for sugar from her sorghum fields. Nor do I believe that this claim is exaggerated.

That sorghum will mature wherever corn may be grown is a fact of general notoriety, and Kansas has 80,000 square miles of what may safely be regarded as good corn land. But though the recent experiments of the Government and those made by the Kansas State board of agriculture during 1887 have exhibited results that will give her a leading position among the Northern sugar States, a number of her sister States will be neither long nor far behind her in availing themselves of the profits which follow the substitution of sorghum for corn.

Mr. Cowgill, who in behalf of the State board inspected the manufacture of sugar in Kansas during 1887, says in his report—

That the sorghum yields to the farmer more than twice as much per acre as either of the leading cereals, and as a gross product of agriculture and manufacture on our own soil more than six times as much per acre as is usually realized from either of these standard crops.

And Professor Swenson, who conducted the experiments of the Agricultural Department at Fort Scott, thus sums up his report to the Commissioner:

In reviewing the work the most important point suggested is the complete success of the experiments in demonstrating the commercial practicability of manufacturing sugar from sorghum-cane.

2. That sugar was produced uniformly throughout the entire season.

3. That this was not due to any extraordinary content of sugar in the cane, but, on the contrary, the cane was much injured by severe drought and chinch-bugs.

4. That the value of the sugar and molasses obtained this year per ton of sorghum-cane will compare favorably with the highest yields obtained in Louisiana from sugar-cane, and, taking into consideration the much greater cost of the sugar-cane and that it has no equivalent to the 2 bushels of seed yielded per ton of sorghum-cane, also our much cheaper fuel, I say without hesitancy that sugar can be produced fully as cheaply in Kansas as in Louisiana.

But, if sorghum offers such profits to the Northern farmers, what may not those of Southern Texas and Florida derive from this plant and its manufacture. In each of these States two crops may be grown and manufactured in a year. To peril the domestication of the sorghum industry by a modification of the duties on sugar or any other manifestation of indifference to its benefits would be a crime against the farmers of every section of the country.

An incalculable element of the value of the beet and sorghum industry to the farmer is found in the fact that both serve to regenerate fields the fertility of which has been impaired by the too constant growth of wheat or corn. The exhausted lands of Germany and France have been reinvigorated by beet culture and the manufacture of sugar. And I fail to see how Congress could inflict so fatal a stroke on the interests of farmers and the industrial classes generally as by declaring the culture of sugar an outlaw in the United States by reducing duties upon it and molasses below an assuredly protective rate.

THE SURPLUS.

But the authors of this bill and the professional advocates of free foreign trade will assume from the drift of these remarks that I resist the reduction of the surplus, and am unwilling to abolish the taxes from which it flows in annually increasing volume.

Sir, I reply to such suggestions in the language of a resolution which I submitted to the House of Representatives more than seventeen years ago, on the 12th of December, 1870, and which was adopted with but six dissenting votes. It expressed the almost unanimous sentiment of the people, which had not then been corrupted by the influence of the "whisky ring" as it has been during the intervening years.

It was as follows:

Resolved, That the true principle of revenue reform points to the abolition of the internal-revenue system, which was created as a war measure to provide for extraordinary expenses, the continuance of which involves the employment, at the cost of millions of dollars annually, of an army of assessors, collectors, supervisors, detectives, and other officers previously unknown, and requires the repeal at the earliest day consistent with the maintenance of the faith and credit of Government of all stamp and other internal taxes.

In accordance with the precepts of Colbert, and the example of his illustrious disciple, Napoleon Bonaparte, I would so legislate on the question of the surplus and the sources whence it flows as to increase the wealth, power, and dignity of the country by promoting the development of its natural resources and the diversification of its industries, and thus diminish its dependence upon foreign importations upon which duties are collected. I would derive the national revenues from customs duties so adjusted to remunerative prices for commodities as to stimulate and defend home productions, while preventing combinations, trusts, and monopolies of any kind from plundering consumers by demanding fictitious prices. In pursuance of this policy I would promote by adequate duties the growth of jute, ramie, flax, hemp, and other fibrous plants, and their manufacture into thread, cordage, and fabrics; and would maintain existing duties on sugar.

I would also impose such duties on tin-plate as would quicken the mining of tin and invite the location of such smelting works, furnaces, forges, and rolling-mills for plate and sheets in close proximity to the mines as would crown the Black Hills of Dakota with industries of which the nation would be proud, and the beneficence of which all its people would soon feel and appreciate.

But these processes of reducing the revenue, though certain, would be gradual; and, as the President has truly said, "it is a condition which confronts us—not a theory," the reduction should be effected immediately by the abolition of sources of income the receipts from which may be computed month by month if not absolutely day by day. This is not only practicable but is demanded by the true principle of revenue reform which points now, in April, 1888, as it did on the 12th of December, 1870, "to the abolition of the internal-revenue system."

The politics of this country are now dominated by the whisky trust as absolutely as they were by slavery before the war, and King Alcohol is proving that he is as hostile to national development as King Cotton ever was.

Mr. Chairman, having devoted the years of my vigorous manhood to the overthrow of the political influence of the slave oligarchy, I intend to devote my declining years to the emancipation of its political affairs from the fatal embrace of the subjects of most fruitful source of poverty, ignorance, vice, crime, disease, insanity, and ignominious death known to the civilization of the nineteenth century, and whose subtle and insidious power is arrayed alike against the mining and manufacturing interests of the country and the diversification of its agriculture.

Let me in support of this indictment glance briefly at the wrongs of the most illustrious victim of the "whisky trust," which Congress, by provisions of its laws for the regulation and collection of taxes on distilled spirits, has invested with royal prerogatives. Kentucky is the richest in natural resources, and is in geographical position and other respects the most favored of the United States east of the Mississippi. If any one of the sisterhood of American States may with propriety be spoken of as the Empire State it is Kentucky. Considered in the light of her geographical position, and her possible means of transit and traffic with and through coterminous States, she appears rather as an empire composed of several States than as a single State.

Her territory is contiguous to seven States, the population of which numbered in 1880 more than 14,000,000, which together included 307,925 square miles, and were intersected at the close of last year by 33,555 miles of railroad over which her travel and traffic might be connected with and enjoy the benefits of our entire system of local and transcontinental lines. Her area is 41,283 square miles. Her population in 1880 numbered 1,648,690, and in 1887 there were 2,070 miles of railroad operated within her limits. Her rivers are said to exceed in number, navigable length, and supply of water-power those of any other State, and the waters of the Ohio and Mississippi bathe her northern and western borders. The extent and variety of her mineral resources have not been ascertained by even a preliminary geological reconnaissance, and the fact that her agricultural resources have not been ascertained experimentally is attested by the magnificence and density of her majestic forests. The soil and climate of Central Kentucky, which in passing I may say is the seat of a more refined and cultivated pastoral community than I have ever been introduced to elsewhere, unless it was in the southern counties of England, are specially adapted to the growth of hemp, flax, and other fibrous plants, to nutritious grasses, including the world-famed blue-grass, and to all the cereals known to American agriculture. That the soil and native growths of this region of the State contribute in an exceptional degree to the physical development of the human race and that of domestic animals is attested by the grand and harmonious development of its men and women, as well as by the almost unchallenged superiority of its highly-bred flocks, and herds, and studs of horses, which are the pride of the State.

The coal fields of Kentucky exceed in extent and richness those of England as they came from nature. She has two, the western and eastern. The former comprises about 4,000 square miles, and lies less than 100 miles southwest of Louisville; the latter, the eastern field, comprises more than 10,000 square miles, and extends from the Ohio River to the Tennessee line. Much of the coal of this field is cannel coal, of so high a grade that, taking the pronunciation of its name from the illuminating power it discloses while consuming in the grate or on the hearth, many of the people call it "candle coal;" but with this priceless treasure are also vast deposits of the finest quality of coking coal, with reference to which Mr. John R. Proctor, the capable and energetic director of the geological survey now being made by order of the State, says:

1. That the largest known area of coking coal in the United States is in Southeastern Kentucky.
2. That the coal is very thick, of uniform good quality, and as favorably situated for cheap mining as any coal.
3. That it is the nearest coking coal to the center of population of the United States.
4. That it is nearer to extensive deposits of high-grade Bessemer-steel ores than is any other coking coal.
5. That it is near to extensive deposits of cheap iron ore.
6. That there are other valuable coals in this region, including large deposits of superior cannel coal.

He also says:

Since the first publication by the survey regarding the finding of this coking coal, made in 1882, the coal has been identified and traced over a wide area, and many tests have been made proving its superior quality as a coking coal.

Her almost unequaled combination of geographical advantages, agricultural capabilities, and mineral and other native material for manufacture entitles Kentucky to a leading position among the progressive States of the Union; yet it is a melancholy truth that to speak of her as a leading State, a progressive State, or even as a prosperous State, would be to indulge in bitter irony.

In the midst of almost unparalleled wealth and general physical advantages the mass of her people are steeped in poverty and illiteracy, and are strangers not only to the comforts of humble life but to the commonest and most absolute daily necessaries of Northern laborers. In 1880 the number of her people above ten years of age who were reported by the census as unable to read and write were more than one-half her total population. That number was 606,578, while her total population, which of course included those under ten years of age, numbered 1,163,498.

In Rowan County, the mineral resources of which are almost incalculable, families, in default of any legitimate employment for their time, hand down from generation to generation feuds of such deadly character that enterprising men fear to traverse the region even to examine personally the vast wealth of the territory occupied by these semi-barbarians. Indeed, intelligent people throughout the country who have not given special study to the early history of Kentucky ascribe the origin of the phrase "the dark and bloody ground" to these feuds in which so many lives are taken, the takers of which notoriously defy arrest and legal punishment, rather than to the perils that attended the early settlers of the State, when the location of each new homestead was determined by the existence of a spring from which water might be procured without too great exposure of the settler or one of his family to the murderous Indians into whose midst they were carrying civilization.

Having been honored by invitations from the Board of Trade and the Commercial Club of Louisville to attend the sittings of a commercial and industrial conference of representative business men from every part of the State, and to address the conference, I reached Louisville in the afternoon of the 4th of October, the day on which the conference assembled. In the evening, while I was yet a stranger in the city, I strolled into the hall and sat where my presence was not likely to attract the attention of persons who might chance to know me, and was an interested listener to the report of a committee of the Commercial Club to whom had been assigned the duty of interrogating well-known citizens of the several counties of the State on the prevalent opinion of the county as to the propriety of inviting immigration, the kind of immigrants that were most desired if any were deemed desirable, together with a statement of the leading products of the county, the price at which land could be purchased, and specially whether farms were for sale, and the price per acre at which they were held.

From this report and inquiries it enabled me to institute I learned that the maxim "Kentucky for Kentuckians" had been so rigidly maintained that there were many counties of the State in which a person of foreign birth or one familiar with a foreign language could not be found; that so extreme was the poverty of a majority of the people of about one-half of the counties of the State that they were unable to defray the expenses of maintaining county government, and were therefore known as pauper counties, whose local expenditures had to be paid from the treasury of the State. Among the summary that was read of all the replies that were received there was not one that afforded any indication of an appreciation on the part of its writer of the real import of the inquiry about immigration. Three of these replies, though each forced me to smile, were painfully suggestive of the simplicity and naiveté of the people of the county from which they came. One suggested that two hundred able-bodied girls might be welcomed, another that more Democrats were wanted, and the other that that county did not want any more lawyers.

Mr. Chairman, let me exclude the possible conclusion from all minds, that having partaken of the refined and generous hospitalities of Central Kentucky, and of that earnest welcome bestowed upon me by the large-framed, great-hearted, and sturdy men who came from all parts of the State to take council with each other as to how their own condition and that of their suffering fellow-citizens might be improved, I am like an ingrate, abusing their hospitality and slandering them.

If I have said or shall say a word that could wound the sensibility of any Kentuckian, it has not been used with that intent, and I beg the people of this wonderfully endowed State to remember the Scriptural maxim that "faithful are the wounds of a friend."

But, Mr. Chairman, I am not speaking otherwise here and now than I spoke to the members of the conference and the citizens of Kentucky who thronged the opera house, and gave me many proofs, during my address, that no offense was found in anything I said; but to repel beyond doubt so unjust a suspicion let me quote a paragraph here and there from the report of my remarks as I found them in the Courier-Journal of the next morning:

The happiness I am enjoying in this visit is simply inexpressible, for it seems to me that it is rounding out in a season of general felicitation all that is unpleasant in the memories of the past. [Applause.]

I am especially obliged to the board of trade for inviting me here to speak for I want to ask a question or two about Kentucky, a question which you will not cheer, but which is well meant. I shall ask in a few minutes why Kentucky is a laggard among the States, and a laggard among the

REGENERATED SOUTHERN STATES.

Yes; let me here ask you gravely, why this State, whose geology gives such food to its plants as to make it the producer of the bravest men, most beautiful maidens, and most devoted matrons, not only of our own country, but of the world; whose geological construction gives beauty and vigor and harmony of construction and movement to all animated life; whose racers are the speediest and the most enduring, and whose grasses are unequaled in the world, so that no imported stock lingers long enough to breed a progeny in the Bluegrass State that it does not improve upon its own type; why this State, endowed not only with such qualities as these, but whose coal and iron in joint measure exceed in value the combined coal and iron of any other State in the Union—why this State, thus endowed and given such a community of men and women as are the native people of Kentucky, whose rivers are navigable for more miles than those of any other member of our great Union, who is the first-born child, I may say the first-born daughter of the Union, if I may judge by the number of brave sons and beautiful daughters she has contributed to the population of other States—why is it that I heard stated last night with prepared deliberation that so much emigration takes place from the bluegrass coal and iron country of Kentucky that the immigration does not compensate for it? Why should people fly from such a Paradise? It seemed to me as I listened to the talk on this subject in the convention last evening that you had realized that something was wrong, and were crying to each other, if not to the Almighty, what shall we do to be saved! [Laughter.]

Where all are engaged in one pursuit there must be an immense waste of time, energy, hope, and all that is valuable in life. Now, my friends, how can we diversify the employments of your people? Will a tariff do it? I say yes, but it has not done it in Kentucky. I brought a paper with me to justify the remark which if I could not sustain by evidence would prove offensive, that Kentucky is proving to be a laggard not only in the great family of her sister States, but among the Southern States.

Now, let us look at the position of Kentucky and of Louisville. No Southern city has a more advantageous one. It is near to the North and its commerce. I stand in the city to-day that bears to the whole of yonder Southwest the relation that Chicago bears to the Northwest. And that it should with the growing diversification of the pursuits of the South grow, not perhaps as rapidly as Chicago with its inland seas to contribute to its growth, but so rapidly that its growth from decade to decade would seem marvelous to its own people. [Great applause.] This is the one great city of the State. I have not traveled much in the State, and I may be disparaging other cities. If I do I pray you correct me, gently, and believe I would not have done so but through ignorance. I believe in the whole South there is only one city to contest the palm with Louisville, and that is New Orleans, and yet Louisville is greater in all business than New Orleans, although New Orleans has a site by the sea with invitations to external commerce.

A surprising fact is that last year the Southern States, I may say the old cotton-growing States, produced more iron than the whole Union produced before it felt the quickening influence of the protective tariff of 1861. The statistics of iron production began to be gathered by the American Iron and Steel Association in 1854. The Morrill tariff bill was enacted while James Buchanan was President of the United States, and bears his signature; it was a protective tariff to such an extent that it restored the ordinary revenues of the Government which had been so exhausted that the salaries of the Government official could not be paid. But I am not speaking of that; I am speaking of the decade including 1854 and 1863, the latter year having felt the effects of the protective tariff, and having added something more than 100,000 tons to the average of the other nine years. Now, the whole Union produced in those ten years an average of 813,000 tons of pig-iron, and yet last year the South alone produced 875,000 tons, an increase of 62,000 tons over the average capacity of the whole Union in the ten years preceding the enactment of the protective tariff; yet with all this I had to say to the people of the South: "You did not produce your share; you did not produce your pro rata of the grand total, which had come to be between six and seven million tons under the inspiring influence of the protective tariff; 875,000 tons was not the quota of the South, whether measured by her area, by her population, or by her now known resources of ore and flux." So I said to them: "You have done well; now do better. You have, in common with the North, found what a protective tariff can do."

Kentucky has had that same protection. She once was a leader in the Southern States in the production of iron. She should be now; but she is not. She is the fifth of the iron-producing States of the South, and she has produced less in the last six months than she did in the six months that preceded. Now, what is the matter with Kentucky? Why is the Blue-grass State thus delinquent? You may tell me she has done something else and better, and I will be glad to hear what it was; but during the last year Alabama walked forward until she is the fourth iron-producing State in the Union—Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, and Alabama are the four leading iron-producing States in the Union. Alabama produced last year 283,359 tons; Tennessee, 199,166 tons; Virginia, 156,250 tons; West Virginia, the infant born of old Virginia by the Cæsarian operation, 98,618 tons; and Kentucky, with thousands of square miles more of available fuel than the British Islands, and with stores of iron ore equal in quantity and quality to those of Great Britain, why has she sunk beyond little new-born West Virginia, to 54,844 tons, and on a declining average at that? There is something wrong. Now, it can not be with the people. You might as well say a Kentucky race-horse was not good as to say a Kentucky man is not full of life and nerve and vigor. You might as well say Kentucky cattle are of no account, and that the Government made a mistake in either buying or taking all the Kentucky mules she could during the war because she believed them to be the best in the country.

Coming back to the sorghum question, I was gratified at hearing that sorghum was the principal production of two counties, because if you could get a capitalist to set up a sugar-house and announce to your farmers that the company owning it would pay so much per ton for sorghum, depending on its saccharine strength, you would have a new industry; you would have your farmers engage in something new, and you would have their sorghum giving them once a year, or oftener, ready cash, a thing which I am told the mountaineers of Kentucky do not have much of. [Applause.]

I heard it said here last night that in this State, so gifted with coal and iron, half the counties were paupers, and could not defray the just county expenses. I do not say that it is true, but I do say that it was stated here; and that I have reason to believe it, because no man arose and indignantly said: "No, it is not true." What! Pauper counties here in the home of Henry Clay; here where more than a century ago John Fitch was working among metals to establish that marvelous system of locomotion which now carries our internal commerce, that exceeds in bulk and value every year the entire home and foreign trade of the British islands! John Fitch chose his native State of Kentucky, rich as he knew it to be in sources of wealth and power, to develop the steam-engine in its application first to water transit and next to land transit. What! The people of the mountain counties of Kentucky, specimens of the wealth of which lie upon your table, including lead and iron ores such as Pennsylvania can not produce, are starving? The State by adoption of my namesake, whom I am happy to state believes we are from the same paternal stem, William Kelley, of Louisville, the inventor of the Bessemer steel process, a native of Pennsylvania but a Kentuckian by early training and a long life of manhood now crowned by more years than my own, a man who was famous among iron-workers of the country as the iron boiler who made all the elements of the atmosphere and of the molten iron and fire help carry the fluid from the heat that burning coal would give it to an incandescent condition and purified it and made steel of it for six years before Bessemer announced his discovery of the same thing. The counties of this State said to be paupers? There is something wrong in Kentucky or these stories could not be circulated about her. Why, years ago Kentucky was selling nails to Pennsylvania; the first machine for cutting and heading nails was invented and constructed in Kentucky. Yes, Lexington for many years shipped nails to Pittsburgh; but the trade has gone now; you do not do it now; you have not tried to do it. What is the secret of the failure?

Mr. Chairman, my suggestion that there was something wrong in the condition of Kentucky, and my inquiries as to what caused her to be a laggard, even among the Southern States, brought no response at the time. The occasion has, however, been followed by letters from intelligent men in many parts of the State, which have convinced me that King Cotton, having staked his throne and prerogatives upon the arbitrament of battle and been beaten, his liege supporters in Kentucky found new means of maintaining their allegiance to a despotic power, and have transferred the homage they once paid King Cotton to King Alcohol. Yes, sir, correspondence and personal intercourse with intelligent gentlemen during the last four months have convinced me that our internal-revenue system has accomplished the establishment in Kentucky of a despotism whose power is as absolute and whose theories of government, so far as the matter of preventing the development of the mining and manufacturing possibilities or the diversification of the agricultural industries of Kentucky are concerned, is as effective as was that of King Cotton in the legitimate cotton States of the Old South.

From many letters received on this subject I present so much of two as expose the thraldom in which Kentucky is bound and the machinations by which the whisky trust holds the writers and their fellow sufferers in industrial subjection. One of these letters was received on the 17th of March and the other some time later, but the testimony of the writers that the people of Kentucky who desire to live in harmony with the spirit of the age, and to give their native State the position to which her resources entitle her in the New South, can hope for redemption from the terrible thraldom in which they are held by the action of Congress alone is confirmed by that of many other competent witnesses. But let the writers speak for themselves. I submit first so much of the letter of March 17 as is pertinent to the question under consideration, and will follow it with an equally pertinent extract from the other letter to which I have specially referred.

Do you know fully (I know you know in the general way) why the internal-revenue tax on whisky ought to be wiped out?

It is because so long as the internal-revenue law exists it bands together the wholesale dealer in whisky, the distillers and hangers-on, such as bank presidents who loan on whisky, making them a close corporation upon which the Democratic wire-pullers and managers can, whenever the Democratic party here is in danger of being beaten (and it has been so several times lately), call upon it for money in bags and in sufficient amounts to turn the scale against the Republicans.

Wipe out the internal-revenue law, and they can't find another source where money can be had in bulk, at the moment of defeat, in sufficient amounts to turn the defeat into a victory. Hoping you may be able to have the whole thing wiped out.

In the recent defalcation of our State treasurer—$200,000 to $400,000—many things go to show that this fund of the State of Kentucky has for years been at the service of the whisky ring. It was inevitable. Without the whisky ring the Democratic party would lose its hold on the State offices, and so the whisky ring and the Democratic ring are nearly identical. Now that the explosion at our State capital has occurred no more money can be had from Kentucky's treasury. Away with the revenue system, and scatter the funds that are now en masse held ready to use against the Republicans in Kentucky by a law of the United States. Disperse 'em. It kills manufactures other than whisky in Kentucky. For instance, as a matter of fact, a great bank in Louisville, not national: To it goes the owner of 100 or 10,000 barrels of Bourbon whisky—known brand of Kentucky; he does not have to go to the president nor cashier, only to the discount clerk in charge; there is his table, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, date; on each or any of these you can have so much and renew ad libitum practically; make out your note, attach your bonded-warehouse receipt—flat. But a manufacturer of general merchandise would not have the slightest show for a loan, because the bank could not sell his chairs, his plant, or any implement. No bonded-warehouse receipt can cover them, but, with the United States holding up things the whisky ring is omnipotent, and the general manufacturer has to go elsewhere.

In conclusion I submit, that with the facts presented these letters show that it was by the provisions of law imposing taxes on distilled spirits that the whisky trust was called into existence, and enabled to accomplish the revival of the despotism which pervaded the Southern States before the war; and that the power of this trust and the combination of Democratic politicians with the banking influence of Kentucky can be broken but by the repeal of the internal taxes, the perpetuation of which is the issue presented to the American people by the President in his free-trade message and by the Southern gentlemen who have dominated the counsels of the Committee on Ways and Means and submitted this bill to the House for consideration. For myself I will stand for the protective system and the maintenance of such rates of duties as will insure the development of all the resources of the country, increase the number of its industries, and perpetuate its independence, commercial and industrial as well as political. This happy consummation can not be achieved if the internal-tax system is to be maintained, for the surplus is a condition that can not be perpetuated with safety to our republican institutions.

The purity of the Government, the safety of business, and the morals of the people demand the abatement of the surplus by the repeal of the special war taxes from which it flows. If we shall fail to abolish these taxes, and in addition to the hoarding of millions of dollars in the Treasury of the United States, we also maintain a system of securities by which from seventy-five to one hundred millions dollars more of our money shall be applied exclusively to the use of the whisky trust in its war upon our industries and national independence, history, when referring to the surplus and its demoralizing influence, will impute the crime that perpetuated it and the consequences with which it is fraught to the Fiftieth Congress. [Great applause.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. FLORIDA PUBLIC LAND INVESTIGATION.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution which I reported yesterday from the Committee on Public Lands may now be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further resolutions, concurrent or other? If there are none, the order of morning business is closed and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a resolution which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it has been alleged upon the floor of the Senate by a Senator from the State of Florida that illegal and fraudulent conveyances of public lands have been made in said State in derogation of the rights of the United States and of settlers upon said lands, and that a remedy for such evils can be provided by law: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be, and is hereby, directed to investigate all the facts bearing upon the general allegations referred to; and that for the purpose of such an investigation said committee is authorized to employ a stenographer, and shall have power to administer oaths, send for persons and papers, to sit in Washington or such other places as may be necessary, and to conduct its investigation through subcommittees, the expenses of the same to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, and said committee shall report by bill or otherwise as the circumstances shall seem to require such plan for remedy of the evils, if any are shown, as they may deem necessary.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend the resolution, in line 1, after the word "be," by inserting the words "or a subcommittee of their number."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In lines 6 and 7 I move to strike out the words "and to conduct its investigations through subcommittees."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that it would be well to amend the resolution by striking out the words:

Whereas it has been alleged upon the floor of the Senate by a Senator from the State of Florida.

I have presented a great many petitions here from people in the State of Florida who have alleged that the selections made were of dry lands and not of swamp and overflowed lands, and that such selections embraced their own homes, and who have asked of Congress that such investigation and such redress as was in their power to give should be bestowed upon them. I have not undertaken, however, to be a witness as to the fact itself. I have no doubt their statements are true in a great many instances, and I have no question that it is the duty of Congress to adopt this resolution and such further action as may be necessary to give protection to the settlers upon the public lands of the United States that are not properly conveyed under the terms of the granting act. But the resolution would be more accurate, and I think correct, if it alleged the fact that this inquiry is based upon the petitions of persons claiming to be actual settlers, who I state I have reason to believe are truthful men and state the truth.

Mr. PLUMB. Then, Mr. President, the whole thing comes back, after all, to the statement of the Senator from Florida, because he indorses the petitions which have been presented.

He will bear with me while I call his attention also to the fact that this subject was once before the Committee on Public Lands upon a resolution or bill of his, and that the committee submitted it to the Secretary of the Interior, and he to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and those officials reported that legislation was not necessary, and in substance said that whatever remedy was necessary to be applied could be applied through the ordinary facilities afforded by that Department.

The matter, therefore, now stands upon the repeated allegations of the Senator from Florida, and the credit that is due to his representative character and to his character as a man, to which the Committee on Public Lands desire to give full effect as the foundation for the inquiry which is proposed to be made.

Mr. CALL. I move to strike out the words from the preamble that I have indicated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk will read the part proposed to be stricken out.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lines 1 and 2 of the preamble it is proposed to strike out the words:

Upon the floor of the Senate by a Senator from the State of Florida.

So as to read:

Whereas it has been alleged that illegal and fraudulent conveyances, etc.

Mr. COCKRELL. If that is done, I shall ask that the resolution be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands. I do not see any occasion for that amendment.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Missouri is only a Senator here, and he is entitled to his opinions, but I am not to be daunted by any expression of his, in a matter so manifestly right, that he will do this or that or the other. I am here asking from each Senator the performance of a public duty upon facts presented. It is manifest to every one that I am not a witness in this case. No allegation of the Committee on Public Lands can change the facts of the case. What do I know personally that you should say in the resolution it is stated by a Senator upon the floor of the Senate in regard to a fact? As I stated, I have presented petitions, and the records will show petition after petition which I have here from citizens of the country claiming that they had a right to protection, and that whether rightfully or wrongfully, by mistake or by purposed wrong, they were being turned from their homes upon the public lands of the United States. I have stated that those petitions came from respectable persons, and upon the faith of their statements and not my own I have asked this public action, as it was the duty of a Senator to do. In this duty I hope I shall never fail, even if there shall be but one poor family who shall appeal to me as a Senator to protect their humble home on the public land of the people of the United States, without the least discouragement from oppositions of any and every kind.

Why, then, convey the intimation of this language here that I as a Senator have been stating as within my knowledge the fact that frauds have been committed in derogation of the rights of the people of the United States? The change I propose is not an important one except in the respect that it places the fact as it is before the Senate and does not state it untruthfully.

What the Senator from Kansas says has no reference to the pending resolution. What matters it if the Interior Department has reported that it had ample instrumentalities to effect this investigation when they have not done it? It is true that the Committee on Public Lands did two years ago report adversely on a resolution introduced by me, at the request and upon the petition of respectable citizens of Florida, one of them a gentleman by the name of Longacre, who had been a judge of one of the superior courts of the State of Pennsylvania, who had gone to Florida to live and who presented this statement and this petition here through me, and many others, poorer people, who are unable to protect their rights.

Mr. PLUMB. It was not with the view that the Senator from Florida was to be a witness in the case or had assumed the position of a witness in the case that the Committee on Public Lands thought that a foundation of the kind which has been made by the preamble was necessary to be inserted. It was because some foundation was to be laid. It will not do simply to say that it is alleged without saying where or by whom.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator allow me to suggest that the resolution read: "alleged by petitions presented by the Senator from Florida?"

Mr. PLUMB. But that of itself would hardly be sufficient. Petitions are being presented here by the score every day. If a mere petition is sufficient to set in motion the investigating agencies of the Senate, then, as the Senator from Florida can readily see, we shall be called upon to investigate every subject under the shining sun.

It was the fact that not only were these petitions presented, but that the Senator from Florida in his place in the Senate and in his representative character as a Senator gave an importance and dignity and effect to them which otherwise they did not have. It is his allegation, supported it is true by representations made to him by private letters, supported by the allegations and petitions about which he claims to know, as I do not, which gives to this case that dignity which warrants the Senate in proceeding to the investigation.

The Public Lands Committee, I will say to the Senator, are just as desirous to have this matter investigated as he is, but they do not care, as I think, to predicate a request for an investigation without some authoritative statement in regard to the source from which the petitions upon which the investigation is to proceed are alleged to come.

It is not expected, of course, that the Senator from Florida will testify, or that he will drum up the witnesses who are expected to testify; but still the committee would have a right to rely upon him to be helped in the matter of the investigation by suggestions at least. I am sure he does not wish to shirk the responsibility of the statements which he has made here with great emphasis, with great eloquence, and at great length repeatedly. They stand as his allegations for all practical purposes, because he indorses the people who make them. They are constituents of his; he knows them; he knows their character. He must know something, not perhaps in a shape that he could testify to it personally, but he must himself know something, in the ordinary sense of the term, about the truthfulness or untruthfulness of the allegations which have been made.

I am sure the Senator from Florida does not wish to shirk a proper responsibility in this case, and I am sure in speaking thus to him I am only suggesting that he should stand in relation to this investigation exactly as I myself would be willing to stand in regard to an investigation which I had asked to have made.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, it is unusual, in my opinion, when a Senator presents petitions representing certain facts, that in a resolution of this kind proposing an inquiry his name should be used as establishing the truth of those statements. It is unusual to say, in a resolution directing an inquiry, that allegations have been made by a Senator. I do not remember such a thing to have ever been proposed before. I remember distinctly a resolution introduced in the Senate stating that it had been alleged and was currently believed that a certain thing had taken place in a Senator's State, and an investigation was ordered upon that statement without coupling with it the name of the Senator who proposed the inquiry.

I do not think it is exactly just and fair to the Senator from Florida, who has presented petitions here alleging that certain frauds have been committed upon the public lands in his State, even if he went to the extent of affirming his belief in the truth of the allegations made by the petitioners, to insert in the resolution the name of the Senator as the party who had made the allegations. I think it is a departure from what has been the custom in cases of this character, and I do not think we should put the Senator from Florida in the position of becoming the accuser, when he is simply representing a class of petitioners whose petitions he has presented to the Senate. If those petitions and the facts which they disclose are not sufficient to justify an investigation, then I think it is highly improper to base it upon the ground that the allegations are made by a Senator who disclaims personal knowledge while he expresses his belief in the truth of the allegations made in the petitions.

Mr. BERRY. I suggest, and if it will be satisfactory to the Senator from Florida, I will move to amend the resolution, so as to make the preamble read: "Whereas, it is alleged by the Senator from Florida that he is satisfied from petitions received from respectable citizens or statements made by reputable citizens of Florida," etc.

That would not make him a witness in the premises, and at the same time it would show something upon which the committee would be authorized to act rather than simply a petition from citizens who are unknown. If that is satisfactory, I will suggest that amendment.

Mr. CALL. I have no objection to that kind of an amendment, nor have I any objection to doing what I have a hundred times done in the Senate, when I have asserted that in my opinion there were actual settlers under the laws of the United States upon land which had been selected as swamp and overflowed lands and for railroad purposes, which land is not embraced in the terms of the granting act, but is high and dry and not swamp and overflowed land, and which can not be made swamp and overflowed by being selected and made swamp and overflowed by the false statements of an agent either of the Federal Government or an agent of the State government. I have affirmed that petitions from respectable people presented here disclose enough of those cases to require an investigation, and that justice should be done by the Government. I have not charged that there was fraud in either State or Federal officers. I have stated the fact as it is stated in the letters and petitions which I have presented to the Senate. How it occurred, by what irregularity, it is not for me to be a witness.

Mr. President, that statement is enough to move the Senate. In the course of business Senators do not come here as witnesses to testify from their personal knowledge nor from their belief, which logically is still less a ground of action, but they state their opinions as Senators of the importance of certain public action, and they present the evidence of that in petitions and memorials, and in other methods of proof, and in this case in the statement of Senators that they are from people whom they have reason to believe are truthful people and are authorized to speak for the people whom they profess to represent in the petitions. That is the only ground of public action. It is not that a Senator believes or disbelieves the facts stated, but that petitions or other evidences are presented showing facts from people of character and respectability. That is what moves the Senate, and that is what can alone justly move the Senate.

I have given to this application my personal and official indorsement a hundred times. I give it now, but I do not care to have this resolution go forth stating that which I did not state, that which I do not know as a matter of personal knowledge except in a few instances. It is my belief that a very large portion of these selections since the confirmatory act of 1857, and before, are of land that can not pass under the terms of the granting act; but I am not seeking to interfere with anything, except to protect the poor man and his children, who, having gone upon this land, has made himself a home, and asks for protection which he can not get, and which he has not succeeded in getting from any administration of the Land Department, and therefore has appealed to me as a Senator to obtain for him by proper legislative action.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY]. I have no doubt myself that in a general way there have been a great many lands selected in the State of Florida as swamp lands which were not swamp lands. I have in my hand the report of the commissioner of lands and immigration of the State of Florida for the years 1883 and 1884, from which I will read an extract, simply to show that this process of selection, presumably of some at least of the same kind of land the Senator from Florida has spoken of, is still going on. As he is a Senator from that State and is in effect arraigning the administration of his State, I do not think that he should feel sensitive about being brought into direct relation with this investigation. Still I do not care about that. This report states, among other things:

In the spring of 1883 John A. Henderson, esq.—

who, I understand, is chairman of the Democratic State committee of Florida—was appointed agent to select lands granted to the State by act of Congress of September 28, 1850. By the terms of his contract, he was to bear all expenses of making the selections and of procuring the proofs required by the rules of the Department in Washington, showing that the lands selected belonged to the class granted by the act.

That at all events would create some inducement on his part to make the selections as large as possible:

He states in his report—

I quote further—

He states in his report that he has filed in the office of the United States surveyor-general sixteen lists of selections, numbered from 5 to 20, inclusive, embracing 1,504,415.65 acres. Of these, 776,768.62 acres have already been patented to the State, which are included in the patents above enumerated. For the balance of 736,647.03 acres we hope to receive patents very soon.

So it seems that this process of selection, of which the Senator from Florida complains, is still going on actively under the auspices and by the solicitation of and under a pecuniary inducement offered by the State government, which makes it to the interest of the agent selecting these lands upon behalf of the State to make as large a selection as possible; that is, to select as large a number of acres as possible.

I do not question at all that the Senator's State has received a large number of acres of land as swamp lands which were not so in fact, although I do not personally know anything about it. But it has come to be a part of the common knowledge of all persons who have observed the administration of what are known as the swamp-land acts that selections of that kind, whether fraudulently or inadvertently, have been made in a number of States. It would be a remarkable thing in fact if the State of Florida was an exception. Perhaps the situation down there is worse than elsewhere. I am inclined to think it is, because the State has selected and has claimed from the United States Government patents to an area as swamp land embracing more than half the entire area of the State.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, there is nothing political in this matter, and it can not be made so by the statement of the Senator from Kansas. John A. Henderson is not the chairman of the Democratic State committee; he is a respectable gentleman there; but it would be entirely immaterial if he was. I am not arraigning the State of Florida, neither its Republican nor its Democratic administrations. These selections have been made under both. I have simply stated that there were a large number of citizens of the United States, poor people, actual settlers upon the public domain of the United States under selections made since 1857, the date of the confirmatory act, who have appealed to the Senate of the United States through me as a Senator from the State to protect them in the possession and occupation of their homes, which they allege are upon high and dry and not on swamp and overflowed lands. I have in vain sought that protection under all administrations from the General Land Office. I now ask it, as I asked it two years ago, under an investigation made by this body, and I have said that any respectable portion of the people on the public domain of the United States, however poor, who have homes upon the public lands of the United States and come to the Senate asking such inquiry and such legislation as will protect them in the rights which the law has given to them, have a right to it, not because I ask it, not because any Senator has a personal relation to the matter, but because petitions from respectable citizens whom I certify to be citizens and men of character deserve attention. That is all there is in it.

I am somewhat indifferent after this explanation whether these words are retained or not; but I do not wish to stand here as arraigning the State or any agent of the State, but as simply stating the facts, that a number of people of respectability and character have asked for this investigation and this action by Congress. The State of Florida and the administrators of its affairs will compare favorably with that of any other State. I have no fear of being regarded as arraigning the State government because I seek to protect the right of every actual settler on the public domain to his home and to a shelter for his wife and children.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida to amend by striking out certain words in the preamble of the resolution.

Mr. PLUMB. Did not the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] offer an amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not so understand.

Mr. CALL. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read as modified.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, in the first line of the preamble, the words "upon the floor of the Senate by a Senator from the State of Florida" and insert "by the Senator from Florida that he is satisfied from petitions presented by reputable citizens of Florida;" so as to read:

Whereas it has been alleged by the Senator from Florida that he is satisfied from petitions presented by reputable citizens of Florida that illegal and fraudulent conveyances of public lands have been made in said State, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. Following the suggestion made yesterday about this involving an expenditure from the contingent fund so that it must go to that committee unless adopted by unanimous consent, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be adopted.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I am not disposed to object very much, but I will object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question then recurs on the adoption of the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I understood that the resolution had to go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. If it were objected to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rules require——

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Does not the resolution go to the committee if objected to? If so, I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that it does. The rules require that resolutions or motions that propose a charge upon the contingent fund of the Senate shall go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. That order can be made after the adoption of the resolution by the Senate as well as before. So much of the resolution——

Mr. PLUMB. Has the resolution been adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been adopted.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the question of the expenditure provided for by this resolution be committed to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

FANNY WILLIAMS.

Mr. PASCO. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 2236) granting a pension to Fanny Williams, widow of William H. Williams, a lieutenant in the Seminole war, which was indefinitely postponed yesterday, be reconsidered and placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order indefinitely postponing the bill will be reconsidered and the bill placed on the Calendar, if there be no objection, with the adverse report.

FORFEITURE OF UNEARNED RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1430.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1430) to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. PALMER to the amendment of Mr. STOCKBRIDGE.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE] I think ought not to be adopted, and I think if the Senate fully understood the question involved in the amendment, the Senate would conclude that they did not wish to confirm the lands that that amendment provides shall be confirmed.

The history of land grants in Michigan is a complicated one, and it is almost utterly impossible for any one without a thorough study to understand the full effect of the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Michigan.

In 1856 land was granted by the United States to railroads in Michigan, one of these railroads being a road from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin State line. That act provided that unless the road was completed within ten years from the date of the passage of the act the lands should be forfeited to the United States. That road was not completed within the time. There were various assignments and consolidations with other roads and different lines which claimed to be the successors to this and some other grants then made. In 1862 a joint resolution was passed by Congress authorizing these consolidated roads to take other lands provided the lands granted by the original act of 1856 were surrendered to the United States. The governor of the State of Michigan undertook to reconvey the lands that were granted by the original act, and he did make a deed of conveyance conveying 340,000 acres of land, if I remember correctly, and under the resolution of 1862 the Commissioner of the General Land Office certified other lands, and instead of following the law of 1862 he gave 50,000 acres more than that surrendered by the State of Michigan, without any authority whatever, and for what cause no one can tell.

In 1865 and 1866 a grant of other lands was made to a canal company. That was after the ten years had expired when this road was to have been completed, and it was supposed at that time that these lands were actually forfeited without any declaration of forfeiture by Congress. Lands were granted to the State of Michigan by the act of 1865 to build a canal. The act of 1865 provided that the lands should be selected from those nearest the line of the proposed canal. An additional grant was made in 1866 of 200,000 acres more land to the canal, and those words, "nearest the canal," were left out.

It was contended by able lawyers on the one side that those two acts should be construed together, that it was the intention of the subsequent act that the ceded lands should only be taken along the line of the canal. Nevertheless the canal company selected 15,000 acres in a different portion of the State of Michigan, as I understand, not near the canal and including part of the land originally granted to the Ontonagon Railroad Company.

These parties now claim this selection under the State, and notwithstanding the fact that the governor had undertaken to convey back to the United States the original land, notwithstanding other lands had been conveyed in lieu of them, yet in 1880 a different railroad company—not the original company—undertook to build the road and did build 20 miles of it, and the governor of Michigan undertook to convey the original land under the original grant and lands that he had conveyed to the United States to this railroad company in the year 1880 when the road should have been completed in 1866.

Now, if the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Michigan is adopted, it not only confirms the grant made to this canal company, but it would have the effect to convey a portion of that same land and other lands in 1880 to this railroad company to which the grant was never made, and which undertook to build the road long after the time had expired, and after the governor of Michigan had undertaken to convey the land back to the United States. Such would be the effect of the confirmatory act proposed by the junior Senator from Michigan, to make a new grant to this railroad company and to this canal company of these lands.

On the question of law that arises I do not undertake to pass judgment. The canal company claim the land because they claim that they had a right to select land after the expiration of the time, and yet the Supreme Court decided that they had no right to select such lands because no forfeiture had taken place. The railroad company claim a portion of it by reason of the fact that in 1880 they had built 20 miles of road. The amendment confirms both of these.

A great many persons after the time had elapsed, the ten years, went on and occupied the lands as homesteads or bought them for cash or took them under the pre-emption laws, and they have their homes upon them, and yet if this amendment becomes a law in the language used, it will deprive those parties who have made homes there and spent half a life-time on those homes of their lands and give them to the railroad company or canal company. I say such is the effect of the amendment as I understand it, and to that amendment I am opposed.

The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] proposes another amendment, to strike out "the State selections" and probably some others. If any amendment should be adopted, certainly the amendment of the junior Senator [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE] should not be adopted unless it is amended by the amendment proposed by the senior Senator [Mr. PALMER].

For these reasons I hope that the amendment, unless it is amended, will not be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I do not care to prolong the discussion of this amendment. It is very important. The remarks just submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] disclose the difficulty which arises from the Senate being required to consider amendments which have not been reported by a committee.

I agree with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] in his statement of yesterday. I, too, look with distrust on all amendments to this bill that have not been reported from the Committee on Public Lands. The amendment under consideration does not come from the committee, but was introduced by the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE], and an amendment to it is proposed by the senior Senator from that State.

It is difficult in a general forfeiture bill to provide for all the exceptions that should be made in favor of actual settlers and persons who have vested interests, or who have equitable interests arising under a mistaken administration of the law by the Interior Department or by the local land officers.

The senior Senator from Michigan said yesterday that there had been great scandals in regard to the Portage Lake Canal, if I understood him. I will ask the Senator if the Portage Lake Canal is the same canal for the purchase of which by the General Government provision was made in the last river and harbor bill and an appropriation of $350,000 made?

Mr. PALMER. Yes.

Mr. DOLPH. I think that provision received the assent of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. PALMER. It did, but not out of any regard to the owners of the canal.

Mr. DOLPH. The question of these State selections for the benefit of this canal company has been before both branches of Congress session after session. At the Forty-sixth Congress, third session, Mr. Walker, from the Senate Committee on Public Lands, submitted a report, No. 806, to accompany the bill (S. 1997) to quiet the title to certain lands in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan, and also the bill (S. 2026) to affirm to the State of Michigan certain lands heretofore granted to said State to aid in the construction of a railroad, and for other purposes. In that report is the following:

> By letter addressed to the Secretary of the Interior, dated July 10, 1873, the then governor of Michigan claims that the surrender by his predecessor of the lands granted by the act of Congress of June 3, 1856, in aid of the construction of a railroad from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin State line, was without authority, and that such lands still belonged to said State.
> It may be that the governor of Michigan had strictly no legal authority to make the release above mentioned of the lands along the line of the proposed railroad from Ontonagon to the State line. But, after that release, the General Land Office appears (and, as it seems to the committee, with good reason) to have considered and treated these lands (as well as those on the original line of the Marquette and State Line Railroad)—

As I said yesterday, this grant was a grant to aid a road running from two points, Marquette to the State line and Ontonagon to the State line, coming together at or near the State line. Mr. Walker says:

> But, after that release, the General Land Office appears (and as it seems to the committee with good reason) to have considered and treated these lands as well as those on the original line of the Marquette and State Line Railroad as having been fully revested in the United States, and to have disposed of about 29,931 acres of them to parties, who in good faith, and with good reason to believe the titles thus acquired to be perfect, purchased the same or made homestead entries, settlements, or pre-emption claims thereon, or selected them under other grants of the United States in aid of public works.
> It appears to the committee that justice to these parties requires that their titles so acquired should be confirmed and protected, to the extent that they would be if said grant to the State of Michigan had not been made; and that this may be done without any injustice to or just cause of complaint by the State of Michigan or any other party.

At the next session of Congress, the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, Mr. Walker made another report from the same committee, the Senate Committee on Public Lands, in which he said:

> It is claimed that the governor of Michigan had no authority to make the release of the lands along the line of the proposed railroad from Ontonagon to the State line, though the State still retains the lands received in exchange for them.

That is to say, the State retains the lands which were granted to aid in the construction of a new line down the lake shore southerly from Marquette in lieu of the grant made to aid in the construction of the road from Marquette to the State line, and it also claims the lands from Ontonagon to the State line.

> The General Land Office appears to have considered and treated these lands (as well as those on the original line of the Marquette and State Line Railroad) as having been, by this release, as well as by the forfeiture then supposed to exist from the failure to build the road, fully revested in the United States. The Land Office disposed of many thousand acres of the land to parties, who, in good faith and with good reason to believe the titles thus acquired to be perfect, purchased the same or made homestead entries, settlements, or pre-emption claims thereon, or selected them under other grants of the United States in aid of public works. Patents were issued in many of these cases and the titles were transferred to other innocent parties at advanced prices.
> It appears to the committee that justice to these parties requires that their titles so acquired should be confirmed and protected to the extent that they would be if said grant to the State of Michigan had not been made; and that this may be done without any injustice to or just cause of complaint by the State of Michigan or any other party.

Mr. DAWES. Will it interrupt the Senator if I ask him to try to explain this to me, so that I can understand it?

Mr. DOLPH. Certainly not.

Mr. DAWES. I understood the Senator, during his colloquy with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] to-day, to state that the proceeds of these lands built the canal and that the United States bought the canal of those persons who built it.

Mr. DOLPH. No. In the last river and harbor bill, which failed, it was proposed to authorize the purchase. It has not been purchased.

Mr. DAWES. If the amendment of the senior Senator from Michigan prevails, then that which built the canal will go back into the United States, when the United States has a consideration for it already.

Mr. DOLPH. Yes, or probably be taken by persons who, relying on the supposed illegality of the action of the Department in offering those lands as public lands at the time they were selected by the State of Michigan for this canal, and the want of authority on the part of the governor of the State of Michigan to release them, may have instituted the necessary proceedings to secure the title in case they are taken from the grantees of the canal company.

Mr. DAWES. Are those who are seeking to take this title bona fide occupants of the lands for a consideration?

Mr. DOLPH. No; they never could have gotten so far as to institute a claim by application which has been received by the local land officers, because the lands were certified to the State and the apparent title passed out of the General Government years ago.

Mr. DAWES. Then the amendment of the senior Senator from Michigan will put them back in the Government?

Mr. DOLPH. If the governor of Michigan had no authority to execute the deed of release to the United States, and the lands for the Ontonagon branch of this railroad—that is, the road from Ontonagon to the State line—were not forfeited by the act of Congress which authorized the company to change the line of the road and build it southernly down the lake shore—if those questions should be determined by the courts adversely to the claimants who have taken those lands as public lands, then the grant has never been forfeited from Ontonagon to the State line, and the lands have never been restored to the public domain, and this bill would forfeit them and restore them to the United States; but the Department has treated them as public lands, and the governor of the State of Michigan has selected them for the benefit of this canal company, and they have been transferred to private persons for value.

Mr. DAWES. But the company has built the canal.

Mr. DOLPH. The company has built the canal, and it is desired on the part of the Michigan people and other people of the Northwest that it should be purchased by the United States and become a free canal. But I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, this contest is not a contest against the canal on my part. It is because I regard the sweeping clause of the amendment proposed by my colleague unamended by the amendments that I sent to the desk yesterday, as altogether too comprehensive. It will confirm the title to 280,000 acres of land in Michigan which it was stated by a House committee was gotten illegally.

Mr. DAWES. Was it not gotten in good faith?

Mr. PALMER. I can not go into the merits of the case. I do not know whether it was gotten in good faith or not. It is considered by a great many of the people of our State to have been gotten in bad faith. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that it is only about 15,000 acres that are occupied by homesteaders. But the point is that that should not be brought in in this drag-net amendment; it is too important a thing, and I do not think it is germane to this railroad-forfeiture bill. I do not think it should come in here at all.

I am willing to go this far, to confirm the rights of cash entrymen and homesteaders, where there is no conflict with the lines of these railroads. But where there has been a contest and a charge of illegality on the part of a company getting 280,000 acres of land, I think that ought to "give us pause" before we take such a step. It is of more importance than the original forfeiture bill. This land is worth from $20,000,000 to $100,000,000.

I am perfectly willing to do justice to the canal company, but I think it should be divested of the questions involved in this bill, should come up for legislation alone, and where there are conflicting claims I think they should be adjudicated if possible, rather than legislated upon. That is all there is to it. I have no hostility to the canal company. I do not know any of its stockholders.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator consent, then, to amend the amendment, so that the act shall not apply at all to those lands, leave them out, unembarrassed? That seems to be what the Senator said he wanted.

Mr. PALMER. That is my want, as the Senator from Massachusetts has just stated. If I get the bearing of his words fully, I think that I will assent to that.

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator allow me to conclude my remarks?

Mr. PALMER. I beg pardon of the Senator from Oregon. I thought I had the floor.

Mr. DOLPH. I thought I was to be interrogated by the Senator.

Mr. President, I shall touch upon the question of cash entries directly, because "thereby hangs a tale." This amendment if amended as proposed by the senior Senator from Michigan would confirm the cash entries; but I desire now to refer to what the Senator has said in regard to a report of a committee of the House, and I will show that the report of the House Judiciary Committee is substantially the same as to its conclusions as the report of the Senate Committee on Public Lands. I have no interest in this matter. I only desire to protect the rights of innocent purchasers of the public lands within these grants which we are proposing to forfeit. If we undertake to protect the rights of a portion of the purchasers of such lands I think we ought to go to the extent of protecting all bona fide purchasers.

My knowledge of the facts is derived from official reports only. Mr. TAYLOR, from the House Committee on the Judiciary, at the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, submitted a report, No. 1266, a very elaborate and able report, reviewing all the facts and law in this case, in which he said:

It is difficult to discover any equity in either the State of Michigan or in the Ontonagon and Brulé River Railroad Company to the lands granted to the State of Michigan in aid of the Ontonagon and State Line Railroad Company.

It is also true of the purchasers of lands comprised in the original grant.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DOLPH. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. That report says that there is no equity in the Ontonagon and Brulé Company. I ask him if the effect of the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Michigan would not be to confirm the lands to that railroad company?

Mr. DOLPH. I am informed not. I am informed by the junior Senator from Michigan that it would not, and if the Senator from Arkansas will wait until I get through with my explanation the Senator can be heard; I will come to that matter directly.

Mr. BERRY. I ask whether it would not have the effect of confirming title to that railroad company which the report read by the Senator says has no equity?

Mr. DOLPH. This report says:

It is difficult to discover any equity in either the State of Michigan or in the Ontonagon and Brulé River Railroad Company to the lands granted to the State of Michigan in aid of the Ontonagon and State Line Railroad Company.

That is a company, as I understand, claiming these lands after the line of the road had been changed and other lands had been granted in lieu of these, and after the governor had released these lands by deed.

Mr. BERRY. A matter of State selection by the governor or otherwise.

Mr. DOLPH. I shall get to that question directly. This report says:

It is also true of the purchasers of lands comprised in the original grant that, according to the interpretation of the law by the Supreme Court, no matter what the forms of their title papers may be, such title will not stand the test of a court of law, but inasmuch as their purchases, entries, and pre-emptions were made without actual notice of any want of power on the part of the United States to convey, and inasmuch as they have paid their money, relying upon the ability of the Government to give that which they paid for, they have strong equitable claims on the Government for protection, and the purchasers of the canal lands have, in addition thereto, an equity as against the State of Michigan that can not be disregarded.

That is the House committee's report, not only that the persons who claim under selections by the State for the canal company have an equal equity as against the General Government with the pre-emption claimants and the persons who purchased at cash entry, but that they have an additional equity against the State which can not be disregarded.

That State, by its agent properly appointed, selected for the ship-canal company the lands which they now claim; nor is this equity weakened by the fact that the agent was also the president of the canal company; the present owners did not select him, and the State did by its own choice, knowing at the time his relation to the company.

Your committee have arrived at the conclusion that it is the right and duty of Congress to confirm the titles of all said purchasers and to forfeit so much of said grant as applies to the lands so held, and they therefore report a substitute for the bill referred to them, and recommend its passage.

That bill is very short, and I read it.

Be it enacted, etc., That the acts of said Interior Department and its officers in issuing such patents, certificates, and lists of lands, and in permitting such entries and making such sales of both the odd and even numbered sections within such limits, are hereby ratified, and the rights and titles of parties holding thereunder are hereby confirmed and protected; and said grant is hereby declared to have been and to be forfeited to the United States to the full extent necessary to confirm, protect, and make effectual said titles, but no further.

That was the action of the House committee; that was their report in favor of the equities of these claimants, and the bill they proposed confirmed the action of the Interior Department and the title of those persons who claim the lands so selected after they had been surrendered to the General Government.

As I have said, the proposition under consideration does not come from the Committee on Public Lands; it comes from one of the Senators from Michigan. It is proposed to confirm cash entries, to confirm pre-emption and homestead claims, which is all right—at least I do not object to it—although I will repeat what is charged against these cash entries, without vouching for its truth, that these lands were collusively opened by the local land officers to cash entry contrary to the law and without the authority of the Secretary of the Interior, contrary to the rule early established and always followed, that lands which have been once withdrawn from market and then restored are not thereafter subject to be entered for cash. We are going a step further in proposing to confirm these cash entries than Congress has gone in any other case.

Lands offered at public sale under the former practice of the Government were placed on the market subject to private entry at the minimum price. Any one individual could enter as many acres of offered land as he chose at that price. When they were withdrawn from sale under the general laws by a grant for any purpose, or otherwise, it has been uniformly held by the Department that they could not again be offered at private entry until they had again been offered at public sale. The cash entries that are proposed to be confirmed in this case are cash entries which were made contrary to that rule.

I desire to clean up this matter, to open a new set of books, to settle all this controversy over these lands. I do not know that the amendment of the junior Senator from Michigan does this. It is possible that it may cover some case in which the title ought not to be confirmed. If so, I do not know it. But if there are any cases where State selections of public lands have been made in pursuance of a valid law and under the authority and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and the lands so selected are now held by innocent purchasers, while we are restoring these land grants to the public domain we should by some general provision or special provisions applicable to particulars cases settle all these controversies and confirm the title of every innocent purchaser, no matter by what means he derived his title, if he derived it under color of the laws of the United States and by the authority of the Interior Department and the local land offices. We should confirm their titles and close the books now, and not leave it for subsequent legislation.

I ask the junior Senator from Michigan if he understands the statement of the Senator from Arkansas with regard to this amendment confirming titles to a railroad company that was not entitled to a grant at all to be correct.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. I will state that I did not clearly understand the point made. I was unable to hear the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator from Oregon will allow me——

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to have the Senator restate his proposition, so that the Senator from Michigan may understand it.

Mr. BERRY. The amendment offered by the junior Senator from Michigan confirms all lands that have heretofore been selected by the State either for the canal company or for the railroad company. Now, I assert that the governor of Michigan has selected a certain portion of these lands. I do not know the amount, but it was claimed by a railroad company in 1880 that it had built 20 miles of the Ontonagon railroad and the selected lands were conveyed to the railroad company. I think there is some conflict as to some of these lands between that company and the canal company. But the State of Michigan assumed in both cases to select the lands and turn them over to the railroad company or to the canal company.

Then I say that the effect of the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Michigan, if adopted, is to confirm to both the railroad company and the canal company all selections that have been heretofore made by the State of Michigan; and if there is a conflict then the courts will decide whether or not the selections made by the canal company and the railroad company were proper selections. I say that I am opposed to confirming any lands to that railroad company and I am opposed to confirming any lands to that canal company.

In the first place, it is a question of law and a question about which able lawyers differ whether or not these 15,000 acres were authorized to be selected by the canal company. They went away from the line of the canal. They left thousands of acres between the canal and those they selected, and they selected some of the most valuable lands in the State of Michigan. That is a question of law to be decided. Yet this amendment undertakes to say that the parties who made homes there, the parties who hold title from the Government, the men who own their little homes—and it is all they have—shall be deprived of them and they be given over to a canal company or a railroad company. The mischief of that is shown by the fact that the Commissioner of the General Land Office without any authority of law gave to the State of Michigan 50,000 acres more than he was authorized to give, and that went to these railroad companies. I am opposed to giving any railroad company another foot of land. I will not vote to confirm it. I believe that when they failed to complete the road within the ten years given by Congress they have no legal right and no equity that we are bound to respect.

I am in favor of actual settlers, homesteaders, and those claiming under pre-emption claims taking whatever remains of the public land, and I am opposed to placing in this bill a section that would confirm either to the railroad company or the canal company, as the court might decide, the homes of these people who have taken them from the Government believing they had a right to take them.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator from Arkansas is no more in favor of confirming the title of settlers on the public lands than I am; but when I do something for the settlers I want it to be of some substantial benefit to them. I would give them a piece of land and not a lawsuit. I think it is impossible that the statement made by the Senator from Arkansas can be correct, because if the State had selected any portion of these lands for the canal company, and they had been held to be public lands at the time by the Interior Department, and approved to the State by the Department, from that moment the Interior Department had no jurisdiction over them and no power to dispose of them. The title passed from the United States, so far as the Interior Department was concerned, and no man could lawfully go upon such lands under the homestead or pre-emption law, nor could any such claim be allowed.

So there is no conflict here, as I understand, between any person who has gone lawfully and with the permission and authority of the General Land Office or the local land offices upon any of these lands which are held by the assignees of the canal company.

Now, in regard to the other proposition, I do not clearly understand the Senator from Arkansas yet whether or not his statement is that some railroad company undertook to build the railroad and to claim the lands under the original grant, undertook to build from Ontonagon to the State line after these lands had been released to the General Government by the governor of the State and selected for other grants to the State. If that is the case, will the Senator from Arkansas inform me if he understands that the Interior Department recognizes that claim?

Mr. BERRY. I understand that the governor of Michigan made the selections for the benefit of the new railroad company after the decision in the Schulenberg vs. Harriman case, wherein the Supreme Court of the United States decided that it took an act of Congress to declare a forfeiture. Thereupon a railroad company undertook to get these lands under the original act of 1856, and the governor of Michigan, after they had built 20 miles, selected land along that line and conveyed it to them. That is what the report of Mr. Taylor, from which the Senator read, says. That is what the report of Senator Walker said. That is the way I understand it, and I understand that the effect of the amendment would be to give that land to this railroad company to the exclusion of the citizens who had taken up the land in the mean time under the pre-emption and homestead laws.

Mr. SAWYER. My friend does not understand the amendment at all. The amendment simply confirms lands that have been bought by individuals from the Government, and where the money paid is still in the hands of the Government and there is no pre-emption on the lands. That is all the amendment does.

Mr. BERRY. I beg the Senator's pardon. I read in the amendment:

> That in all cases when any of the lands forfeited by the first section of this act, or when any lands relinquished to, or for any cause resumed by, the United States from grants for railroad purposes, have heretofore been disposed of by the proper officers of the United States, by sales, entries, locations, or State selections, under color of the public-land laws.

Mr. SAWYER. That is what I say.

Mr. BERRY. By State selections, by locations, or by entries.

Mr. SAWYER. But the Government still retains the land, and there is no pre-emption on it.

Mr. BERRY. It confirms all State selections in express words.

Mr. DOLPH. Now, I will show the Senator that he is entirely mistaken; that as a member of the Committee on Public Lands he has agreed to a report which confirms these very lands to this very railroad company.

Mr. BERRY. I say to the Senator that I never agreed to a report to confirm a foot of land, and every Senator on that committee knows it to be true. Not only that, I say that I voted in that committee to forfeit every foot of land not only along the uncompleted portions, but along the completed portions that were not completed within the time specified by Congress. The Senator from Oregon knows that I have held that position since I have been a member of that committee.

Mr. DOLPH. It would not be correct to say that the bill as reported by the Senate Committee on Public Lands confirms these lands along any completed road, and to that extent I was in error. I used the word "confirms" unadvisedly. The bill only forfeits lands which are adjacent to uncompleted road, but I did not understand the Senator to oppose this bill. If this land grant never has been forfeited, and the deed of the governor of Michigan was not sufficient to transfer the land to the General Government for the 25 miles of road which has been built by a company entitled to claim the grant, and for which the lands have been selected and conveyed to the company, such lands are left by this bill precisely in the condition that lands adjacent to the completed road of any other company are left.

The first section of the bill excludes these lands, and the amendment of the junior Senator from Michigan does not affect them at all, because his amendment refers only to lands which this bill undertakes to forfeit. Therefore the whole argument of the Senator from Arkansas falls to the ground. I repeat it, falls to the ground, because it is made in reference to lands claimed on account of completed road which are not attempted to be forfeited by the first section of the bill, while the amendment of the junior Senator from Michigan applies only to the lands which lie adjacent to uncompleted road, and which this bill attempts to forfeit. So therefore I say the Senator from Arkansas is wrong, and if we confirm the selections made by the State of the lands which are now held by the grantees of the canal company it does not affect the question at all of the right of that railroad company to lands for the 25 completed miles.

Mr. PALMER. The objection that I have to this amendment is its comprehensive character, for it says: "That in all cases when any of the lands forfeited by the first section of this act or when any lands relinquished to or for any cause resumed by the United States from grants for railroad purposes," etc. That brings the Ontonagon and Brulé grant within the category, unless we get an amendment subsequent to this on this bill, and it would confirm all the entries of the lands in the grant where the road had been built.

Mr. DOLPH. Why so?

Mr. PALMER. Because those lands have been "relinquished to or for any cause resumed" by the United States. They were not relinquished, but that explanatory clause "or for any cause resumed by" I think would cover them.

But the objection I have to this amendment is, as I said before, its comprehensive character. If the bill was entitled "A bill to confirm the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Canal Company's grant, and for other purposes," I think it would express, as far as value is concerned, the intent of the measure; that is, if this is adopted without qualification; but with the amendment I have sent up I think it will be acceptable to the Senator from Arkansas. I know it is to my colleague, for we agreed upon it before his amendment was sent up. I would ask the Senator from Arkansas to listen to the reading of my amendments to the amendment, and possibly it will save a great deal of disputation on this very matter. So amended it limits the action of this confirmation to the cash-entrymen and to the homesteaders, but only in cases where there is no conflict.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan where these parties live who are interested to uphold the validity of the State selections? Do they live in Michigan or in other States?

Mr. PALMER. The "State selections" is such a vague and indefinite and comprehensive phrase that I want it stricken out.

Mr. BLAIR. I know the Senator wants it stricken out, but he would not be particular to have it stricken out if it was not of importance. Now I ask him if it be not the fact that those parties who would hold under the State selections made by the State of Michigan are non-residents of the State of Michigan?

Mr. PALMER. That I do not know.

Mr. BLAIR. I will ask the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE], then.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator asked me a question, let me answer it, and it possibly will save a good deal of disputation.

The stockholders of the canal company which is expressly aimed at, which this was intended to cure the titles of, undoubtedly lived mostly out of Michigan; but I myself might be benefited $100,000 by leaving that term "State selections" in. I have lands that have been selected by the State and claimed as swamp lands, and the State has deeded those lands, although I have had patents from the United States for twenty-five years. I do not know but what this would perfect my title, but I do not propose to come here to grind my ax in the United States Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the Senator if he moves to have it stricken out in order that he may be deprived of $100,000 worth of land?

Mr. PALMER. No, sir; I do not pretend to any Spartan virtue, but I am willing to take my chances in the courts.

Mr. BLAIR. I imagine the Senator has as much Spartan virtue, however, as anybody, and I rose for information. I supposed these words "State selections" covered the rights of parties non-residents of Michigan and who have invested largely in the construction of the canal. The Senator was saying that he and his colleague had agreed between themselves that this amendment should be so modified. I simply wished to develop the fact that they were not making an agreement to anything which touched the interests of the residents of the State of Michigan, and other Senators might be concerned in representing interests elsewhere that would be covered only by this term "State selections."

Mr. PALMER. In regard to the amendment that my colleague sent up, it was drawn by parties who knew him; but he did not comprehend entirely the comprehensiveness of that amendment; and what I object to is that that is more important and may be so in its results than the whole forfeiture of all the railroad grants. If they would bring in a bill for the confirmation of those titles and the forfeiture of the land grants, I would agree to consider it, or for the confirmation of those titles in themselves. But as long as there are grave charges of fraud—and I can read from the House report in regard to that—and irregularity, I do not think it ought to be scooped in by an amendment like this. I think it is a kind of loose legislation that should not be indulged in.

Mr. BLAIR. Would not the Senator think on the whole, rather than to develop this tremendous controversy which has agitated the Senate and the State of Michigan and many parties, that it would be better to reject this amendment and not encumber this general forfeiture bill with the old Ontonagon controversy? Would not it be better to leave it all out?

Mr. PALMER. As far as I am concerned I have no objection to its rejection. I am inclined to assist my colleague in getting this through, and as far as I am concerned I will vote for it to please him, because on the whole it is correct; but as far as these parties are concerned I do not care anything about it.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Michigan if he is in favor of forfeiting to the United States the 15,000 acres of land alluded to by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]?

Mr. PALMER. What was the question? There was so much conversation around me that I did not hear it.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Oregon alluded to 15,000 acres of land connected with the construction of that canal. I inquire of the Senator from Michigan if he is in favor of the forfeiture of those 15,000 acres to the United States?

Mr. PALMER. That matter is in conflict now between the canal company and the railroad. I should certainly be in favor of it—that is, as far as the rights of the road are concerned.

Mr. DAWES. So far as the rights of the canal are concerned?

Mr. PALMER. I do not think that is up for discussion.

Mr. DAWES. Can the Senator answer the question? Is he in favor of the forfeiture of these 15,000 acres of land to the United States?

Mr. PALMER. As against the canal company.

Mr. DAWES. Whether or no?

Mr. PALMER. No, sir; but as against the canal company. I have a right to add that qualification to the question.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator, of course, can qualify his answer as he pleases.

Mr. PALMER. As far as the railroad company is concerned, I am in favor of its forfeiture. As far as the canal company is concerned, I do not desire that matter to be involved in this bill. When a bill comes up for its forfeiture as against the canal company I will consider that question on its merits.

Mr. DAWES. The question I asked was leading up to this question: Whether the comprehensive phraseology of the bill after these words are stricken out will not have that effect to forfeit them to the United States, whether or no? Does the Senator understand the operative words of the bill, when his amendment is adopted, will or will not have the effect to forfeit them to the United States, whether or no, without reference to the canal company, railroad company, private individuals, or anybody else?

Mr. PALMER. No, sir; I do not think it would at all.

Mr. DAWES. I so understand it.

Mr. PALMER. I think the vested rights, with the exception of those of the railroad company, remain to the canal company, the cash-entry man, and the homesteaders; and if the Senator will listen to the amendment as I should like to see it amended he probably will get a new idea of my intent.

That in all cases when any of the lands forfeited by the first section of this act, or when any lands relinquished to, or for any cause resumed by, the United States from grants for railroad purposes, have heretofore been disposed of by the proper officers of the United States—

To whom? The Senator from Massachusetts will follow me—by sales, entries, locations, or State selections, under color of the public-land laws—

"Locations or State selections" being stricken out—and where the consideration received therefor is still retained by the Government, the right and title of all persons holding or claiming under such disposals shall be, and is hereby, confirmed: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to confirm any sales or entries—

This proviso is my second amendment—of lands upon which there were bona fide pre-emption or homestead claims on the 1st day of January, 1888, arising or asserted under color of the laws of the United States: And provided further, And no sales or entries shall be hereby confirmed to the prejudice of any pre-emption or homestead claims now valid under existing decisions of the Secretary of the Interior, and which were existing on the 1st day of January, 1888.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator may have an amendment to justify his statement as to the effect of the bill without his colleague's amendment. My question was, if the bill passed without his colleague's amendment, or with his colleague's amendment amended as he proposes, whether it would not sweep these 15,000 acres of land out of everybody's hands to the United States. I understand him to say that he does not understand the effect of the bill to be that.

Now, I would like to read to the Senate in his hearing the phraseology of the bill. The trouble about these 15,000 acres of land is that they were once selected for a railroad, and afterwards selected for a canal. It is enacted, if this bill passes without the Senator's colleague's amendment, or with his colleague's amendment amended by him in these words:

That there is hereby forfeited to the United States, and the United States hereby assumes the title thereto, all lands heretofore granted to any State or to any corporation to aid in the construction of a railroad opposite to and coterminous with the portion of any such railroad not now completed and in operation for the construction or benefit of which lands have heretofore been granted.

These lands were granted to this many-sided railroad—I do not know what its name is.

Mr. PALMER. The Ontonagon and Brulé.

Mr. DAWES. And then after that company concluded not to build the railroad the State of Michigan thought it had a right to grant the land to the canal company, and the canal company went on and built their canal. It turns out that Michigan had not the right to make that grant to the canal company, that it remains still in the railroad company; and now this bill will forfeit it as unearned land of the railroad company to the United States, unless the amendment of the Senator's colleague prevails.

Mr. PALMER. I ask whether the 15,000 acres are opposite the completed portion of the road?

Mr. DAWES. I understand not, but I am not certain.

Mr. PALMER. Then the gentleman will excuse me for saying that he is playing Don Quixote on this question, for it does not seem to me to apply at all. It only forfeits the lands opposite the completed portion.

Mr. DOLPH. These selections are opposite the completed portion.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know but that I may be playing Don Quixote—I do not know how that may be—with the windmill. My colleague suggests that is the way that gentleman was fighting. But this is plain language, and I am not playing with the Senator or putting conundrums to him. The proposition of the bill, in plain language, forfeits the land opposite the uncompleted portion of the road. Now, this is opposite the uncompleted portion of the road, and the difficulty about it is that the State of Michigan went on afterwards and utilized that land for the building of the canal, and the canal is built, and now it is proposed to forfeit the land to the United States, and the United States keeps the benefit of it. I do not see how that is fair.

Mr. PALMER. I do not know but that I may be a little obscure on that point, but it seems to me that it does not affect the rights of the canal company at all. It merely affects the rights of the railroad company; and if the canal company have any vested rights there they have redress before the courts.

Mr. DOLPH. The same may be said of all the cash-entry men and the homesteaders and pre-emptioners.

Mr. HOAR. I can not understand on what principle of justice the Senator from Michigan bases his position with regard to the effect of the bill one way or the other. If one man is to have his land saved to him, although he got it under a defective proceeding in law, because he actually paid the consideration which the public has got, that man living in Michigan, I should like to know why the man who paid his consideration under the same circumstances should not have his title confirmed merely because he lives in Boston? That is a point I should like to have answered.

Mr. PLATT. Regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business.

ADMISSION OF DAKOTA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 185) to provide for the admission of the State of Dakota into the Union, and for the organization of the Territory of Lincoln, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. BUTLER to the amendment reported by the Committee on Territories as amended.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], who is entitled to the floor, is called out by a professional engagement in the Supreme Court, and he has kindly consented that I should take his place. Perhaps he may be detained longer than I shall desire to address the Senate.

It has always impressed me that the opposition to the admission of the Territory of Dakota was totally unjustifiable and latterly factious, so much so, as to be subject to the severe criticism of every one who likes to see fair play on great questions affecting the interests of large masses of our people.

Why should Dakota be excluded from the Union? I have listened to the larger part of this debate, and I have not heard a single reason given except only that the people of South Dakota prefer to be organized as a State by themselves, leaving the equal half of the old Territory to be organized into another State in due time by act of Congress. The people of Dakota have expressed their wishes to that effect. What reason has been even suggested why this should not be done?

Why should any qualification or condition be added to such a bill? Not one has been given that I have heard. There never has been a Territory or a community applying for admission into the Union of States with anything like so large a population, with anything like such developed resources. I have had the pleasure to take part in the admission of five new States since I have been in Congress. Minnesota probably was the largest of all, and yet Minnesota at the time it was admitted had not one-half the population of Southern Dakota. Kansas, about which the country almost went to war, had a population of only about 130,000 at the time of her admission. Nebraska had a population of less than 100,000 when admitted. Twenty-eight years ago Kansas, which has now developed into a magnificent empire, had less population, less resources, less railroads, less schools, less land, less everything than South Dakota has to-day. Why it should not be admitted I therefore can not imagine.

I find on the statement made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] that this new State—and I have had the pleasure of passing through it and know something about its resources and its extent—has an area of 77,000 square miles; just about twice the size of Ohio, which now contains three and a half million people. Its population as he puts it, on the lowest basis is over 400,000 inhabitants. He says:

> No authority puts it less than 382,000, and that was some time ago, while the population has been rapidly increasing, so that it may be said in round numbers to be 400,000. South Dakota has 2,770 school-houses. It has school property of the value of $2,046,000. It expended for public schools in 1887 $1,670,000.
> It has 231 newspapers, and 200 banks with a banking capital of $5,700,000. The assessed value of all property in 1887, exclusive of railroads, and exclusive, of course, of the lands which have been entered upon but which have not been patented, was $85,452,000. Miles of railroad, 2,243.

And yet no one of the five States that I have seen admitted into the Union had at the time of its admission more than 50 or 60 miles of railway. Even Iowa long after she was admitted had only one road—a little railroad about 25 miles from the river to Iowa City. Besides, it seems this Territory had:

> Number of horses in 1887, 128,000; number of cattle, 734,000; number of sheep, 194,000; number of swine, 387,000; bushels of wheat raised in 1887 in Southern Dakota, 26,632,000—

Which was more than was raised in Ohio in 1840, and Ohio then led all the Union in the growth of wheat—> bushels of oats, 24,628,000; bushels of corn, 23,510,000; bushels of barley, 3,990,000.

That is the best sign I see in the whole list, because it shows that this region of Dakota contains a part of the corn belt, which I think is altogether the most valuable for agricultural products except the grass belt. It yielded:

> Bushels of barley, 3,990,000; flax, 3,200,000. Value of buildings in South Dakota belonging to the Territory, $715,207; gold and silver produced in 1886, $3,125,000.

So that this vast country of 77,000 square miles contains riches under the earth and riches upon the soil, contains an intelligent, progressive population already doing more toward schools than many of the States of the Union.

Why should it not be admitted? In the name of Heaven, why? It is simply because the Democratic party do not want it to be admitted. There is no use to go behind the fact. They say they have the power to prevent it, and they have the power and they have prevented it. The people of Dakota are suffering all the inconveniences of a Territorial condition. I passed through the Territory once or twice since this debate has commenced and they complain of it. They say they are American citizens, contributing now to our national wealth more than many of the old States, with a population of 400,000 entitled to two or three members of Congress, and that they are denied representation here—the same complaint that was made against the Government of Great Britain when our ancestors, only five times the number of those now in Dakota, but divided into thirteen colonies, rebelled because they were subjected to taxation without representation.

Mr. President, that is all I intend to say about this matter. It has seemed to me simply a political question. This State, with its magnificent territory and development, is to be kept out by a political party in this country to prevent its participating in the election of a President of the United States and a Congress of the United States; and it will be kept out, notwithstanding all their complaints, on some pretext or until some other State less entitled, but of other politics, shall be attached to it and hauled in on its skirts. That is the purpose, and it will be consummated. The eloquent addresses which have been made on this side of the Chamber by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], will be of no avail. Those Senators may expend their learning and their eloquence and their reason by the hour, and it will fall as impassive and unimpressive on this Democratic party which now holds the power of excluding these people from representation as if they spoke to the icy winds of the North Pole, and, therefore, there is no use in wasting argument about it.

Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] substantially admitted this in speaking of it as a political matter. He drew into this discussion a question of vital interest, but totally irrelevant, totally disconnected with the subject of Dakota, and the only point with me is whether I ought to follow him and answer what he said. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] would no doubt have done it much better, but he is not here.

The matter to which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] alludes has excited so much interest among the people of this country for some ten or twelve years that I deem it justice to myself, as well as to others not here, to answer him. I intend before I am through to bring witnesses that the gentlemen on the other side of the house will believe, and I tell them that in Louisiana, the State to which he alludes, there was a bloody revolution, admitted by the actors in it and boasted of by them only within the last year.

One of these is a member of the Senate of the United States, the other was and is still the governor of the State of Louisiana, and he admitted and boasted that by tragic work, by armed forces, not only was the military force of the United States overcome and cowed down, but the helpless and feeble people of a State were actually deprived of their elective franchise. The witnesses that I will bring before you, and read from their statements, made in that State, have themselves admitted in express and explicit words every charge made by the Republicans in regard to the election of 1876. They openly call their own action revolution, speak of the marshalling of armies, speak of the beating down two United States companies that were guarding a Republican meeting. I will bring these witnesses forward in a moment. Now, I read what the honorable Senator from Missouri said:

> Mr. VEST. The Senator from Vermont would have been here with another piece of legislation equivalent to that of 1876, when he created that celebrated board which put Hayes into the Presidential chair. He would have found some way to have reached these people.

To which the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] replied:

> In the allusion he has made to 1876, I wish to say with emphasis that I believe, and I think nine-tenths of the people of the United States who know anything about it believe, that President Hayes was lawfully and fairly and justly elected by the votes of the States according to the Constitution of our country, and that the only evil which existed in respect of that matter was the attempt of a body of men, whose headquarters was in the city of New York, to buy the electors of the State of South Carolina; and that body of men was not of the Republican party.

To that the Senator from Missouri responded:

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have never understood, and the people of this country have never been able to understand, why Packard was not elected governor with a larger number of votes than Hayes received for President. But Packard was thrown out and sent as consul to Liverpool, and Hayes was sworn in as President of the United States.

In addition to that, the Senator from Missouri, continuing his colloquy with the Senator from Vermont, said:

The conviction is settled to-day with the people of the United States, irrespective of party, in my judgment, that Rutherford B. Hayes was not fairly elected President of the United States.

Here is a declaration by one Senator that Mr. Hayes was not elected President, and that that is the general conviction of the people of this country, and, on the other hand, by another Senator equally distinguished, that nine-tenths of the people of the United States believe that Hayes was legally, fairly, and properly elected; and this contention occurs here twelve years after the event. It ought to be discussed if there is any doubt about it; and if I do not convince Senators who will hear me, not only by the evidence that was taken at the time when it was fresh, but by events that have transpired since, that all that was charged by the Republicans in 1876 is now conceded history which enters into the documents of our history without one particle of dispute or controversy, I shall yield.

It is known that when the controversy grew up in regard to the vote of Louisiana in 1876 General Grant, now eulogized and extolled by all men, selected certain gentlemen of both political parties, men who had been in public life, men who had characters at stake, to go to Louisiana; and, in addition, the Democratic party, through its proper organs, selected other gentlemen, equally distinguished, men of character and standing, but all partisans, all Democrats, while the commission selected by General Grant was not all of one party. These gentlemen were requested to go to New Orleans, not to interfere with the performance of any duty imposed upon any officer, but to look on and see that the returning board performed their duty under the laws of Louisiana. I happened to be one of that number. There are several around me. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] was one of that number, and there were other persons, some dead and gone, who went there. Among the Democrats were such distinguished men as Mr. McDonald (although I think Mr. McDonald was chosen by General Grant as well) and Mr. Trumbull, formerly a Senator from Illinois, and other distinguished men.

They went down there to see what was done. What was the conduct we were called upon to watch? It was to see whether the returning board appointed under the local laws of the State of Louisiana, consisting of five men, to take up and examine the reports of the election held in that State and make out the formal statement or return, acted correctly. So far as the vote for electors was concerned that return was to be sent to the Presiding Officer of the Senate. So far as the returns affected the State officers they were to be sent under the laws of that State to the Legislature of the State and prima facie the names on these lists of members of the Legislature were to be sworn in, subject, however, to the constitutional right of each house to pass upon the returns and qualifications of its members. Then the law of Louisiana provided that after the Legislature was organized the Legislature should pass upon the returns of the election for governor of the State. So the returning board performed its functions so far as Presidential electors were concerned by transmitting the result under the laws of the United States to the President of the Senate and the others were transmitted to the Legislature when it convened. That was its duty.

Now, what were these men required to do under the law of Louisiana?—a law that had been framed by both political parties, acquiesced in by both, and now substantially the law in Louisiana, if I am not mistaken; so that it was not a bad law. It provides, in substance—

That whenever from any poll or voting place there shall be received by the board the statement of any supervisor of registration or commissioner of election, confirmed by the affidavits of three or more citizens, of any riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences, which prevent or tend to prevent a fair, free, and peaceable vote of all qualified electors entitled to vote at such polls, the board shall proceed to investigate the facts, and if, from such statement and affidavits, they shall be convinced that such causes did not materially interfere with the purity and freedom of such election, or prevent a sufficient number of qualified voters from voting to materially change the result of the election, then such votes shall be canvassed and compiled; but if they are not thus fully convinced, it shall be their duty to examine further testimony in regard thereto, and to that end shall have power to send for persons and papers; and if, after examination, the board shall be convinced that such acts of violence, intimidation, etc., did materially interfere with the purity and freedom of the election at such poll, or did prevent a sufficient number of qualified electors from registering or voting to materially change the result of the election, then the board shall not canvass or compile the vote of such poll, but shall exclude it from their returns.

This law was passed with a view to events that had long before transpired in Louisiana. It was passed with a view to secure a fair election. The returns from the different parishes as they came in were to go before the returning board. They had no authority to do any more than this: where in any precinct or parish intimidation and violence were proved so great as to change the result of the election and to justify the exclusion of that vote, they were authorized to exclude it. They were not authorized to allow people to be counted as having voted who would have voted if they had been allowed to do so. All they could do was to exclude the parish, the place, the poll-book, and the poll where fraud and violence had occurred. There was a great mass of testimony taken before those men, five of them, two colored and three white, as I remember, respectable citizens of Louisiana, one of whom had been governor of the State, another had been for years a member of the State senate, who live there yet if they are still living. No objection was made to them. They were appointed by the Legislature. They did their duty.

It was feared when we were sent there that they would carry on their business in secret, concealed from the public at large; but instead of that the very moment we arrived there both Democrats and Republicans were invited to come and appear before the returning board, with our shorthand reporter to take down everything that was done; so that it was as public as the Senate of the United States. We did enter upon the performance of a public duty with our reporter, who took down all that was said and took copies of the affidavits. Gentlemen of both sides were always present. Generally, as a matter of convenience, we appointed a committee of five Democrats and five Republicans to go and see that the thing was fairly conducted. Every paper that entered into those lists was opened in our presence. Here they are [exhibiting a printed volume]. It was all reported to the Senate of the United States, and is contained in this public document. The Democratic part of it was reported also by another Senator of the United States. That was printed, and I have it here on my table, with affidavits on both sides. The returning board, in the discharge of their duty, openly and above board made out their returns, and from that day to this I have never heard the accuracy of those returns disputed. It may have been said that the evidence was insufficient; that the evidence was not in due form. It was in the form of affidavits; it was in the form required by the law of Louisiana. It is here, and no man questions the accuracy of it.

On the face of the affidavits returned to the Senate by these two visiting committees the testimony is amply sufficient to sustain every action of that returning board. It was printed and discussed here in the Senate of the United States. I made a speech, reading the salient points of the testimony as it affected the different parishes and precincts in question. Senator Bogy, the predecessor of my friend from Missouri [Mr. VEST], also made a long and elaborate speech, and read from the affidavits on the Democratic side, and we had it fairly debated. I say now, without fear of contradiction, that any lawyer who waived the mere forms of taking depositions, taking affidavits for what they are worth, would say upon the face of these papers that the return made by the returning board was fair and right and honest.

The returns came here. They were acted upon. There was a dispute about their validity. There was a question whether the vote ought to be counted as returned. According to the vote as it was actually cast it did appear that there was a Democratic majority in Louisiana, but acting under the law, by the exclusion of parishes where there was unquestioned fraud and violence, extending, as I shall show hereafter, to murder in many cases—acting upon the law as they did and excluding those parishes where fraud and violence prevailed, the result was a majority in favor of President Hayes. That vote in favor of President Hayes in Louisiana was just as sacred, just as good as the vote of the State of Ohio and the State of New York.

Sir, if the truth had been told, if the actual result as it would have been if there had been a fair election in Louisiana had been known, Hayes would have been elected by from 10,000 to 20,000 majority in Louisiana, because this violence was committed in parishes where the Republican majority was very large, so that when the returning board threw out those parishes we lost not only the votes excluded by actual violence, as shown by the testimony, but we lost the large majority we would have had in those parishes if there had been no violence and fraud.

When the Senator from Missouri says to the Senate that there was anything illegal or wrong in regard to the election of Mr. Hayes, I take issue with him, and with entire frankness. He does not point out any mistake or misconduct of the returning officers, but he states that a commission was organized by Congress to decide the legal questions which arose out of the returns of two or three Southern States. Who organized that commission? Who voted for it? Why should that vote be thrown into our teeth as a matter of reproach? No one resisted the passage of that law more than I did. The then Senator from Indiana, Mr. Morton, did all he could to prevent the passage of the Electoral Commission bill, because we believed it was extrajudicial.

Mr. VEST. Will it disturb the Senator if I ask him a question for information?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all.

Mr. VEST. I understand him to state now that Mr. Hayes was entitled to the electoral vote of Louisiana upon the returns, after throwing out the votes of certain parishes where fraud and violence obtained. Now, I will ask him if it is not a fact of record that Mr. Packard received more votes for governor than Mr. Hayes did for President, and how it happened that Mr. Packard was deprived of his office and thrown out of the office of governor whilst Hayes received the same or a smaller vote?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is what I intend to answer, and it is the infamy of this transaction, as I shall show the Senate.

Mr. VEST. That is what I should like to know.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the very point I wanted to answer, without which I would not have risen to say a word. I intend to show how Packard came to be excluded from an office to which he was fairly and honestly elected, and that is the worst of the whole thing. But I want to speak a little further about the commission before coming to that.

Who started the Electoral Commission? I have here the vote. There were grave fears lest the disputes growing out of the contests in those States might create trouble; even civil war was threatened. I did not think there was any danger of it. I believed that the Constitution pointed out the way in which the electoral vote should be counted, and therefore I resisted the extrajudicial proceeding to organize by law a mode to perform a constitutional function, but I was outvoted. Who passed the Electoral Commission bill, I again ask? Here is the vote in the Senate of the United States. It passed the Senate on the 26th of January, 1877. There were for it 26 Democrats and 21 Republicans; against it, 14 Republicans and 2 Democrats. Mr. Eaton, of Connecticut, and Mr. Hamilton, of Maryland, were the only two Democrats who voted against that bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. Hamilton, of Maryland, was not in the Senate then.

Mr. SHERMAN. Was not Hamilton here then?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; he left the Senate the 4th of March, 1875.

Mr. SHERMAN. Senator Whyte, of Maryland, voted for the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. And Senator Dennis, of Maryland.

Mr. SHERMAN. I copied this from the RECORD this morning, and I will read it. Those who voted in the affirmative were:

Messrs. Alcorn, ALLISON, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Booth, Boutwell, Burnside, Chaffee, Christiancy, COCKRELL, Conkling, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, DAWES, Dennis, EDMUNDS, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Howe, Johnston, Jones, of Florida; JONES, of Nevada; Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, MORRILL, Price, Randolph, RANSOM, Robertson, SAULSBURY, Sharon, Stevenson, TELLER, Thurman, Wallace, Whyte, Windom, Withers, and Wright.

Twenty-six Democrats and 21 Republicans, as I have classed them. Those who voted in the negative were:

Messrs. Blaine, Bruce, CAMERON, of Pennsylvania; Cameron, of Wisconsin; Clayton, Conover, Dorsey, Eaton, Hamilton, Hamlin, INGALLS, MITCHELL, Morton, Patterson, Sargent, SHERMAN, and West.

Mr. Hamilton was here then and voted.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was Hamilton, of Texas.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was Hamilton, of Texas, then.

Mr. BLAIR. He was a Republican.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; he was a Republican.

Mr. BLAIR. There was only one Democrat who voted against the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I took it for Senator Hamilton, of Maryland, who had been here for some time.

Mr. COCKRELL. He went out in 1875.

Mr. SHERMAN. The same kind of a vote was given in the other House. Yet what does the Senator from Missouri say about it? He treats this as a kind of Republican trick to get the Democrats into a hobble. They at the time thought they were going to get the best of this arrangement, and that they would get a tribunal which would decide in their favor. Here is what the honorable Senator from Missouri said about it:

Mr. VEST. Oh, Mr. President—

When the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] spoke about the commission having been organized to preserve the peace for high national purposes, the Senator from Missouri said:

Oh, Mr. President, we have heard all this again and again, in regard to the action of that commission and its necessity to avert civil war. In my judgment there was no such necessity. In my judgment the Democrats who consented to it made a great mistake; and if they had only stood by their legal and constitutional rights, with the great public opinion of the country behind them, Mr. Tilden would have been inaugurated by right indisputable into the executive chair of this country.

Now, twelve years after the event, after the judgment of the tribunal organized by the Democrats was against them, the Senator from Missouri says they did wrong. It is very easy to judge after the fact; much easier than to judge before the fact. I have no doubt that the Senators on both sides who voted for the passage of that bill did it under the gravest considerations of public duty. I never would call in question their motives. I did not myself see that the exigency demanded it, and therefore I voted against it; but so far from its being a partisan measure for partisan purposes by the Republicans it was believed that it was a means by which the decision of the returning board of Louisiana could be overthrown, and by which the people of the United States would be deprived of the President elected by them in a lawful and constitutional way.

I said then, over and over again, that, so help me God, if I were in the place of Mr. Tilden, I never would accept the office if it was tendered to me in the face of that testimony, and I do believe that if Mr. Tilden had become President by any hocus-pocus he would have knowingly enjoyed an office to which he was not elected, and that if he had assumed the office he would have held it by fraud, and wrong, and crime, the very description of which now almost appalls me, although years after these events transpired.

Mr. President, let us go a little further. The Senator from Missouri asked me a question that I intended to answer, and I will answer it with the utmost frankness. In order that I may answer it fairly I will put in the RECORD now the question as he put it yesterday:

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have never understood, and the people of this country have never been able to understand, why Packard was not elected governor with a larger number of votes than Hayes received for President. But Packard was thrown out and sent as consul to Liverpool, and Hayes was sworn in as President of the United States.

The answer to that I made within a very short time afterwards, if you will allow me to quote from myself, in a speech to the people of Ohio. It was made on the 17th of August, 1877, a few months after this occurred, when the whole matter was explained. With the leave of the Senate I will put in the RECORD a portion of my remarks made in August, 1877.

"It was plain that the returning officers had the legal right to pass upon and certify in the first instance who were elected members of the Legislature, and that they were justified by the evidence in excluding bulldozed parishes; but it was equally clear that their return was not conclusive upon the members elected, and that each house had the constitutional right to pass upon the returns and the election of its members, and to set aside the action of the returning board. The two houses, when organized, had also the power to pass upon the returns of the election of governor, and they alone and no one else possessed that power. Neither the President of the United States nor the returning board has any power or right to pass upon the election of governor. And here the difficulty in the Louisiana case commences.

"Governor Packard contends that a majority of the two houses, as duly returned, did pass upon the election of governor, and did return that he was duly elected; but this was stoutly denied by Governor Nicholls. This vital point was strongly asserted and denied by the adverse parties, and the Legislature of Louisiana divided into two hostile bodies, holding separate sessions, each asserting its legal power and denouncing the other as rebels and traitors. Governor Packard and his legislature called upon President Grant for the aid of the Army to put down insurrection and domestic violence; and here I confess that if I had been President instead of General Grant, I would have recognized Packard and sustained him with the full power of the General Government. My intense feeling, caused by the atrocities in Louisiana, may have unduly influenced me. But General Grant did not think this was his duty. I do not criticise his action, but only state the facts. He would only maintain the peace. He would not recognize Packard as governor, but I know, what is now an open secret, that it was the strong bent of his mind, and at one time it was his decision, to withdraw the troops, recognize Nicholls, and thus end this dangerous contest. He did not do this, but simply kept the peace.

"But during these two months the whole condition of affairs had slowly changed in Louisiana. The government of Packard had dwindled away until it had scarcely a shadow of strength or authority, except at the state-house, where it was upheld by Federal bayonets. The government of Nicholls had extended its authority over the State, and was in full existence as the de facto government of Louisiana, supported by the great body of the white men and nearly all the wealth and intelligence of the State, and by the tired acquiesence of a large portion of the colored people, some of whom deserted his legislature and entered that of Governor Nicholls. The delay and hesitation of General Grant had been fatal to Packard, and when Hayes became President the practical question was greatly changed. One thing was clear, that a Legislature had been duly elected in the November previous, and was then in existence, though separated into two parts. If the members lawfully elected could be convened, they could decide the question of who was governor alone without the intervention of troops; and their decision could be supported, if necessary, by the General Government.

"The most careful consideration was given to this question. Days and weeks of anxious deliberation were given to it by the President and his Cabinet. But one way seemed open for a peaceful solution, and that was to gather, if possible, a single Legislature which could be recognized as the depository of the representative will of the people of Louisiana. If this could be done it has the unquestioned right to decide who had been elected governor, and all other questions would settle themselves. To aid in this object, a commission of the most eminent men, high in position, from different States and distinguished for judicial impartiality, was selected, and the result is known to all. They went to Louisiana, and, with great difficulty, brought together these hostile legislatures, which met, organized, promptly settled the question in dispute in favor of the government of Nicholls, and thus put an end to this most dangerous controversy. No other change was made, no other act done except that, when the solution was almost accomplished, the few troops who had occupied the State House were withdrawn a few squares away to their barracks. Thus in this peaceful appeal to the Legislature of Louisiana was settled this controversy, which endangered the peace and safety not only of that State, but of the whole people of the United States. This is the sum and substance of all that was done in pursuance of the Southern policy, as it is called, of the President. Perhaps I ought to state that his policy has a broader motive than a mere settlement of a local election contest. It seeks to bring the North and South again into conditions of harmony and fraternity, and, by a frank appeal to the generous impulses and patriotic feeling of all classes of people in the South, to secure not only peace among themselves but the equal protection of the laws, and security in the enjoyment of political and civil rights to all.

"No doubt the result in Louisiana caused some disappointment to many Republicans throughout the United States who deeply sympathized with their Republican brethren in that State. I did, and do, share in that feeling, and yet I feel and know that every step taken by President Hayes was right, in strict accordance with his constitutional duty, and from the highest motives of patriotism."

The electoral vote was returned by the returning board according to the laws of Louisiana and the plain provision of the Constitution of the United States, which leaves to each State the power to regulate the mode and manner of electing electors. They were sent here. They were as regular in form and as good in substance, as I shall show presently, as the returns of any other State that were sent here; but the returns for the Legislature and the governor were not sent here. This tribunal could not pass upon them. By the law which has already been read they were sent directly to the Legislature, the list of senators and members duly elected to each house, and the clerk was required to swear in those persons so returned prima facie, leaving to each house to decide for itself whether the members so sworn in were properly and legally elected.

What was the result of it? When these returns were made out two Legislatures convened, one claiming that Nicholls was elected, the other claiming that Packard was elected; and there they had two rival bodies facing each other in civil war, I might almost say. General Grant refused to intervene. He withdrew practically all protection from either before he went out of office, and adopted a policy to let them fight it out and settle it among themselves, he holding that until some Legislature existed, they both being in question, until the members would come together and recognize one body as a Legislature he could not recognize it; nor could he recognize either of the candidates for governor because the credentials of neither of them had been passed upon by the Legislature.

In that way for two or three months things hung suspended and we feared often to hear the tocsin of civil war or at least of domestic contention down there, and some bloodshed. It was then when President Hayes came in, surrounded with all these difficulties, with question made about his being legally elected, with the very same stuff uttered that is now uttered here twelve years afterwards. I think President Hayes's election was the only one that was ever sanctioned and indorsed by a judicial tribunal organized by the opposite party as well. He held his seat, but they were sneering at him and talking about him. I never thought it was a manly kind of warfare.

President Hayes upon the face of the papers was certified to be President of the United States. Without respect to the commission he ought to have been respected and recognized by every honorable and patriotic man. But when besides that the ground of his claim was sanctioned and sustained by the decision of a tribunal organized by the Democratic party to convict him of wrong and to throw him out of office, then no word should ever have been uttered after that time. But it was done; and Mr. Hayes, surrounded by these circumstances and troubles, selected five distinguished men to go down there and ascertain the precise condition of affairs, so that he might with full and accurate information perform his constitutional duties.

What was the difficulty? The difficulty was that there was no legislature, and yet two legislatures were convened. The fourth clause of the fourth article of the Constitution could not be put in force simply because there was neither governor nor legislature that could be recognized by the President. Neither governor had his certificate, and neither could have, for the legislature must pass upon and declare his election, and there were two legislatures. Thus a condition never contemplated by the Constitution was forced to be decided in the early days of Mr. Hayes's administration. What did he do? He selected five of the most eminent men in our country, and the Senator who now presides [Mr. HAWLEY in the chair] was one of them. I read their names: Charles B. Lawrence, JOSEPH R. HAWLEY, John M. Harlan, John C. Brown, Wayne MacVeagh—every one of them men of mark and distinction in the communities in which they lived; two of them, Governor Brown and Judge Harlan, being from the States of Tennessee and Kentucky, Mr. Lawrence being from Illinois, Mr. HAWLEY from Connecticut, as we know of course, and Mr. MacVeagh from Pennsylvania. These men were sent down there with instructions by Mr. EVARTS, then Secretary of State. I have here the instructions that were given them, and I will have these marked passages put in the RECORD, without wearying the Senate with reading them.

But it is most pertinent and important in coming to a decision upon the precise question of executive duty before him, that the President should know what are the real impediments to regular, legal, and peaceful procedures under the laws and constitution of the State of Louisiana by which the anomalies in government there presented may be put in course of settlement without involving the element of military power as either an agent or a make-weight in such solution.

The President, therefore, desires that you should devote your first and principal attention to a removal of the obstacles to an acknowledgment of one government for the purpose of an exercise of authority within the State, and a representation of the State in its relations to the General Government under section 4 of article 4 of the Constitution of the United States, leaving, if necessary, to judicial or other constitutional arbitrament within the State the question of ultimate right. If these obstacles should prove insuperable from whatever reason, and the hope of a single government in all its departments be disappointed, it should be your next endeavor to accomplish the recognition of a single legislature as the depository of the representative will of the people of Louisiana. This great department of government rescued from dispute, the rest of the problem could gradually be worked out by the prevalent authority, which the legislative power, when undisputed, is quite competent to exert in composing conflicts in the co-ordinate branches of the government.

* * * * * * *

A single legislature would greatly relieve this difficulty, for that department of the State government is named by the Constitution as the necessary applicant, when it can be convened, for military intervention by the United States.

If, therefore, the disputing interests can concur in, or be reduced to, a single legislature for the State of Louisiana, it would be a great step in composing this unhappy strife.

The substance of the instructions is that they must go down there and inform "the powers that be" in Washington what was the exact condition of affairs. I know myself, then holding the office of Secretary of the Treasury, that we could get no information from New Orleans upon which we knew whether we could rely or not. The opposite stories were so wide apart that we could not tell what to believe. Therefore I believed that it was right to send these gentlemen down, not to interfere with the affairs of Louisiana, but to find out and ascertain, and, so far as a friendly or kindly influence could do, to try to bring the legislatures together, so that there would be the commencement of local authority in that State. That was done. Those men were directed by these instructions from Mr. EVARTS to bring these two contending parties together who were fighting, almost in civil war, with each other, and they did it. After spending some time there they finally made out to bring the two bodies together, but the effect of that was that the returns were sent to the Legislature, and as a matter of course, the military array and power of the Democratic party, composed largely of white men, controlled, while the negroes and Republicans were unorganized.

The Democrats grew stronger and stronger, and it is said, and even intimated by Governor McEnery in his speech, which I will read to you after awhile, that by hook or crook they got over some of these people from one legislature into the other and finally they got a legislature elected by the very frauds of the character I have described, disregarded the returns of the returning board, turned out Republican members, admitted those elected by violence, proclaimed a Democratic legislature, examined the returns, and proclaimed McEnery governor, although his competitor was elected as fairly and, I believe, with a larger vote than President Hayes had.

Mr. BUTLER. Was it not Nicholls who was proclaimed governor? The Senator said McEnery. I think it was Nicholls.

Mr. SHERMAN. I confounded the two. I shall speak of Mr. McEnery after awhile. Nicholls was elected governor according to the decision of the new legislature, and in that way this remarkable inconsistency and injustice to Packard occurred. Governor Packard was legally and fairly elected governor, and was so returned; but a legislature organized as I have stated deprived him of his office and placed his competitor in power.

Therefore it stands upon record not only that the Democratic party by fraud and violence controlled the election in Louisiana, but besides trying to defeat a President of the United States and deprive him of his office, they actually did deprive the duly elected governor of the State of Louisiana of his office and the Republican Legislature of their seats. It is true on whatever basis or claim the decision was rendered the senate was Democratic, and that gave them an advantage in having only one house to organize, but in the house of representatives there were two divided bodies, so that the Democratic party by a series of events that I will now state to you, not only deprived the people of Louisiana of a governor and Legislature, but sought to cheat the people of the United States out of a President of the United States. I will put in and not read extracts from the official report made by the committee sent to Louisiana by President Hayes:

The Nicholls legislature had a quorum in the senate upon either the Nicholls or Packard theory of the law, and a quorum in the house on the Nicholls but not on the Packard theory. The Packard legislature had a quorum in the house on its own theory of the law; but, as already stated, not in the senate, and was thus disabled from any legislation that would be valid even in the judgment of its own party.

The constitution of the State of Louisiana requires that "returns of all elections for members of the General Assembly shall be made to the secretary of state." It also provides that "the qualified electors shall vote for governor and for lieutenant-governor at the time and place of voting for representatives. The returns of every election shall be sealed up and transmitted by the proper returning officers to the secretary of state, who shall deliver them to the speaker of the house of representatives on the second day of the General Assembly then to be holden. The members of the General Assembly shall meet in the house of representatives and examine and count the votes."

It will be observed that this provision of the constitution requires the returns of the votes for governor and lieutenant-governor to be sealed up and transmitted by the proper returning officers to the secretary of state; and the same provision is made in substance as to members of the General Assembly. But in 1870 the Legislature passed an act, amended in 1872, which created a body called a returning board, consisting of five members, to be appointed by the senate, and to "be the returning officers for all elections in the State."

The same law further declares: "It shall be the duty of the secretary of state to transmit to the clerk of the house of representatives, and to the secretary of the senate of the last General Assembly, a list of the names of such persons as according to the returns shall have been elected to either branch of the General Assembly, and it shall be the duty of the clerk and secretary to place the names of the representatives and senators elect so furnished upon the roll of the house and of the senate, respectively, and those representatives and senators whose names are so placed by the clerk and secretary, respectively, in accordance with the foregoing provisions, and none other, shall be competent to organize the house of representatives or senate."

* * * * * * *

As matters stood on our arrival here the legal title of the claimants to the office of governor depended upon the question we have stated. There was no judicial tribunal acknowledged to be authoritative by both parties by which it could be solved, for reasons already given.

The only hope of a practical solution was by a union of so many members of the rival legislatures as would make a legislature with a constitutional quorum in both the senate and house of members whose title to their seats is valid under either view of the law.

With a legislature of undisputed authority the settlement of other questions could, as stated in the letter of instructions to our commission from the Secretary of State, "be gradually worked out by the prevalent authority which the legislative power, when undisputed, is quite competent to exert in composing conflicts in the co-ordinate branches of the government."

I think I have now answered the Senator from Missouri, and let him make the most of it.

I said before that the testimony taken before the returning board proved that, armed and organized with military array, the fraud and violence practiced in Louisiana in 1876 created a revolution and overthrew a State government. Now I intend to read what Governor McEnery said on this subject in a speech made by him at Monroe, La., on the 14th day of October, 1887. I take the clipping that I read here from the Times-Democrat, a leading paper in New Orleans, and the organ of Governor McEnery, because it is a fuller report than any other, and manifestly a revised copy. I have the whole speech here, if anybody wishes to see the context, but I have taken certain extracts from it which are all I deem proper to read, although I should be very glad indeed to have the whole speech published widespread. Here is what he said:

The revolution inaugurated in 1876 did not stop with the events of that day.

He was speaking of violence that had occurred at that day.

The people of Tensas, Natchitoches, and Caddo had to place themselves in line with Democratic North Louisiana. The same feelings and impulses which gave rise to the great movement throughout Louisiana in 1876 influenced the people of those parishes to overthrow the same despotism in 1878.

They repeated the same thing.

If the people were justified in 1876 in their revolution against oppression and wrong, so were they justified in 1878.

We will see what was the nature of this revolution after a while.

Believing then and believing now that the people of the North had been enlightened as to our true condition and the determination of our people to submit no longer to negro domination, I repeat what I said in 1884 in New Orleans, at Faranta's hall, and what has not been controverted.

With the State in such a condition—all hope of relief shut off from abroad, and nothing under the then existing government to be expected but a continuance of the same misgovernment, violence, and corruption, in the interest of the radical party, what wonder, then, that the fierce passions of revolution should be engendered and the tragic period of 1876 enacted?

If you want to read that "tragic" history, read it in the reports that were made, among others by a committee of the House of Representatives, a large majority of whom were Democrats. You will there see the nature of the testimony in that "tragic" history. I never read anything more appalling in story or in novel than the cruel injustice and wrongs that were inflicted upon the poor ignorant blacks during that "tragic period of 1876." We have heard testimony enough upon that subject and I do not want to read any of it here.

When Federal troops—

Here is another thing; General Grant had some Federal troops there to protect the public buildings and preserve the peace under the most stringent rule—

When Federal troops were ordered to Monroe in order to destroy the good work done by the Democrats, and when they gathered negroes from every quarter and every plantation, marched them to mass meetings under the protection of their guns, the people of Ouachita, who had become desperate, deputed Captain Theobalds, with a well-chosen force, to put a stop to this marauding and political marching of Federal troops. The negroes gathered in almost untold numbers at St. James Chapel. The Federal troops were there under their officers, consisting of two companies of infantry. Theobalds had two well armed companies of riflemen.

Here was the muster—two United States companies of infantry, under the command of a United States officer, there merely to protect the meeting of Republicans. Their opponents were two companies of riflemen. Whether they excelled in number I do not know; but here is the result, as stated by Governor McEnery:

It was on this occasion that he—

that he announced with determination to the Federal officers that we had submitted to all that we intended to endure, and henceforth no more campaigning would be permitted with Federal troops.

With flashing saber and angry voice the officer proclaimed—

That is, the United States officer—that that was a Republican meeting, and he was there to protect it. Said Theobalds: "If you interfere here to-day I will sweep you and your command from off the face of the earth."

The officer of that command missed his opportunity. He ought to have stood there if every one had fallen in his tracks. He would have been counted a hero in future generations, and much of the evil that followed would have been prevented; but he yielded to Theobalds's threat with his unlawful companies, for there was no pretense of authority; the whole authority was in the hands, as they said, of the radical rule. Governor Kellogg, I believe, was governor, and these companies, without lawful command, overawed and prevented two companies of United States regulars from performing their duty.

Fortunately for him the name of that officer is not given. If it were, he ought to be driven out of the Army of the United States. If he had stood up there manfully, even against superior numbers, even against the whole population there, and performed his duty in a peaceful and lawful manner, protecting those Republicans in the enjoyment of their rights, his name would have been placed high on the roll of honor.

Now let us go a little further. This is McEnery that I am reading from, the governor of Louisiana:

Although the Federal troops were no longer political factors in the contest—

It seems they had been driven out by this fusilade—

the radicals, negroes, carpet-baggers, and scallawags did not give up the contest, but determined secretly to mass the entire negro population in the town on the day of election.

There was a great deal of testimony about that, too.

A long line, reaching through the Chowan swamp, through the colony on the river, was established.

A military line was established.

It was too long, and the order was given to fall back and inclose the town in a small compass. It was then that the men of Union, Lincoln, Morehouse, Richland, Caldwell, and Ouachita—

No less than six different parishes or counties of Louisiana—stood elbow to elbow ready to receive the expected attack from the negroes.

"The expected attack from the negroes." Great Cæsar! All the negroes wanted to do was to hear speeches and vote, and they went there to vote.

Away in the night Fred. Cann's cannon on the right announced the movement, and the sharp, quick crack of the rifle along the whole line told that the negroes were well drilled and instructed in the plans and lines of march to the city. The contest was quick and decisive, and the cessation of rifle reports and the silence of Cann's cannon announced that on the morrow peace and quiet and victory would be with a long suffering people. What was done in Ouachita was also done in the Felicianas and East Baton Rouge, and it was the determined spirit of the people that gave to Louisiana her emancipation from negro carpet-bag domination and elected Francis T. Nicholls governor.

Gentlemen of the South, and Senators, in view of such scenes as these, stated by a governor of a State, brought home to us; when we see that such means as these are used to prevent and overawe the colored people of the South, do you think it strange that we feel aggrieved and wronged? You exercise the political power conferred upon them for their protection. You used your physical power to trample them into the dust.

No wonder that even in the South there was a feeling of revolt at this. I wish to read what was said by the New Orleans Picayune about this occurrence, for it was published all over our country. The Daily Picayune, New Orleans, Friday morning, October 14, 1887, said:

Hitherto when Republican newspapers, or Republican politicians in Congress and on the stump, have ventured to charge the things yesterday openly confessed by the governor of this State, and by a United States Senator from this State, Democrats, both North and South, have denounced the accusation as false, and have upbraided those who uttered it for stirring up sectional and race strife and for "waving the bloody shirt." But now—

This New Orleans paper says—

But now the governor of a Southern State himself waves the bloody shirt; now a United States Senator from Louisiana waves the bloody shirt! When hereafter we undertake to refute the charge of our enemies, how can we meet the confessions of our professed friends?

I ask you now to note this——

Mr. FRYE. That was in 1887.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, October 14, 1887, the day after Governor McEnery's speech. Then this editor goes on:

There is no disguising the stark nakedness of the governor's statements. He went into particulars and told precisely how the thing was done. And that is not the worst of it. The country is given to understand that what has been done must be done again; that we can not safely permit the colored citizens of this State to enjoy their political rights. That argument was distinctly and explicitly made against General Nicholls's candidacy, that he could not be relied upon to secure the supremacy of the white race by suppressing the suffrage of the colored people; in other words, they contended that General Nicholls would not be a safe governor because he is not a bulldozer.

Now, let us go a little further. I am sorry my friend, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS], is not present. But before reading his remarks I wish to read one or two other paragraphs. Here is another passage from Governor McEnery, which I wish to put upon the record, and I will read it:

Anterior to this—

That is, anterior to the struggles in 1874—

There had been a constant and increasing resistance to the reign of terror inaugurated by the Federal Government, which culminated in the successful struggle of 1876. When the memorable 14th of September was being enacted in the city of New Orleans I was on that night—

He says "I." He participated in it, it seems—

I was on that night with a company from Trenton under McLeod, and a company from Monroe and vicinity under Logan, holding in check riotous negroes on the De Siard. When the mercenaries of Kellogg were tramping through South Louisiana I was arranging with Col. C. H. Moore with two hundred men from Richland to capture the entire force at Carpenter Station, in that parish. The lamented Dan Byerly had sent the dispatch announcing their expected appearance in North Louisiana to reinstate the Greens, whom Patterson had driven away, at the head of a hundred men, in the town of Vienna.

Thus in every locality was shown a restless and determined spirit during the long, disastrous, and oppressive reign of this alien government.

* * * * * * * *

It is needless to say that in Natchitoches, where a conservative campaign was conducted, the radicals polled their entire strength.

Here was a place where they had tried the conservative plan of letting everybody vote. I will read that last sentence again:

It is needless to say that in Natchitoches, where a conservative campaign was conducted, the radicals polled their entire strength. The contest for our liberation had been fought and won strictly on the color line. The negroes had drawn it, the carpet-baggers used it, and we accepted the issue and broke it into fragments, with the full belief and confidence that we were establishing a white man's government.

Mr. President, how foolish it is in the light of these facts for the Senator from Missouri to talk about Tilden getting a majority of the votes in Louisiana, in the face of the revolution, as it is there called, of 1876, this "tragic period of 1876," this protection by Federal troops swept from the face of the earth by this boasting Theobalds! The negroes did give up the contest. My conscience, how could they have any contest without arms, defenseless, helpless? They had no arms except the Constitution of the United States, and that was powerless.

A military array of the men of several counties—

There was always an array with the Federal authority. The overthrow of all government was determined in Louisiana, and that is what Governor McEnery boasted of and wished to perpetuate, and he opposed Governor Nicholls, the old governor, because he was not radical enough, because, to use the language of the Picayune, he was not a "bulldozer;" but McEnery was the candidate of the bulldozers, and he wanted to be elected in order to carry out, intensify, and perpetuate this policy.

Now, Mr. President, I come to the remarks made by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS], and I am sorry he is not here. Here is a plain, distinct declaration. I have great respect for him. I should like to have him answer this matter, and I hope he will when he comes back. It is an able, clear presentation of the Southern side of this controversy. He says clearly in more than one place in this extract, which I will have read, that this was a revolution; that it was designed to be such, by forcible means to put down negro domination and to establish and perpetuate a white man's government; and that is the sophistry which runs through this very able speech. I ask to have it read at the desk, not the whole speech, but so much of it as relates to this subject.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

In our State we find a very peculiar and serious condition of affairs confronting us. Two distinct races, almost equally divided in numbers, coinhabit the same territory and live under the same government and under the same institutions. It is not the fault of the white man—it is not the fault of the colored man—that race antagonism exists; it is sentiment, an instinct, a passion beyond the control of either. Therefore, as much as it may be regretted, yet owing to causes inherent in human nature itself, at any moment, and under provocations now unforeseen, a spark may produce a conflagration in our midst. The dream of the Yankee crank is that this question can be solved by miscegenation; but my judgment is that, deplore it as we may, the inexorable logic forced upon us by the unchangeable and eternal laws of human nature itself is that we have to determine whether the negro shall govern and rule the white man, or whether the white man shall govern and rule the negro. That is the question which we have to determine by our elections, and on that issue I need not tell you that every interest, every instinct of pride, every impulse of manhood, every element of Caucasian civilization, every personal right, every guaranty which upholds society, every function, and every principle of representative government is directly at stake. It is far beyond and above the personal ambition of any individual, however illustrious or distinguished he may be as a citizen of Louisiana.

When called upon to determine to whom of these two gentlemen I am willing to confide the political leadership in this State, I have no hesitation whatever in making and declaring my choice. I can not reconcile the safety of the State with what I understand to be the extremely conservative ideas of General Nicholls upon this race question. Upon this issue I consider that he and Governor McEnery represent two opposite and irreconcilable schools of political thought and systems of political action.

In considering this question, I am willing to omit what occurred before 1878; but his course and his policy in regard to the Tensas case create a strong impression in my mind that, however pure were his motives, it can never receive my political approval or political indorsement. He had then a grand opportunity to defy and resent Northern opinion upon this subject—to prove that it is the duty of a Democratic executive in the State of Louisiana, in a crisis of race conflict, to sympathize with the white people. The sooner we let the Northern people understand that their opinions on this race question will not influence or control our action in any degree, the better it will be for our safety. This is a domestic question, a home-rule question, one affecting our interests and our destiny—one which we understand, one which we intend to solve regardless of Northern sentiment, and in the solution of which, in my judgment, a policy of conservatism and of conciliation means incontestably the domination of the whites by the negro race. To accomplish the results which we now enjoy, and which we had hoped we had permanently secured, has cost the people of Louisiana trials, sacrifices, and tribulations which no people have ever endured since society was organized and government was first founded. From the time that the reconstruction measures were passed up to 1876, when we first succeeded in installing a Democratic governor, every election was equal to a revolution.

Military power, disfranchisement, fraud, crime, violence—every agency that has ever been known to diabolism—was used and exerted to crush the spirit of our people. It was Democratic leaders who for eight long years preceding 1876, by their repeated appeals to the manhood, patriotism, and heroism of the Democratic white masses of the State, marshaled those brave serried ranks of loyal Democrats, those brave men who faced every vicissitude, confronted every peril, who resisted the allurements and defied the terrors of power. It was they who, appreciating the terrible significance of this race problem, created that indomitable spirit of enthusiasm in the Democratic party which rendered the victory of 1876 possible. One of them was Governor McEnery, to whose efforts and conviction the people of Louisiana are largely indebted for their emancipation from the blighting oppression of radical rule.

Mr. SHERMAN. In the careful and courtly language always used by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS], he states explicitly that the purpose of the organization, which was successfully accomplished, was to overthrow what he called the negro rule, and to establish a white man's government. If that is the desire, if that is the intention, then you must change the Constitution of the United States. Every Senator who hears me, as well as the Senator from Louisiana, took the oath to observe and to maintain the Constitution of the United States, and yet his language there would justify the violation of three of the clearest provisions of the Constitution.

The Constitution says that this is a republican form of government, not a government of caste or race, not a government for Catholics or for Protestants; it is not a government for native or naturalized; it is not a government for white or black; it is not a government for foreigners or men who are born here; but it is a government for all, with equal rights. The Constitution in its original form denounced just such things as these. It is not a republican government when a majority of the people are deprived of plain constitutional rights. When you say in Louisiana that the black men shall not rule, you say the majority shall not rule, for they are in the majority in Louisiana. Besides the mass of black men which you say shall not rule, they have behind them a great many white Republicans, among the highest in social standing, in wealth, and influence in the State of Louisiana.

Therefore, when you say that it shall be a white man's government in Louisiana you make it an anti-republican government, and overthrow republican government, unless it is the rule of the minority that must prevail and not the rule of the majority. The people of the South, instead of seeking to win these people over by kindness, and I wish to God they would, I would not care how many votes they got in that process—instead of doing that they have maintained a system as described by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] of domineering, crime, and violence to overcome and put under subjection the whole black population of the South. In doing that they violate first this clause of the Constitution:

The United States shall guaranty to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, and on application of the Legislature or of the executive (when the Legislature can not be convened) against domestic violence.

Here is violence by the minority against the majority, with the avowed purpose of establishing a government of the minority. Is that republican in form, republican in substance? Is not that the kind of domestic violence that the Constitution declares Congress shall protect against? Does it not say that the law-making power of the United States shall give protection against such domestic violence? Let me read one or two other articles. I read Article XIV:

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside.

It is admitted here that this effort in Louisiana was to deprive of their rights a majority not only of blacks but of citizens, declared to be citizens by the Constitution, native-born and naturalized citizens, most of them native-born. If that is the line of policy upon which this contest is to be waged in the future, it is well that we should understand it. Let us go further:

No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States.

No State shall do it; but where a dominant party in a State without regard to law do it, what shall be done in that case? Is the Government utterly helpless to protect these people? That must be determined. Admit the proposition stated by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS], that they had a right to put down the majority in the State of Louisiana, to dominate over it, rule it, and that the only question of politics in Louisiana was whether the white man or the black man should rule; then the question is, whether the white men, being in a minority, shall deprive the majority of the citizens of that State of their clearly conferred power, and whether they shall shield themselves when they are the State, for what spoke in Louisiana when Captain Theobalds put to rout the two companies of United States infantry except a lawless and reckless power? The State is the power that rules. It is not the governor or the Legislature; it is the organized State wielding power to deprive the majority of the citizens of the right to rule, and you can not make anything else out of it.

Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Who will say that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] does not openly advise the utter destruction of the most sacred right of a majority of the people of Louisiana, the right to vote whenever their vote would change the result? Who will say in view of the testimony of Governor McEnery and the Senator from Louisiana that these people now enjoy the equal protection of the laws? No man can say it.

The second section of the same article of the Constitution provides that a State shall not deny to any portion of its people the right to vote on account of race or color, except upon condition that its representation be reduced. A State can make education, crime, or many other things the cause of the exclusion from the right to vote; but whenever they do make color the basis of exclusion from voting, then under the second section of the fourteenth article their representation is reduced. If the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS], an honored member of this body, says this idea has been put in force in Louisiana and a white man's government has been established, and both the eminent gentlemen I have quoted say that is so, have you a right in honor or in morals to vote for those people or to represent their political power?

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator, perhaps, has forgotten it; but Governor McEnery was not elected governor of Louisiana at that election.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that. I am very glad he was not nominated; but still he is governor, and got a very large vote for renomination, and he represents the dominant idea there in their politics. What have you to say about the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS], who is a representative of the State of Louisiana? McEnery, I have no doubt, lost some votes because he blabbed out too freely in his speech on the 14th of October. I have no doubt a great many prudent men would say he would not make a good, cautious governor, and he may have lost some votes on that ground; but that the people of Louisiana believed in that idea is shown by the fact that there was an organized movement to carry it out in every case and to establish, as the Senator from Louisiana said, "a white man's government."

There is one other provision of the Constitution to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate:

> The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Here it is admitted that all political lines in Louisiana are drawn upon the color line. It is the white man's party; the color line is the basis of all; and yet here is a distinct violation of three clauses of the Constitution of the United States. I must confess that I do not see how any Senator can take the oath of office solemnly imposed by the Constitution of the United States and himself represent his people here when he confesses that a minority have deprived the majority of their right to vote. It is for him and not for me to decide.

Mr. President, I wish to say that this movement is still continued. Before Governor Nicholls was nominated McEnery was a candidate before the nominating convention, and McEnery, finding himself very much pressed, issued the following proclamation to the people of Louisiana:

> So far as my administration of the election laws has been concerned, I have listened to all complaints, and propose in the future to do in a general way what I have done in a special way, namely, in the removal of E. A. Durio (who is now a prominent reformer)—

Mr. Durio had turned against him and he proposed to remove him, but this is the point—he had removed him—> for committing frauds in the election; and I pledge you here to-night that not only in the city of New Orleans, but throughout the State of Louisiana, I will see an honest and fair election; that every vote cast is counted as deposited, and that no substitution of ballots is practiced, but that the voice of all the voters in the State, as deposited in the ballot-box, shall find expression and receive recognition, and the officers elected commissioned. To that end I will remove any registrar or returning officer in the city or State that I have reason to believe will aid in the suppression or changing of the popular will.

That was the declaration, and that gave encouragement and hope. The Republicans, supposing they would have a fair election, commenced and organized. They nominated a ticket composed, it was said, of the most respectable citizens of Louisiana, nearly all white men. The negroes took heart. They began to organize, and it was found that this offer of a free vote and a fair count was all that the Republicans wanted in Louisiana. What course was taken afterwards in regard to this matter? No sooner had Governor Nicholls been nominated than a change came over the spirit of the dream of Governor McEnery, still governor. He had promised if he were nominated that there should be a fair election. Nicholls was nominated, and then what does McEnery say, as stated by a Democratic paper in Louisiana?

> But a change comes o'er the spirit of his dream, and the governor of the State of Louisiana, whose public proclamation that there shall be a fair and free election, has been spread from one end of the State to the other, burgeons forth as the most violent and unscrupulous of bulldozers. In his speech at Taliulah he pictured, in burning language, the evil of carpet-bag rule. He turned back the pages of history fourteen years and portrayed, in language calculated to arouse the fiercest passions, the hideous and unparalleled state of affairs then existing, and declared that rather than witness the return of such evils he would prefer to see the State wrapped in revolution from the Arkansas line to the Gulf, and so would every true man. He painted the evils that would result in case Warmoth should be elected, urged the necessity of presenting an unbroken front to the common Republican enemy, and wound up by declaring that during the present contest the law should be suspended until the danger was past.

A governor of a State promising a free and fair election, then defeated in his nomination, threatening again to resort to revolutionary efforts; and this is taken from a Democratic paper, giving a favorable account of Governor McEnery:

> During the present contest the law should be suspended until the danger is past.

And what does that mean?

That means precisely what occurred in 1876, with all its tragic conditions. Here is another thing from the Daily Picayune of March 19, 1888, known to be one of the leading and most reputable papers in the South and I believe a supporter of Governor Nicholls. The Times-Democrat I think was a supporter of McEnery; but here is the organ of the governor who was elected, and see what it says about it:

> It is reported that large sums of money are being dispensed in the interest of the nominees of the Republican party in this State.

No probability that that is true—

> The funds are supposed to be——

"Supposed to be!"— > supplied by the national executive committee of that party.

There is no such national executive committee at this time.

> Republican leaders throughout the Union consider it highly important to break the solid South in advance of the general election next November. The opinion prevails that if Louisiana goes for Warmoth this spring it can be made to go for the Republican nominee for the Presidency next fall, and there is not a little reason for that conviction. The governor of this State controls the election machinery of every parish within its limits, and in case of necessity can easily manufacture a majority.

That is the Picayune, a great organ in New Orleans. It declares that the governor, having the machinery in his hands, can change the result, and the governor says he will by saying that while the danger lasts the law must be suspended.

Mr. President and Senators, I have been called upon to make these remarks partly to correct an historical error into which the Senator from Missouri has fallen, to show that not only did the returning officers have sufficient evidence before them, but now that the governor of the State of Louisiana and the honored Senator from that State have confessed all and more than was ever claimed by the returning officers, that if there had ever been a doubt in the mind of a single man in this broad land as to the election of Rutherford B. Hayes, that doubt has been removed by the admissions of the very men who participated in these wrongs, and hereafter when any man shall assert of President Hayes that he was elected by fraud or wrong, or that he was not duly elected, I will hold him in contempt as uttering that which is not true and is admitted by the very men who overthrew the local government in Louisiana in 1876. The name and the fame of President Hayes are untarnished. He was compelled in the beginning of his administration to disappoint the Republican party because he had no power to prevent the success of outrages and wrongs that led to the expulsion and exclusion of the legally elected governor of Louisiana. He bore those taunts patiently, and he had no power to do otherwise. That he was fairly elected, honorably elected, I believe no man can question.

There is among the papers on my table a letter from Governor Nicholls thanking him in the highest terms for the fair and just manner in which the proceeding had been conducted in the reorganization of the State. I have always felt that the Democrats of the South, instead of repeating these stories about President Hayes, when he certainly went to the full extent of his power to try and heal up the broken wounds of the South and to establish peace and order even as on this occasion in the organization of a local legislature opposed to him, that he at least should have fair dealing and kindly words from the South. That he was honest, true, and faithful and administered the Government from the beginning to the end of his administration in the same way is conceded by all men, and now I say his election and the ground on which he was awarded the vote of the State of Louisiana are founded not only on the facts shown on the public record but on the recorded admissions of the leading men who participated in the wrong against him.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio's threat may possibly have great terrors for members of his own party when he states that if any man shall hereafter assert that Rutherford B. Hayes was not fairly and honestly elected as President of this Republic he will hold him in contempt; but even with the terror of the distinguished Senator's contempt before me now, I assert here that I do doubt the legality and honesty of that election, and nothing that he has said here to-day has removed that doubt from my mind.

Yesterday in a desultory and unpremeditated debate I asked the question which men much more intelligent than myself have asked over and over again, how did it happen that Packard, with more votes upon the face of the returns than were cast for the Hayes electors, was refused the office of governor of Louisiana and became consul to Liverpool, while Hayes, by the same count, received the electoral vote of the State of Louisiana? The Senator from Ohio commenced his address, or rather his reply, to that question of mine by stating that he would put that matter beyond any sort of dispute, and would stamp with infamy, to use his own language, any suspicion in regard to that transaction. Mr. President, I ask the Secretary to read from the candidate of the Republican party in the last canvass his opinion of that transaction. On this floor James G. Blaine said infinitely more than I have ever said in regard to this strange and remarkable occurrence in American politics, and if I mistake not it was in a discussion with the Senator from Ohio himself upon the very events with regard to which he has so eloquently addressed the Senate to-day.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

I understand the Senator from Ohio to admit that the electoral commission did decide that the Louisiana returning board was a legal and constitutional body, competent to do what it did do, and that they were unable to review or reverse it; and that same board, competent to declare who were the Presidential electors of that State, declared also who were the Legislature of that State, and the Legislature, performing a mere ministerial duty, declared who was the governor of that State; and I stand here, if I stand alone, to say that the honor and the credit and the faith of the Republican party, in so far as the election of Hayes and Wheeler are concerned, are as indissolubly united in maintaining the rightfulness of the return of that body as the illustrious house of Hanover that sits on the throne of England to-day is in maintaining the rightfulness of the revolution of 1688. You discredit Packard and you discredit Hayes. You hold that Packard is not the legal Governor of Louisiana and President Hayes has no title, and the honored Vice-President who presides over our deliberations has no title to his chair.

* * * * * * *

"I know that there has been a great deal said here and there, in the corridors of the Capitol around and about, in by-places and in high places of late, that some arrangement had been made by which Packard was not recognized and upheld; that he was to be allowed to slide by and Nicholls was to be accepted as governor of Louisiana. I want to know who had the authority to make any such arrangement. I wish to know if any Senator on this floor will state in his place that any person, speaking for the administration that was coming in or the one that was going out, had any right to make any such arrangement. I deny it. I deny it without being authorized to speak for the administration that now exists. But I deny it on the simple, broad ground that it is an impossibility that the administration of President Hayes could do it."

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, that was the statement made by the ablest Republican now living, with great deference to the Senator from Ohio, in this country, the standard-bearer of the Republican party in the last contest for the Presidency, and it is to be taken for granted with all the facts before us, the standard-bearer of that party in the coming contest. Mr. Blaine then charged that if Packard was not elected governor of Louisiana——

Mr. SHERMAN. He was.

Mr. VEST. That, if not, Mr. Hayes was not entitled to the electoral vote of that State. Now, the Senator from Ohio undertakes to explain this remarkable discrepancy in political results by stating that the Electoral Commission decided the question of Hayes's title to the Presidency, but not the title of Packard, which was a State matter determined, as I understand him, by State authority. Mr. Blaine asserts here that the governorship was under the control of the returning board, and the electoral vote of Louisiana being also determined by them, the two went together and were indissolubly and logically connected.

But, Mr. President, what are the facts in regard to this transaction? There were two legislatures. One legislature supported Packard and the other supported Nicholls. Distinguished gentlemen went there on the part of the Republicans and commenced negotiations, as the Senator from Ohio himself says, to bring those legislatures together. It was absolutely necessary to the success of the Republican party and to the inauguration of Mr. Hayes that this identical thing should be done. I know nothing of the agencies that were brought to bear; I know nothing of the manipulations or machinations or schemes or projects which brought about the result accomplished, but it has passed into history that the Packard legislature dissolved like snow, melted like the morning mist, and its members were induced in a day, almost, to give up their opposition, their oath of office that they had previously taken, and to go over to the Nicholls legislature, and the electoral vote of the State was cast on the record for Hayes.

And what of Packard? Was he turned out on the street? Was he driven from public life? Was he told, "You have claimed an office to which you were not entitled; you inaugurated here a movement against the law; you had a legislature which was a sham and a fraud and libel on the American name and character?" What became of him? He was given the most lucrative foreign office in the gift of the people of the United States and sent as consul to Liverpool.

But that was not all. Every member of that returning board and every one of their relatives was rewarded for that result. No other construction can be put upon it. Here is a list of them, an official list, and it shows that annually out of the moneys of the people of the United States $223,020 was paid in salaries to the appointees who had figured in this transaction and in connection with the returning board. Grand aggregate of annual salaries paid to the men who counted Hayes in			223,000

Every man connected with this business, from the doorkeeper clear up to the president of the returning board, received an office from the Federal Government until the amount of salaries aggregated what I have stated. But there was one man left out in the distribution, and that was a negro named Cassanave, the keeper of a livery stable in the city of New Orleans. The gentlemen who constituted the returning board were indicted afterwards for fraud and perjury in the circuit court of Louisiana, and employed my old classmate, E. North Cullom, to defend them and keep them out of the penitentiary. After he had successfully picked a flaw in the indictment, so that they escaped the verdict of a jury, he demanded a fee of $5,000 at the hands of those illustrious patriots, and they refused to pay him.

He sued them, obtained judgment, issued execution, and levied on the livery stable of Mr. Cassanave, a colored gentleman, and member of the returning board. Mr. Cassanave came to the city of Washington and requested that his property should not be sacrificed. He said that he was the sole surviving patriot, and demanded that the Administration put up $1,750. Mr. Hayes was President and my distinguished friend from Ohio was Secretary of the Treasury, and here is the correspondence. Cassanave addressed a letter to the President stating distinctly his demand:

If my property is sacrificed under that judgment it will render me bankrupt. I am a poor man and unable to sustain such a loss. I have always assumed a full share of the responsibility attaching to the official acts of the returning board; although I have never enjoyed any of the fruits resulting from its findings; and in this connection I respectfully remind you that I hold no office under your administration and have derived no pecuniary benefits whatever therefrom; but, on the contrary, I have sustained considerable loss in my business on account of my identity with the board. Messrs. Anderson, Wells, and Kenner, the other three members, and their numerous family connections, are enjoying lucrative positions in the employ of the Government.

I called upon Mr. SHERMAN yesterday and he proffered me a contribution of $100 as the only relief he could offer me, which I was compelled to decline out of respect for the great finance minister of our Government.

[Laughter.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 13, 1879.

Is published this dispatch:

E. NORTH CULLOM,
New Orleans, La.:

Should we send $1,000 more on returning board judgment will you give reasonable time for balance?

SHELLABARGER & WILSON.

To this dispatch came the following reply:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., August 13, 1879.

Messrs. SHELLABARGER & WILSON, Washington, D. C.:

If you can send me $250 more, making a total of $1,750, and Cassanave will give security not to dispose of his property, I will wait till Jan'y 1.

E. NORTH CULLOM.

To that another dispatch is sent:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 15, 1879.

E. NORTH CULLOM,
New Orleans:

Will cause $1,000 to be mailed to-day, provided you stop sale and wait until January 1 for balance. Answer immediately.

G. CASSANAVE.

To which Cullom replied:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., August 15, 1879.

G. CASSANAVE,
Washington, D. C.:

I will not. Sale goes on.

E. SMITH CULLOM.

Cassanave carried the answer to Shellabarger, who indorsed upon it the following words:

To Secretary SHERMAN:

I telegraphed that I would send $1,000 to-day if sale would stop and the plaintiff wait for the balance till January, and this is the answer. What shall I do with the $1,000?

Cassanave delivered the indorsed dispatch to Sherman, as he states, at a Cabinet meeting, and the Secretary wrote upon it to Shellabarger as follows:

You may offer the $1,250.

J. S.

Cullom declined to take the $1,250; he demanded $1,750, to be paid upon this execution to relieve his property, and the result was that the $1,750 was paid, and this illustrious patriot retired into the shades of private life on the fruits of his judicial action in the returning board of Louisiana!

Mr. President, I make no charge of corruption. The Senator from Ohio was then Secretary of the Treasury, and this man was dogging and haunting him and the administration in order that his property might be saved from the results of this judicial procedure. But I ask the question of the American people, what claim had Cassanave upon the administration of Hayes if he simply decided the law, if he simply carried out what was his constitutional duty? Why was it that every man connected with that returning board, if it made simply and solely a declaration of right based on principle and the law—why was every one of these men rewarded with office, from the highest to the lowest, until to-day there is no page of American history that demands more explanation?

The Senator from Ohio attacks the people of Louisiana for crimes which would stamp them with infamy not to be effaced by generations of good conduct and honorable patriotism. I make no comment on the fact that the Senators from that State are to-day absent. I stand here to avouch whatever has been done in the State of Louisiana, not to bring about unfair elections, not to deprive of the ballot any qualified voter, but to defeat a ruthless, outrageous, and criminal conspiracy against their property at the hands of men who went to that State for the sole purpose of plunder and to load themselves with what little was left by the war to that unfortunate people.

When the Senator talks here or elsewhere about the history of this returning board, he should add the immediately preceding history of the Southern States, when millions upon millions of fraudulent State debts were piled up in a single twelvemonth; when the people of that devoted region were compelled to stand and see the plundering carpet-baggers, that came like vultures to the battle-field they had not visited before, leading the poor and credulous negroes to their destruction and the destruction of the States in which they lived. There is a record that can not be effaced.

But the Senator brings newspapers here with stories of outrage and murder and crimes innumerable. Ah, Mr. President, where would the Senator from Ohio or myself be if the newspapers were to be quoted against us? Where would any member of the Senate be? What would become of any public man in this country if newspapers are to be taken as evidence before any tribunal?

Mr. President, I am sorry that a change has come over the spirit of the dream of the distinguished Senator from Ohio. I have great respect for him, for his ability, for his public services; no man has greater. I read a few months ago, in his tour through the country after the last adjournment of Congress, the following, and it inspired a feeling toward that Senator which, I must admit, I had never felt before. In his speech at Nashville he instituted a comparison between "the blue and the gray," as follows:

THE BLUE AND THE GRAY.

Your people divided on opposite lines and bore more than your share of the terrible losses and sacrifices of the war. It is over, thank God! But the courage, bravery, and fortitude of both sides are now the pride and heritage of us all. Think not that I come here to reproach any man for the part he took in that fight, or to revive in the heart of any one the triumph of victory or the pangs of defeat. I do not come to make apologies, nor do I ask any of you. The war was perhaps unavoidable—bound to come some time, and the sooner ended the better.

No man in the North questions the honesty of purpose or the heroism with which the Confederates maintained their cause, and you will give credit for like courage and honorable motives to Union soldiers.

This address was delivered at Nashville. It is to be hoped it was the sincere conviction and an honest utterance from the heart of my distinguished friend. But whether it was climatic influence or not, in a few weeks afterwards he delivered another address on the blue and the gray in the State of Illinois, in which he said:

THE BLUE AND THE GRAY.

One blow was yet to be struck, and that was by the hand of an assassin, inspired by the fanaticism of the rebellion. Lincoln was killed when his heart was full of gratitude to God, generosity to vanquished rebels, and good-will to all men. The veteran armies of the Union were rapidly disbanded.

Let us pause at the end of the war and imagine with what feeling these returning soldiers would have received the prophecy that within twenty years the same elements of hostility to the Union cause; the same alliance between Confederates and their sympathizers would be in possession of the Presidential office and in the substantial control of the Government; that the slaves, though nominally free, were deprived, by unlawful means, of all political power by their former owners.

BLACKS AND WHITES.

What language can express the cruel and barbarous atrocity of the controlling elements of the South in their treatment of the Republicans, both white and black, and especially of the freedmen, who had been invested by constitutional amendments with liberty and political rights? * * * In this way and by these means the Democratic party in the South now holds in solid and unbroken array every Southern State with increased political power conferred by the freedom of the slaves. This is the basis of their power.

* * * And, fellow-citizens, this is not a thing of the past. It is a continuing fact. It is a fact to-day. There is not an intelligent man in this broad land of either party who does not know that Mr. Cleveland is now President of the United States by virtue of crimes against the elective franchise, including murder, arson, ballot-box stuffing, forgery and perjury, but for which James G. Blaine would now be in his place. * * *

Why discriminate against Mackin and Tosney, by sending them to the penitentiary, while sending Democrats of the South, by means of like offenses, to the Senate and the House and to represent the great Republic in foreign courts? * * * Colored men were deprived of the right to vote in counties, districts, and States where the vote could change the result. If intimidation was necessary it was resorted to, even to the extent of murder. * * * It was proposed by the Republicans in Congress to pass a bill called the force bill, intended to arm the executive authorities with ample power to defend the colored people against these outrages. I always thought that this bill should have passed. * * *

It can be truly said that every atrocity, every political crime, violence, or wrong in the South was committed by Democrats, and the Democratic party uniformly refused to examine, prevent, or punish in any case any of these crimes. * * * In this way, and by crimes so atrocious, the second rebellion of the Democratic party is a success. Republicanism has been stamped out in the South. Organized and disciplined force, with social ostracism, prevents in many States all free discussion and all remonstrance from white Republicans, while the freedmen are held in a baser subjection by the prejudice of race and by the want of arms and organization, the inheritance of slavery.

Who could believe that from the same lips came the sentiments that were uttered in Nashville and then in Illinois? And as if to add emphasis, the Senator said in his speech at Nashville:

BLACKS AND WHITES.

If the kindly spirit stated by Senator VEST—

Referring to a speech I made in the Senate in regard to the negro race—is manifested, the color line will disappear from American politics and we can then look only to the safety, development, and power of one great and united country. The freedman in the full enjoyment of his rights will divide between parties as other citizens do, and his labor will become the great factor in the wealth and prosperity of the region in which he lives. It is now contributing its full share in building up with marvelous rapidity the region I have recently traversed, and will be of infinitely more value to the South than the heedless and listless labor of slaves in the olden time. Win these people by kindness and a just regard to their constitutional rights and they will vote with you and do their full share to make the South rich, prosperous, and happy.

I also wish to express in the strongest language my admiration and respect for the vim and energy with which the South is grappling with the new conditions of labor and industry by which they are surrounded, and my confident belief that within a single generation your people will be more than repaid for the value of their slaves by the results of diversified industry and subdivision of land. The time will come and seems now near at hand when you and your children will rejoice not only that the slaves are free, but that the Union has been preserved and strengthened.

And yet the men whom the Senator from Ohio, at Nashville, addressed in these fraternal words were, at Springfield, ku klux, night-riders, murderers, assassins, ballot-box stuffers, men unworthy of association with honest people anywhere and at any time!

Mr. President, I leave it to the Senator to explain this marvelous change. When he asserts that he has sufficiently accounted for the transactions of the returning board and the subsequent events in Louisiana, at the risk even of his contempt I undertake to say that the American people will never be satisfied with the explanation he has made here to-day, but that, like James G. Blaine, they have already come to the conclusion that it will tax the ingenuity and ability of the Senator from Ohio beyond his power to show why it was that the vote of Louisiana, as made by the returning board, was good for the purpose of giving the electors of Louisiana to Mr. Hayes for the Presidency but not good to make Packard governor of the State.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am much obliged to my friend from Missouri for his kindness in reading extracts from my speeches. They sound much better to me read by him than when spoken by myself. The speeches speak for themselves, particularly the one at Nashville. Every word I uttered on that night I utter now. If I could repeat it over I would add emphasis to give force and effect to it, and so I feel about the South. I have not the slightest feeling of hostility against the South, and no desire in regard to it except to preserve and protect the rights of all the people of the South.

Now, in regard to my speech at Springfield, every word of that is true. Why does not the Senator dispute some fact stated in that speech? That was a review made to a Legislature—indeed, both speeches were made to legislative assemblies, dignified and honorable men. I was speaking in sight of the monument of Lincoln; I was recalling the incidents of Lincoln's life, the period of the war, and referred, of course, to the Democratic party North and South. I could not truthfully draw a more flattering picture. The one was a speech made as to the future to men who, I believed, were hopefully looking forward to the disappearance of the feelings of the war. The other was a recapitulation and review of the past. Every word of it is true. If the Senator can point out the inconsistency in those speeches he will oblige me. There is not a single word in one inconsistent with the other. I did denounce the course of the Democratic party North and South, during and since the war, especially in regard to the reconstruction measures. I did at Nashville speak hopefully, and I feel hopefully, of the future, but it is only upon the basis of the recognized rights of every American citizen.

Now, let us go a little further. The Senator from Missouri is playing a new rôle. He is trying to make discontent in the Republican party. He asks, why did you not stand by Packard? Who removed Packard? Who deprived him of his office? Had President Hayes any power to elect Packard to office? Had President Hayes any power to recognize him before a Legislature there had returned him as duly elected? What did Hayes do to Packard? Did he find him in office? General Grant had refused to recognize him when Kellogg was governor. If there was any fault, there was the trouble.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I endeavored to avoid as far as I could bringing in the names of persons who are not members of this body. I yesterday brought in the name of Mr. Conkling without premeditation. I ask the Senator now, before he continues his statement in regard to the Republican visiting statesmen who went to New Orleans, one of them now an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States——

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator will not interrupt me by a speech.

Mr. VEST. I will not, but I rose to ask a question as to a matter of history. Did they not bend all their energies to induce the Packard legislature to break up and join the Nicholls legislature, so as to make a quorum there and validate the action of that legislature in favor of Hayes?

Mr. SHERMAN. If any Republican did intend to prevent Packard from being governor of Louisiana he did not do it as a Republican, but in some other way. I would have drawn the line, I confess, if I had stood in the place of President Grant. I would have accepted the call of the governor of Louisiana, and have prevented, if possible, the actual culmination that occurred; but long before the advent of President Hayes into office the time had passed, and these two rival legislatures, both claiming to be duly elected, were in hostile array against each other, and there was no governor to recognize, no Legislature to recognize, and President Hayes had no more power over the returns sent by the returning board to the Legislature than he had over the Koran of Mahomet. So he knew, and so Governor Packard knew. But the Senator comes here and mourns over Packard. Is not Packard able to take care of himself? Governor Packard told President Hayes that he could not ask that anything more should be done. I have here the official report. Here is a letter from President Hayes to the Secretary of War, dated April 20, 1877:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, April 20, 1877.

SIR: Prior to my entering upon the duties of the Presidency there had been stationed by order of my predecessor in the immediate vicinity of the building used as a state-house in New Orleans, La., and known as "Mechanics' Institute," a detachment of United States infantry. Finding them in that place, I have thought proper to delay decision of the question of their removal until I could determine whether the condition of affairs is now such as to either require or justify continued military intervention of the National Government in the affairs of the State.

In my opinion there does not now exist in Louisiana such domestic violence as is contemplated by the Constitution as the ground upon which the military power of the National Government may be invoked for the defense of the State. The disputes which exist as to the right of certain claimants to the chief executive office of that State are to be settled and determined not by the Executive of the United States, but by such orderly and peaceable methods as may be provided by the constitution and the laws of the State. Having the assurance that no resort to violence is contemplated, but on the contrary the disputes in question are to be settled by peaceful methods under and in accordance with law, I deem it proper to take action in accordance with the principles announced when I entered upon the duties of the Presidency.

You are therefore directed to see that the proper orders are issued for the removal of said troops at an early date from their present position to such regular barracks in the vicinity as may be selected for their occupation.

R. B. HAYES.

To Hon. GEORGE W. MCCRARY,
Secretary of War.

Here is what Governor Packard said five days afterward, when this action of President Hayes was known by him. In surrendering his position he said:

Had the General Assembly continued in session at the State House I should have deemed it my duty to have asserted and defended my government to the last, notwithstanding the withdrawal of troops; but with the Legislature disintegrated, and no prospect of present success, I can not task your tried fidelity by asking you longer to continue to aid me in the struggle I have thus far maintained. I therefore announce to you that I am compelled to abstain for the present from all active assertion of my government. I waive none of my legal rights, but yield only to superior force. I am wholly discouraged by the fact that, one by one, the Republican State governments of the South have been forced to succumb to force, fraud, or policy.

Governor Packard never blamed President Hayes for his course, and after the action that had been taken and the Republican legislature dwindled away one by one, Packard never complained; and now the Senator complains for him, and he reads from a speech of Mr. Blaine. I felt myself as Mr. Blaine did, and probably if the younger and more active spirits of the party could have had their way they would have asserted this issue then before the 4th of March came. I felt that way. I say now that any Republican who failed or faltered in supporting Packard to the extent of his constitutional ability I would hardly recognize as a Republican. I felt that way, and so said in a speech at Mansfield in August, 1877, a quotation from which I have inserted in my remarks.

I there said distinctly that I believed Packard was elected governor of Louisiana and was driven out by force, and you come now and plead for Packard. Packard does not ask you to do it after your people had driven him out, deprived him of his office, tried to disgrace him; after you had established a reign of tyranny and violence there; after you had driven him out and it was impossible for the President of the United States without usurping power to interpose. No State government had recognized Packard and the President of the United States could only recognize a governor in actual de facto power. He must be a governor in fact as well as in right, and Packard had not reached that stage. He had not reached it because your party deprived him of it. He does not ask any pity or any feeling of that kind. He was properly appointed to a high office and deserved a higher one, because among the men whom I have met in public life he was one of the purest and one of the best and one of the ablest.

But now I come to the Cassanave story. Where in heaven did the Senator hit on it? I ask the Senator what he read it from.

Mr. VEST. It was published in the Washington Post, from which I quoted it.

Mr. SHERMAN. How did it get in the RECORD, from which the Senator read it?

Mr. VEST. In a speech made here in the discussion of the Kellogg case.

Mr. SHERMAN. Cassanave was a member of the returning board. He was a respectable citizen. He was persecuted for his action on that board, and he complained. He and all the rest of his people down there were harried to death by local oppression. It seems he was a livery-stable keeper. He complained that he had been oppressed—threatened with an execution and bankruptcy, and came to appeal to political friends for help. There is not a man on either side of the Senate who has not had the same appeals made to him over and over again. Was anything wrong done?

It seems I was willing to give him $100, and he thought that was not enough. His counsel, Shellabarger & Wilson, very respectable gentlemen here, were trying to get money for him, and it seems they got $1,700. How many broken ducks in the Democratic party who have come here for office and been disappointed would be glad to be paid to get back to their homes? [Laughter.] I believe Cassanave was an honest, good man, of good reputation, and the people of Louisiana speak well of him, but the counsel he employed to defend him in some of the prosecutions against the returning board charged him $5,000. That was a gross, an outrageous price. He paid part of it, and $1,700 was left. Any man of any kind of generosity would help as a matter of course, and I did, and all of you would have done as much.

There is another thing that the Senator brings in, taken, it seems, from the New York or Washington Post. Where it got its authority for the statement that $223,000 was paid to people connected with the returning board I can not imagine, because there were only five members of the returning board. Two of them were appointed to office, and they were able and good men. Both of them admirably discharged their duties without a word of complaint. Mr. Wells, Governor Wells, as he was commonly called, was a native of Louisiana, everywhere respected.

It is true he ran against a very serious social feeling there in regard to his participation in the returning board; but he was appointed to office, and so was Anderson, still living, I believe, in the vigor of life, a planter, as honorable and true a man as I ever saw in my life. I am bound now and glad to say this much of him. He was appointed to a subordinate position in the custom-house and held it and performed its duties well and perhaps holds it yet. He held it during a number of years and I am inclined to think he is there yet. I appointed Anderson and I wish I could have given him a better appointment. I do not make any apologies, for he was a brave, good, and true man, who amidst great temptation performed a duty which could be of no possible benefit to himself, and yet you complain because he got an office. I would have appointed him to a great deal better one if I had had the power, not because he had made this returning-board report, but because he had the courage to do what was right in spite of ostracism and persecution.

Now, the Senator from Missouri retreats from the contest that he invited about the election of a President of the United States, and quotes here from the Washington Post some old speech that somebody made on a leave to print away off in a corner of some CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I never heard of it before in my life, but the Senator reads that to get out of that strait. No, no, the truth is that whenever the legality of the election of President Hayes is disputed, I will not only deny it, but I will, as I said, hold any man who will do so in contempt. I am sorry my friend incurs so great a risk as to suffer under that penalty, but it is not a very severe one, indeed, for him, but I hope it will make him more cautious, and that he as well as others will remember the historical facts I have brought to bear to convince him that everything that was claimed then was true. Ah, he says, I read from newspapers. Well, he read second-hand from the Washington Post. I read from the revised speeches of these gentlemen, which, the paper says, were revised, and here they are. They are the words of these men just as much as the words taken by that gentleman yonder are my words now. If they are not true, disavow them.

If the Senator from Missouri, instead of raking up Cassanave's troubles and stories of the trial and of his adventures in getting money to pay his counsel fees, would make a good round disclaimer against the doctrines proclaimed by his associates, it would be more satisfactory to the people of the country. If the Senators from the South would only give us an assurance that there shall be free and fair elections in the South, if the Senators will only do what the Constitution and laws require them to do, we shall have peace and fraternity, but let me say to you in all seriousness that if the colored people are deprived of their rights in the future as in the past, the difficulties and dangers that surround us will more increase year by year, and the time will come when you must yield them their rights, or worse will prevail.

There can be no doubt of this. I have talked with a gentleman who is in my eye, and therefore I do not name him. I appreciate the difficulties of the Southern question in the South. I should be glad to do anything I could to relieve you from your position. In some of those States the negroes are increasing rapidly in number while the whites are decreasing. The scepter of power is passing from your hands. There are grave complications growing out of this matter. If there is anything which can be done to lighten up and brighten up the condition of things in any part of the South, I should be glad to take my part in doing it. I do think that what you want more than all else is what you seem not to want. You want to diversify your industries.

Instead of breaking down the industries of the people of the North, you ought to try to rival the industries of the people of the North. Instead of breaking down our tariff laws to bring in foreign competition to injure us, you ought to seek to strengthen those tariff laws so that you may have the benefit of them and build up your industries in the South. If you would turn your raw cotton into yarn and cloth and give employment to your labor there, you would add to the value of your lands and of your materials. Your industries point that way. It was with that spirit and with that idea in my mind that I made my speech at Nashville, and every word of it is true.

What you want is internal development and improvement, the development of your resources, the cutting of your timber and converting it into lumber, the converting of your cotton into cloth and yarn, and the building up of machinery. You have coal, you have iron, you have everything down there that we have, and then you have the advantage of cheap labor, because the negroes of the South, if you will only treat them fairly, get over the prejudices of past generations of slavery, and give them the same advantages and opportunities that you would give a white man among you, will prove to be intelligent and able and strong workingmen. When I was in Birmingham I was surprised at the number of strong black men accustomed to hard work, delving away in the coal mines, acting also as puddlers and in other branches in the furnaces, the most valuable workingmen there.

It is to building up your industries that I desire you to turn your attention. But if you continue the policy of the past, continue the policy that is described by Governor McEnery and Senator EUSTIS to consider this people as entirely unfit for any political rights, if you say you will dominate over them and deprive them of their constitutional rights, then you surely will build up trouble for yourselves in the future.

But I have been led off in reply to my friend from Missouri further than I intended. It is sufficient for me to say that Packard asks no man to apologize for him. He is a brave, true Republican. No man felt more deeply and sincerely the result of the events in Louisiana than I did, but there was no help for it, with the surrounding hostile elements armed and organized, but that his power must melt away, and President Hayes did right in giving him a large and valuable office, which he richly deserved.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] referred to the commission that was sent to Louisiana in April, 1877, of which I had the honor to be a member. Judge Lawrence, of Illinois, the now Associate Justice Harlan, of Kentucky, ex-Governor Brown, of Tennessee, and the Hon. Wayne MacVeagh were members of it. It is sometimes called the MacVeagh commission, more properly the Lawrence commission it should be. I understood the Senator from Missouri to ask if that commission did not bend all its energies to getting members of the Packard legislature to go into the Nicholls legislature to settle the title of Hayes? Was that the remark?

Mr. VEST. I asked if the members of the commission did not do that thing. I will frankly state to the Senator from Connecticut that I never heard his name connected with any such personal action. I did hear, and it was published in the papers at the time, that members of that commission of visiting statesmen, as they were called, did work long and arduously to induce the Packard legislature to break up and join the Nicholls legislature.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think that commission is not entitled to the honor of the appellation of "visiting statesmen." I think that term was applied to the gentlemen who went down just after the election in the autumn of 1876. We never were called anything more than the Lawrence or the MacVeagh commission.

The Senator is mistaken on any theory, as to whether anybody did anything of that kind or not. The difficulty of the situation was just this: Mr. Hayes, having been in office a month, saw that there was no Legislature in Louisiana that could call upon the President of the United States to keep the peace in that State in accordance with the Constitution, because the Constitution says the Legislature shall call on the United States to suppress insurrection if the Legislature be in session, and if the Legislature be not in session the governor may call. Who was governor and who was the Legislature? That was the question in dispute. Should the President decide off-hand, "I think Packard is governor; I will send a brigade of troops to make him governor and keep him in," or vice versa, should he decide for Nicholls? That was the dilemma in which President Hayes was placed.

He appointed this commission to go down there in the first place to get facts, to ascertain how many undisputed members there were in each legislature and to see, of course, whether they could get together a legislature a majority of the members of which were men whose titles were not disputed. The commission went down there and they found Governor Packard in the custom-house, I think, really master of about half an acre of ground, and with a police force protecting him there, going, possibly, to his house to sleep; and they found Governor Nicholls in possession practically of the State, with a well-organized force of about 3,000 troops. They found the supreme court declining to act. They found thirteen of the eighteen district judges Republicans, some of them acting and some not acting, some who were elected having qualified before the Nicholls board and some having qualified elsewhere. It would have taken from that time to this to decide where the State government of Louisiana actually was upon those facts.

The desire of the National Government, the desire of Mr. Hayes and his Cabinet, was that the properly elected members should get together in one legislature with which he could deal. That legislature could call upon him for troops if it desired to do so. If the Packard men had the most influence they could have got men out of the Nicholl's legislature over to the Packard legislature. The upshot of it naturally was, that without this commission undertaking to coax them to one side or the other, the moment it was distinctly understood down there that President Hayes was not to use United States troops to enforce obedience to Packard (which perhaps would have created a civil war) the Packard legislature broke up, and the question was who would get first over into the other legislature, and in a short time there was a large majority in that legislature who were legal members according to the returning board.

General Grant had before practically solved the question when he said the previous winter that he would no longer use troops to make governors. Right or wrong, the question was settled then beyond all further controversy. The telegram of General Grant is as follows:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, D. C., January 7, 1877.

To Governor KELLOGG, New Orleans:

I am constrained to decline your request for the aid of troops to inaugurate the new State government to-morrow. To do so would be to recognize one of two rival governments for the State—executive and legislative—at the very time when a committee of each House of Congress is in the State capital of Louisiana investigating all the facts connected with the late election, at which each of the contestants claims to have been legally elected. All the troops can be called upon to do will be to suppress violence if any should take place, and leave constitutional authority and means to settle which is the rightful governor and which the legal legislature. This done, troops may be used to uphold the rightful government in the State, if called upon in accordance with the spirit and meaning of the Constitution.

U. S. GRANT.

And that General Grant reiterated, and President Hayes was obliged to take the question up where Grant left it.

The Senator from Missouri asked another question, how it could be that Nicholls could become governor and Hayes President. Here is an extract from a paper issued by the Nicholls party itself:

Indeed, as to Presidential electors, the mode of their appointment is, by the Constitution of the United States, left to the discretion of the Legislature of the State; therefore the General Assembly of Louisiana might create any tribunal whatever, and confide to it the appointment of electors for President and Vice-President.

Consequently it may properly authorize such a tribunal in the case of the election of Presidential electors by the people to count the votes and decide and declare who were entitled to seats in the electoral college.

The Nicholls party acknowledged, therefore, that the returning board under the laws of the State had a perfect right to declare who were electors. They made no dispute upon that; they gave up that point. The returning board had a right to declare who were electors; but when it came to ascertaining who was governor they denied that the registrars of the election had a right to make up the returns and send them to the returning board, and denied that the returning board had a right to revise them and declare who were members of the Legislature, because the constitution of that State contained the usual provision that the title of members should be decided by the Legislature itself. This is from the same address:

> The constitution of the State of Louisiana requires that "returns of all elections for members of the General Assembly shall be made to the Secretary of State."

And then it provided that they should be laid before the Legislature in the usual way, giving legislative bodies the right to decide on the qualifications of their own members and upon the title of the governor also. The Nicholls men admitted that the returning board might declare who were chosen Presidential electors, but claimed that the constitution of the State of Louisiana gave to the Legislature the decision of who was governor as well as the decision of who were elected members of the Legislature. The matter settled itself when General Grant said he would no longer make governors with a brigade of United States troops.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Kansas to yield to me for a moment that I may make a suggestion to the Senator from Connecticut in charge of this bill. I know that there are several gentlemen who desire to address the Senate on the question of the admission of Dakota; and I think that to enable them to do so will require perhaps a longer session this evening than the Senate will desire; and inasmuch as yesterday we agreed by unanimous consent to take the vote to-day, I ask those in charge of the bill if it will not be agreeable to change this unanimous consent to to-morrow?

Mr. PLATT. Of course I need not say I am anxious to finish the bill. I am, and have been for some time; but still the discussion has taken an unexpected turn to-day, and little has been said directly upon the main question as to whether South Dakota ought to be admitted to the Union. I do not wish to compel Senators to speak here until a late hour this evening, and I have no objection that the arrangement shall be continued for to-morrow as it was for to-day. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] is interested in the bill, and I ask him to say what he desires.

Mr. BUTLER. I would be largely governed in my wishes in the matter if I knew exactly how many Presidential candidates on the other side proposed yet to speak. I believe we have heard now from three, and probably we might cut off the debate somewhat if it should be advertised how many more of them wish to make stump speeches instead of speaking on the Dakota bill.

As far as I am personally concerned I am entirely willing to agree to whatever arrangement the honorable Senator from Connecticut may make. I am quite anxious for one, and I think I can speak for the minority of the Committee on Territories when I say that they are anxious that some action should be taken upon this bill. Its pendency prevents our attending to many other matters which are in hand; and therefore I should like to have a disposition of the bill as soon as possible.

Mr. PLATT. Do you want to go on to-night?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not care about going on to-night. I want it understood how many Presidential candidates wish to speak. Then I might determine what to do.

Mr. DAWES. Let the arrangement made yesterday for to-day be continued for to-morrow.

Mr. PLATT. I ask that the same unanimous arrangement which was agreed to in reference to the vote being taken to-day be extended until to-morrow. I think perhaps that will accommodate Senators.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not understand the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. That was precisely what I suggested.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not know but that he might have entered the field of Presidential candidates. [Laughter.]

Mr. PLATT. I would prefer to fix an hour at which the vote shall be taken to-morrow.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The debate to-day has turned on another question than the admission of Dakota.

Mr. PLATT. We shall get back to Dakota to-morrow.

Mr. SAULSBURY. There is a gentleman now on the floor who has taken the floor to make a speech. I spent six weeks in Louisiana about the time to which reference has been made to-day. I do not know that I shall want to speak; but there may be things said that may induce me, contrary to any unwillingness I may have, to speak to-morrow, and I do not desire that there shall be any arrangement which, after the political speeches made on this question on the other side, will cut me or anybody else off who may desire to be heard on this subject. Let the debate go on. I am perfectly willing to vote whenever the proper time comes. I do not know that I shall say a word on the bill, but I do not want gentlemen on the other side to make party speeches and assert as facts things which I think are not exactly according to the testimony in the case, and be compelled to vote without an opportunity to speak if I desire to do so. Therefore I should like to have the bill go over without any understanding as to a particular time for voting. If there is debate on the other side which requires reply, I certainly shall want an opportunity to reply. I have no desire to participate in the debate, but I am not willing to hear an arraignment of the party to which I belong by everybody on the other side without an opportunity on my part to reply.

Mr. PLUMB. I will yield to the Senator from Delaware now, if he wishes to speak.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am much obliged to the Senator from Kansas, but I am not in the habit of accepting favors from that quarter. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the final vote on this bill and the amendments be taken to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. CALL. I was not aware that there had been any consent given to take the vote to-day. I was not a party to any such arrangement. I do not think the debate should be terminated abruptly and without opportunity on the part of several Senators who may wish to participate in the discussion to be heard. I would not have felt myself bound by the action of the Senate as to the conclusion of the debate to-day.

Mr. BUTLER. I am quite sure that my friend from Florida would not object to the carrying out of an arrangement regularly entered into without objection. I am always glad to hear the Presidential candidates, and I do not desire to cut off the debate which has been progressing now for a good while, and many other subjects than Dakota have been talked about.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Florida to interpose an objection.

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir, I object.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, it had not been my intention to speak on this question until I heard the remarks of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] yesterday.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator from Kansas will allow me I merely wish to say that while I do not feel myself bound by the agreement made last night to vote to-day, yet when the agreement was made with the knowledge and consent of the Senators present, I shall not stand in the way of carrying it out; and if the Senator from Kansas prefers to speak in the morning I shall not object to the arrangement proposed.

Mr. PLUMB. As far as my personal convenience is concerned I would as soon go on to-night as to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again submit the proposition of the Senator from Connecticut, that the final vote on the pending bill and the amendments be taken to-morrow. Is there objection? [A pause.] The Chair hears none. That is the understanding and agreement of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Connecticut will call up this measure immediately after the conclusion of the routine business to-morrow morning, instead of waiting until 2 o'clock.

Mr. PLATT. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. CALL. Do I understand there is no particular time fixed to-morrow for the vote? ["None."]

Mr. PLATT. I will say, as I think it seems to be the wish of the Senate, that I will endeavor to call up the bill as soon as the routine business is disposed of to-morrow morning, and I have no doubt we can dispose of this bill at a reasonably early hour to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Massachusetts to suggest that unanimous consent be given that this bill be taken up at the conclusion of the routine morning business to-morrow morning? Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, Mr. President, if the Senator from Kansas will yield to me, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield for that purpose?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, sir.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 16th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1387) authorizing the appointment of James S. Jouett to a first lieutenancy of cavalry in the United States Army; and

An act (S. 1371) for the relief of Alfred Hedberg.

MAJ. D. N. BASH—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before submitting the motion of the Senator from Iowa, the Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States.

The message was read, as follows:

To the Senate:

I return without approval Senate bill No. 258, entitled "An act for the relief of Maj. Daniel N. Bash, paymaster, United States Army."

The object of this bill is to release Paymaster Bash from all liability to the Government for the loss by theft of $7,350.93, which was intrusted to him for the payment of United States troops at various posts, one of which was Fort McKinney, in Wyoming Territory.

He started from Cheyenne Depot, accompanied by his clerk, D. F. Bash. Before starting he attempted to procure an iron safe in which he could deposit the money which he should have in his possession during his absence, but was unable to do so. It is alleged that it is customary for paymasters in such cases to be furnished with safes by the Government.

On the 17th day of March, 1887, Major Bash arrived at Douglas, Wyo., having in his possession $350.93, which was a balance left in his hands after making previous payments on the way. At Douglas he received by express $7,000, $250 of which were in silver. He was met here by an escort, consisting of a sergeant and private soldier, who had been sent from Fort McKinney, and who were under orders to report to the paymaster at Douglas, and to act as guard from that place to Fort McKinney.

Another unsuccessful attempt having been made at Douglas to obtain a safe or treasure box in which to carry the money, the same was put in a leather valise as the best thing that could be done in the circumstances. The money was first handed by the paymaster to his clerk, and by the clerk put in the valise and handed to the sergeant of the escort. There is evidence that the sergeant was told not to permit it to be out of his sight. Immediately after supper at Douglas the entire party entered the stage and proceeded upon their journey, the sergeant carrying the valise. Major Bash asserts that he said to the sergeant, "You must take good care of the valise—it contains the money."

The next morning, on the 18th day of March, the party arrived at Dry Cheyenne. When the paymaster went in to breakfast at that place he found all the party at the breakfast-table. After breakfast he walked out to the stage, the sergeant going at the same time. He asked him what he had done with the valise, and received the reply that it was in the stage. He then said to the sergeant, "You ought to have brought it in with you; you should take better care of that valise." The valise was then examined and the money was found untouched.

Pursuing their journey, the party arrived at Antelope Springs, Wyoming Territory, at half past 10 o'clock the same morning. The paymaster alleges that he asked the sergeant if he should take dinner there, and that being answered in the negative, he remarked to him that he might then stay at the stage; that he then went to the stage station, leaving the two soldiers and the clerk at the stage; that he remained at the station warming himself a short time, finding there three citizens, one of whom he afterwards learned was Parker, the thief; that he left the room in which he had been warming himself and went to the dining-room, passing along the front of the house, and as he did so noticed the stage standing there, with no one near it except a stock-tender; that on reaching the dining-room he found his entire party at the table; that he looked "pretty sharp" at the sergeant, as he was surprised to see him there, but as he was just eating his pie he (the paymaster) said nothing to him; that not more than a minute after that the sergeant and driver got up and went out; that three or four minutes after they went out they rushed back and said that the valise had been taken.

It was found that the valise and money had been taken by Parker, who had mounted a horse and ridden away. He was pursued so closely that revolver shots were exchanged between the sergeant, who was badly mounted, and the thief. The sergeant alleged that he could have shot Parker if he had been provided with a gun instead of a revolver.

The facts in relation to this subject were developed upon a court of inquiry called for that purpose; and much of the above recited is derived from the evidence of Major Bash himself, taken upon such inquiry.

The following is the finding of the court concerning the conduct of the paymaster in the premises:

"That Maj. Daniel N. Bash, paymaster United States Army, did not give such direct and detailed orders to the members of the escort as to the manner in which they should guard the public money in his (Bash's) possession while en route to Fort McKinney as the importance of the matter required; and that he did not take the proper and necessary pains to see that any orders which he had given on this subject were duly obeyed."

This finding defines a case of negligence which renders the paymaster liable for the loss of these funds. But a number of Army officers, including the members of the court of inquiry, suggest that the paymaster thus found at fault should be relieved from responsibility. This is much the fashion in these days.

It is said that a safe should have been provided; that the paymaster had the right to rely upon the fidelity and efficiency of the escort, and that the two men furnished him as an escort were unintelligent and negligent; that they should have been armed with guns instead of pistols; and that the instructions given to the escort by the paymaster were sufficient to acquit him of culpable neglect.

It seems to me that the omissions of care on the part of this officer are of such a nature as to render much that is urged in his favor irrelevant. He had the charge of this money. It was his care, vigilance, and intelligence which were the safeguards of its protection. If he had as full an appreciation as he indicates of the importance of having a safe, he must have known that in its absence additional care and watchfulness on his part were necessary, whatever his escort or his clerk might do.

But notwithstanding all this he seemed quite content to leave this large sum of money in the hands of those sent to him, not to have the custody of his funds, but to guard him from violence and robbery. On the very morning of the day the theft was committed he had found fault with the sergeant for leaving the money in the stage while he took breakfast, and had said to him that he (the sergeant) ought to have brought it in with him. He here furnishes his own definition of the kind of care which should have been taken of the money—the sergeant "ought to have brought it in with him;" and this suggests the idea that it would have been quite consistent with his duty, and perhaps not much beneath his dignity, if he had taken it in himself. (Chief Paymaster Terrill, in a letter favoring leniency, states that the coin could not have weighed less than 15 pounds.)

It must certainly be conceded that what then took place plainly warned him that to insure the safety of this money he must either take personal charge of it or he must at least be sure that those to whom he surrendered it were watchful and vigilant. And yet, when a few hours later, on the same day, upon arriving at Antelope Springs, he was informed by the sergeant that he did not propose to take dinner there, the paymaster almost casually said to him, "Then you stay at the stage," and he himself went to a room at the station to warm himself. When, as he went from there to the dining-room, he passed the stage and saw no one near it except a stock-tender, a very conservative idea of duty and care would have induced him to stop at the stage and ascertain the condition of affairs. If he had done so, he probably would have found the money there and could have taken it in with him or watched it until some of his party came out from dinner. Instead of doing this, he himself went to the dining-room and indicated his surprise at seeing the sergeant there by looking at him sharply. However, as he was just eating his pie, nothing was said.

It is not improbable that the thief waited for the clerk and escort, and lastly the paymaster himself, to enter the dining-room, before venturing to take, entirely unmolested, the valise containing the money. When it is considered that after finishing his pie the sergeant came out to the stage so nearly the exact moment of the theft that, though badly mounted, he was able to approach near enough in pursuit of the fleeing thief to exchange revolver shots with him, it is quite apparent that the loss might have been prevented if the paymaster had remained a short time by the stage when he saw it unprotected, or had taken the valise in with him, or promptly diverted the attention of the sergeant from his pie to the money which all had abandoned.

When, therefore, it is said that this loss can be charged in any degree to the neglect or default of the Government, it is answered that the direct and immediate cause of the loss was the omission on the part of this paymaster of the Government, in whose custody these funds were placed, of the plainest and simplest acts of prudence and care.

The temptation is very strong to yield assent to the proposition for the relief of a citizen from liability to the Government, arising from conduct not absolutely criminal; but the bonds and the security wisely exacted by the Government from its officers to insure proper discharge of public duty will be of very limited value if everything is to be excused except actual dishonesty.

I am thoroughly convinced that the interests of the public would be better protected if fewer private bills were passed relieving officials upon slight and sentimental grounds from their pecuniary responsibilities; and the readiness with which Army officers join in applications for the condonation of negligence on the part of their Army comrades does not tend, in my opinion, to maintain that regard for discipline and that scrupulous observance of duty which should characterize those belonging to their honorable profession.

I can not satisfy myself that the negligence made apparent in this case should be overlooked.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, April 18, 1888.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, this veto message turns upon a difference of opinion between President Cleveland, on full investigation, and the committees of the two Houses upon some conflicting evidence as to the precise time when a certain lieutenant finished eating his pie. Now, without the least disrespect to the Executive opinion on that important question, I move that the message be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. I believe that case was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR. No, sir.

Mr. SPOONER. It was reported by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOAR. They determined the case on the recommendation of General Sheridan, General Terry, General Crook, and some other officer, and on a full investigation of the facts.

Mr. COCKRELL. I remember the case distinctly. We can discuss it when the Committee on Claims reports it back to be passed over the President's veto; but I thought it was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, and I was going to ask that it be referred there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to refer the bill and the accompanying message to the Committee on Claims, and that the message be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

CLAIM OF WILLIAM H. FREAR AGAINST FRANCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

In answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 5th of March last, calling upon the Secretary of State for copies of the correspondence relating to the claim of William H. Frear against the Government of France, for money due him for provisions furnished in March, 1871, for revictualing Paris, I transmit a report from that officer, together with the correspondence called for by the resolution.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, April 18, 1888.

FLORIDA PUBLIC LAND INVESTIGATION.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the expenses attending the investigation of alleged illegal and fraudulent conveyances of public lands in the State of Florida, authorized by the resolution of the Senate of the 18th instant, be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1473) authorizing the President of the United States to arrange a conference for the purpose of promoting arbitration and encouraging reciprocal commercial relations between the United States of America and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, and the Empire of Brazil.

CONFERENCE WITH SOUTH AMERICAN COUNTRIES.

Mr. FRYE. I submit a conference report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1473) authorizing the President of the United States to arrange a conference for the purpose of promoting arbitration and encouraging reciprocal commercial relations between the United States of America and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, and the Empire of Brazil, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 37 of the Senate amendment, after the word "States," add the words "which are hereby invited to participate in said conference." In line 38 of the Senate amendment, in lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$75,000." Strike out all after the figure "4," in line 44 of the Senate amendment, down to the word "the," in line 51, and insert the words "Six delegates to said conference shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; two by the President of the Senate and two by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who shall be members of their respective Houses. These delegates shall serve without compensation, but their actual necessary expenses shall be paid." In line 56 of the Senate amendment, after the word

"clerks," insert the words "and other assistants." Strike out all after the word "publication," in line 58 of the Senate amendment, down to the semicolon after the word "languages," in line 60, and insert the words "by the Public Printer, in the English, Spanish, and Portuguese languages, of so much of the proceedings of the conference as it shall determine." In line 61 of the Senate amendment strike out the word "full." And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same.

WM. P. FRYE,
J. N. DOLPH,
JOSEPH E. BROWN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES B. McCREARY,
JOHN E. RUSSELL,
WM. W. MORROW,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg to ask my friend from Maine to explain this matter, and at the same time to express my opposition in any respect to a congress of nations or whatever the delegates to it being appointed either by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, or the House itself, or by the Senate or its President. I do not think it is within the line of proper precedents; but perhaps it may be explained.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, the first amendment which the House made was the amendment inserting "Hayti and San Domingo" both in the title and in the body of the bill. The second amendment was inserting "$75,000" in place of "$100,000," the House having passed a bill appropriating $30,000. The third amendment was that to which the Senator alludes, where, instead of the President of the United States appointing ten delegates who should serve without compensation, at the request of the other House the appointment of six was conferred upon the President, with the consent and advice of the Senate, two upon the President of the Senate, and two upon the Speaker of the House, to be appointed from their respective Houses. There were no especial reasons given for that, and so far as I was concerned I could not see, and I do not think that the other conferees on the part of the Senate saw, any especial objection to it, as these members of the delegation receive no compensation whatever for their services, and as the conference will be held at a time when neither House will probably be in session, it being next year.

The next amendment was the one inserting the Portuguese language as well as the English and Spanish, which was regarded as necessary on account of Brazil, and I learned on communication that it was desirable it should be inserted.

The next amendment was the insertion of the word "assistants" after "clerks." That was deemed necessary in order to cover "interpreters."

I believe this covers all the changes which have been made in the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have only to address myself to one, and that is the one to which I asked the attention of my friend from Maine a few moments ago.

I do not understand upon what principle of public practice or of the Constitution of the United States a quasi-diplomatic conference between the United States and foreign powers is to be carried on by a body of men any of whom are appointed by the House of Representatives or by the Senate. I do not think that any instance of that kind has ever occurred in the history of our country before.

If these are officers (for the pay question does not affect it at all), then it would be rather clear that a member of the Senate or of the other House who accepted such an honor would deprive himself of the capacity thenceforth to serve his constituents in either House of Congress, because the Constitution forbids a member of either House from being appointed to any office under the Executive whatever, and if he continues to hold his place he can not hold the two at the same time.

But I am not so much upon that point, which is a serious one, as I am upon the impropriety of inaugurating a precedent of this character, where the two Houses are to commence for the first time in the career of the century that we have gone through under our form of government in appointing men who are to enter into whatever may be called this kind of a conference, important as it certainly is, and to have that conference selected by the two bodies of Congress, for to be selected in part is just as bad as in whole, and if the President of the Senate represents the Senate, the Speaker of the House represents the House. It is overturning the balance, as it seems to me, of constitutional responsibilities and dignities that ought not to be disturbed, and I put in my feeble and I suppose ineffectual protest against doing that sort of a thing.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, it seems to me that there ought to be insistance on the point made by the Senator from Vermont. The Constitution is perfectly plain. It vests the appointing power of all officers of the United States, aside from those specifically named in article 2, in the President of the United States, and I think that it is an absolute usurpation of the appointing power for Congress to undertake to send delegates to a conference of any kind.

I ask the Senator from Maine, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, whether he regards these officials as officers of the United States, because if they are officers of the United States they can only be appointed by the President of the United States, and certainly neither the Senate nor the House ought to undertake to appoint embassadors or members of international congresses.

The proposition is important because an encroachment by one branch of the Federal Government upon another branch once commenced is likely to grow. It appears to me that unless there are precedents for this action, and unless there are reasons for it that I can not conceive to exist, a proposition of this kind ought to be resisted in the beginning.

Mr. FRYE. Has the Senator a copy of the Constitution by him?

Mr. CHANDLER. I have.

Mr. FRYE. Will he be kind enough to read the article which forbids the appointment of members of Congress to any office created by law?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is section 6 of Article I:

> The Senators and Representatives shall receive a compensation, etc.
> They shall in all cases except treason, etc., be privileged from arrest—

And so on. Then the second paragraph reads:

> No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time, and no person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator from Vermont contend that this is an "office" within the use of that term in the Constitution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it is. It is a place created by law, of great responsibility, on a commission, and with everything except salary, and we have had several offices that were clearly offices without any salary, I am sorry to say; they should not have been. The salary question does not affect it at all.

I think this report had better go over until to-morrow, so that we may consider it a little more, if my friend does not object.

Mr. FRYE. I simply desire to say in relation to it that so far as I was concerned it did not seem to me that this was an office within the meaning of the Constitution; neither did it seem to me to be a matter of very special importance. The conferees on the part of the House were very anxious to have this amendment made, and while the Senate conferees did not desire it they yielded it. So far as I am concerned I have no wish in relation to it—not the slightest.

Mr. EVARTS. This question has been raised unexpectedly to me, for I had supposed if there was anything settled under our Constitution it was that no member of either House of Congress could hold any office or perform any function in the Government except the legislative duty that is deposited in the two Houses of Congress by the Constitution. It would seem to me, therefore, that it must have been rather by inadvertence that the other House should have undertaken to give a participation in this commission to members of the two Houses of Congress. Certainly I could never bring myself to agree to a conference that should involve what I regard as a violation of the Constitution and a movement which ought to be checked at the outset, even if it could be excused as not absolutely within the terms of the Constitution.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to examine the matter a little further. I prefer very much myself, so far as I am concerned, that the appointment should be made by the President of the United States, and that members of the two bodies of Congress should not be selected as delegates. With the permission of the Senate, I will allow the matter to go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report of the conference committee will lie upon the table until to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 19, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 18, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move that the reading of so much of the Journal as relates to reports from committees be dispensed with.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The residue of the Journal was read and approved.

MILITARY RESERVATION, FORT THORNBURGH, UTAH.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of War of an appropriation to pay for private property taken by the Government in the extension of the military reservation at Fort Thornburgh, Utah; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ACCOUNTS OF INDIAN AGENTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, with a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, a draught, and recommending the passage of a bill to authorize the accounting officers of the Treasury Department to allow certain credits in the settlement of the accounts of Indian agents; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, and ordered to be printed.

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION AT PARIS, 1889.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, the joint resolution (H. Res. 83) accepting the invitation of the French Republic to take part in an international exposition to be held in Paris in 1889, has been returned from the Senate with amendments. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in, and conferecs on the part of the House appointed.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce during the day the managers on the part of the House in the conference.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. BELMONT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 9534) to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AMERICAN INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1473) authorizing the President of the United States to arrange a conference for the purpose of promoting arbitration and encourage reciprocal commercial relations between the United States of America and the Republics of Mexico, Central, and South America, and the Empire of Brazil, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: in line 37 of the Senate amendment, after the word "States," add the words "which are hereby invited to participate in said conference." In line 38 of the Senate amendment, in lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$75,000." Strike out all after the figure 4, in line 44 of the Senate amendment, down to the word "the," in line 51, and insert the words "six delegates to said conference shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, two by the President of the Senate, and two by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who shall be members of their respective Houses. These delegates shall serve without compensation, but their actual necessary expenses shall be paid." In line 56 of the Senate amendment, after the word "clerks," insert "and other assistants." Strike out all after the word "publication," in line 58 of the Senate amendment, down to the semicolon; after the word "languages," in line 60, insert the words "by the Public Printer in the English, Spanish, and Portuguese languages of so much of the proceedings of the conference as it shall determine." In line 61 of the Senate amendment strike out the word "full;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same.

JAMES B. McCREARY,
JOHN E. RUSSELL,
W. W. MORROW,
Managers on the part of the House.
WILLIAM P. FRYE,
JAMES L. DOLPH,
JOSEPH E. BROWN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The House conferecs submit the following statement in explanation of the amendments:

The managers of the House appointed on the conference ordered on the disagreement of the House to the amendments offered by the Senate to House bill No. 1473, being a bill entitled "An act authorizing the President of the United States to arrange a conference for the purpose of promoting arbitration and encouraging reciprocal commercial relations between the United States of America and the republics of Mexico, Central and South America, and the empire of Brazil," herewith submit the joint report of the managers on the part of the House and the managers on the part of the Senate, which was unanimously agreed to, and in explanation of amendments made and their effect, submit the following detailed statement, all of which are recommended for adoption:

The general features of the bill and its principal aims and provisions have not been materially changed.

Amendment 1 adds Hayti and San Domingo to the republics which are to be invited to the conference.

Amendment 3 strikes out a part of section 1 and inserts it as a part of another section.

Amendment 4 states what the conference is called to consider, and in lieu of the sum proposed inserts $75,000 as the amount appropriated, and provides for the appointment of ten delegates instead of six to represent the United States at said conference, who are required to serve without compensation, but their actual necessary expenses are to be paid.

It is believed by the conferees, after careful examination and consultation with those who have looked into the expenses of such international conferences, that the amount named is necessary and proper, and they are strengthened in this belief by the importance and magnitude of the great international conference to be held, and by the provisions in the bill, which require the said amount or so much thereof as may be necessary to be disbursed under the direction and in the discretion of the Secretary of State, of which disbursements he will render an account to the Congress of the United States.

Amendment 4 provides also that the Secretary of State shall appoint such clerks and their assistants as shall be necessary, at a compensation to be determined by him, and provide for the publication in the English, Spanish, and Portuguese languages of so much of the proceedings of the conference as it shall require.

Amendment 5 simply amends the title of the bill so as to make it conform to the provisions of the bill.

JAMES B. McCREARY.
JOHN E. RUSSELL.
WM. W. MORROW.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. McCREARY moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I did not wish to detain the House with any remarks upon the conference report, but having been the originator of the proposition agreed to by the House and Senate, I beg leave of the House to submit some remarks in the RECORD upon this question.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this day being set apart for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Labor, I desire to call up the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the unfinished business.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I call up the bill H. R. 8560, which is the unfinished business, and ask unanimous consent that the remaining sections be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. This bill has been practically concluded, and there are but one or two sections which are designed to conform the department to the change made in the law, and which are merely formal in their character.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8560) to establish a department of labor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill, and complete its consideration in the House.

Mr. CANNON. What is the bill?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. To establish a department of labor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next section of the bill, to which there is an amendment pending.

Mr. DINGLEY. I withdraw the amendment which I offered when this bill was under consideration before.

The SPEAKER. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine was in lieu of the eighth section of the bill. The Clerk will now report the eighth section.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I now demand the previous question upon the amendments and upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask that one vote be taken upon all the amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. How many amendments are there?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Some eight or ten; but we will adopt them all.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the amendments had better be read.

The amendments were read at length.

The SPEAKER. Unless a separate vote is demanded upon some amendment the question will be taken upon the amendments in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time and, passed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BOARD OF ARBITRATION.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I call up for consideration the bill H. R. 8665.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8665) to create boards of arbitration for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations and other common carriers engaged in interstate and Territorial transportation of property or passengers and their employés.

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever differences or controversies arise between railroad companies engaged in the transportation of property or passengers between two or more States of the United States, between a Territory and State, within the Territories of the United States, or within the District of Columbia, and the employés of said railroad companies, which differences or controversies may hinder, impede, obstruct, interrupt, or affect such transportation of property or passengers, if, upon the written proposition of either party to the controversy to submit their differences to arbitration, the other party shall accept the proposition, then and in such event the railroad company is hereby authorized to select and appoint one person, and such employé or employés, as the case may be, to select and appoint another person, and the two persons thus selected and appointed to select a third person, all three of whom shall be citizens of the United States and wholly impartial and disinterested in respect to such differences or controversies; and the three persons thus selected and appointed shall be, and they are hereby, created and constituted a board of arbitration, with the duties, powers, and privileges hereinafter set forth.

SEC. 2. That the board of arbitration provided for in the first section of this act shall possess all the powers and authority in respect to administering oaths, subpœnaing witnesses and compelling their attendance, preserving order during the sittings of the board, and requiring the production of papers and writings relating alone to the subject under investigation now possessed and belonging to United States commissioners appointed by the circuit court of the United States; but in no case shall any witness be compelled to disclose the secrets or produce the records or proceedings of any labor organization of which he may be an officer or member; and said board of arbitration may appoint a clerk and employ a stenographer, and prescribe all reasonable rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, looking to the speedy advancement of the differences and controversies submitted to them to a conclusion and determination. Each of said arbitrators shall take an oath to honestly, fairly, and faithfully perform his duties, and that he is not personally interested in the subject-matter in controversy, which oath may be administered by any State or Territorial officer authorized to administer oaths. The third person so selected and appointed as aforesaid shall be the president of said board; and any order, finding, conclusion, or award made by a majority of such arbitrators shall be of the same force and effect as if all three of such arbitrators concurred therein or united in making the same.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of said board of arbitration, immediately upon their selection, to organize at the nearest practicable point to the place of the origin of the difficulty or controversy, and to hear and determine the matters of difference which may be submitted to them in writing by all the parties, giving them full opportunity to be heard on oath, in person and by witnesses, and also granting them the right to be represented by counsel; and after concluding its investigation said board shall publicly announce its award, which, with the findings of fact upon which it is based, shall be reduced to writing and signed by the arbitrators concurring therein, and, together with the testimony taken in the case, shall be filed with the Commissioner of Labor of the United States, who shall make such award public as soon as the same shall have been received by him.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the right of any employés engaged in the controversy to appoint, by designation in writing, one or more persons to act for them in the selection of an arbitrator to represent them upon the board of arbitration.

SEC. 5. That each member of said tribunal of arbitration shall receive a compensation of $10 a day for the time actually employed. That the clerk appointed by said tribunal of arbitration shall receive the same fees and compensation as clerks of United States circuit courts and district courts receive for like services. That the stenographer shall receive as full compensation for his services 20 cents for each folio of an hundred words of testimony taken and reduced to writing before said arbitrators. That United States marshals or other persons serving the process of said tribunal of arbitration shall receive the same fees and compensation for such services as they would receive for like services upon process issued by United States commissioners. That witnesses attending before said tribunal of arbitration shall receive the same fees as witnesses attending before United States commissioners. That all of said fees and compensation shall be payable by the United States in like manner as fees and compensation are payable in criminal causes under existing laws: Provided, That the said tribunal of arbitration shall have power to limit the number of witnesses in each case where fees shall be paid by the United States: And provided further, That the fees and compensation of the arbitrators, clerks, stenographers, marshals, and others for service of process, and witnesses under this act shall be examined and certified by the United States district judge of the district in which the arbitration is held before they are presented to the accounting officers of the Treasury Department for settlement, and shall then be subject to the provisions of section 846 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and a sufficient sum of money to pay all expenses under this act and to carry the same into effect is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 6. That the President may select two special arbitrators, one of whom at least shall be a resident of the State or Territory in which the controversy arises, who, together with the Commissioner of Labor, shall constitute a temporary board of arbitration for the purpose of examining the causes of the controversy, the conditions accompanying, and the best means for adjusting it; the result of which examination shall be immediately reported to the President and Congress, and on the rendering of such report the services of the two special arbitrators shall cease. The services of the board of arbitration, to be ordered at the time by the President and constituted as herein provided, may be tendered by the President for the purpose of settling a controversy such as contemplated, either upon his own motion or upon the application of one of the parties to the controversy, or upon the application of the executive of a State.

SEC. 7. That the special arbitrators provided in the preceding section shall be entitled to receive $10 each per day for each day's service rendered, and the expenses absolutely incurred in the performance of their duties; and the expenses of the Commissioner of Labor, acting as one of the board of arbitration, shall also be reimbursed to him. Such compensation and expenses shall be paid by the Treasurer of the United States, on proper vouchers, certified to by the Commissioner of Labor and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 8. That upon the direction of the President, as hereinbefore provided, the board of arbitration shall visit the locality of the pending dispute, make careful inquiry into the cause thereof, hear all persons interested therein who may come before it, advise the respective parties what, if anything, ought to be done or submitted to by either or both to adjust such dispute, and make a written decision thereof. This decision shall at once be made public, shall be recorded upon proper books of record to be kept in the office of the Commissioner of Labor, who shall cause a copy thereof to be filed with the secretary of the State or Territory, or States or Territories, in which the controversy exists.

SEC. 9. That in each case the special arbitrators who may be selected as provided shall, before entering upon their duties, be sworn to the faithful discharge thereof. The Commissioner of Labor shall be chairman ex officio of the board of arbitration, and may appoint one or more clerks or stenographers to act in each controversy only, which clerks or stenographers shall be compensated at a rate not exceeding $5 per day each, and actual expenses incurred shall be reimbursed.

SEC. 10. The Commissioner of Labor shall, as soon as possible after the passage of this act, establish such rules of procedure as shall be approved by the President; but the board shall permit each party to a controversy to appear in person or by counsel, and to examine and cross-examine witnesses. All its proceedings shall be transacted in public, except when in consultation for the purpose of deciding upon the evidence and arguments laid before it. The chairman of the board is hereby authorized to administer oaths to witnesses in all investigations conducted by the board, and such witnesses shall be summoned in the same manner as witnesses are summoned to appear before United States courts and commissioners, and they shall each receive the same fees as witnesses attending before United States commissioners.

SEC. 10. All fees, expenses, and compensation shall be paid as hereinbefore provided in section 5 of this act.

Mr. ROGERS. I make the point of order that this bill should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The bill provides for the compensation of the board of arbitration and others, and appropriates money from the Treasury to pay it. It comes under the rule requiring a bill to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move that the House now go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering this bill. And pending that I desire to have debate upon the bill limited. I ask any of those gentlemen who are opposed to the provisions of the bill if they will give me an idea of what time they want? I will state for the information of the House that it is substantially the arbitration bill passed in the last Congress, with the addition, in accordance with suggestions contained in the President's message, of the appointment by him, when he deems it necessary, of two arbitrators, who, with the Commissioner of Labor, may serve as a special board and can visit the locality affected by the strike and report upon the same.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the gentleman propose to limit general debate?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I want the House to limit debate upon the bill.

Mr. REED. You can not limit debate until we go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. We can by unanimous consent.

Mr. REED. My attention has just been called to the bill. It is of such a nature that I think we should have thorough discussion; and we can not tell how much discussion will be required until the propositions of the bill are stated.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. We could limit general debate before going into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLOUNT. You can not.

Mr. TARSNEY. Is it not competent to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider this bill, and pending that to move to limit debate?

Mr. REED. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that the object of debate is to give information to the House by the presentation of the views of different members; and the rules of the House do not permit a limitation of debate until after we have been in Committee of the Whole, for the reason that until the propositions have been stated by those who are in charge of the bill it is impossible to say how much debate ought to be bestowed upon the subject before the House.

I have only read the title of the bill, but it seems to me that the proposed legislation is for the benefit of the parties to the dispute, and I think in the interests of the general public debate ought not now to be limited.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I recognize the fact that we shall facilitate the passage of the bill, since the question has now been raised, by going into Committee of the Whole. I make that motion, and trust that the House will aid us in passing the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill which was read a few moments ago.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. MCCREARY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill the title of which the Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8365) to create boards of arbitration for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations and other common carriers engaged in interstate and Territorial transportation of property or passengers and their employés.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. When I endeavored to limit debate on this bill it was not with the idea of preventing the House from obtaining the fullest information upon this question. But this bill up to the sixth section is identical with the very bill which passed both Houses of the last Congress, which was debated in the House for some five days and then passed by a vote of 199 to 30; and which passed the Senate without a dissenting vote. I presumed under that state of circumstances, and considering the publicity which has been given to the subject, that much discussion would not now be thought necessary, this being simply a proposition to encourage the settlement of controversies between railroad companies and their employés by voluntary arbitration simply, the Government furnishing the machinery so that those parties could, after they had come together, obtain the necessary testimony to get at all the facts, and then trust to the efficacy of public opinion in enforcing the decision of the board of arbitration. The bill of last Congress did not become a law, having reached the President but a day or two before the final adjournment.

In the last Congress, however, the President submitted to this House his views on the subject of arbitration, in which he expressed himself in favor of the appointment of a board by the Executive for the purpose not alone to serve as a board of arbitration when needed, but to serve as a board of inquiry to investigate and report to Congress. We have incorporated in this bill the provision—

That the President may select two special arbitrators, one of whom at least shall be a resident of the State or Territory in which the controversy arises, who, together with the Commissioner of Labor, shall constitute a temporary board of arbitration for the purpose of examining the causes of the controversy, the conditions accompanying, and the best means for adjusting it; the result of which examination shall be immediately reported to the President and Congress, and on the rendering of such report the services of the two special arbitrators shall cease. The services of the board of arbitration, to be ordered at the time by the President and constituted as herein provided, may be tendered by the President for the purpose of settling a controversy such as contemplated, either upon his own motion, or upon the application of one of the parties to the controversy, or upon the application of the executive of a State.

The Committee on Labor have unanimously reported this measure to the House, as they believed that all we could do, with the present light given us upon this subject, was simply to provide for voluntary arbitration. We have but recently experienced——

Mr. CRAIN. Will the gentleman permit a moment's interruption?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. CRAIN. Wherein is the distinction between this bill and the bill which passed both Houses of the last Congress?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I have stated that there is none except the additional feature in regard to a special arbitration board to be appointed by the President, which is in conformity to the suggestions contained in the President's message.

Mr. CRAIN. What power has that special arbitration board to enforce its decision?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. None, other than the power of public opinion after the board have reached a decision and given their judgment as to where the blame rests. After this board have reported that the failure to agree is due to the fault of either party, or that the difficulty is due either to unjust claims on the part of the workingmen or to unjust conditions imposed by the company, then the matter must rest with public opinion.

Mr. CRAIN. Where, then, is the necessity of providing for the appointment of any such board? If you are to leave the enforcement of the decision to public opinion, what is the necessity for appointing a public arbitration board whose decision will have no other sanction than that of public opinion?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The decision of the board will be an indication by the people of this country to both parties to the controversy as to how these difficulties and differences should be adjusted.

Mr. CRAIN. But how can you call this board arbitrators, unless the parties to the controversy select them?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Of course, unless it is voluntary it is not arbitration.

Mr. CRAIN. But these "arbitrators" are not to be selected by the parties. They are to be appointed by the President. They are not arbitrators; they are judges.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Section 6 provides that—

The services of the board of arbitration, to be ordered at the time by the President and constituted as herein provided, may be tendered by the President for the purpose of settling a controversy such as contemplated, either upon his own motion, or upon the application of one of the parties to the controversy, or upon the application of the executive of a State.

Now, if their services are declined, then this board will simply be a board of inquiry to investigate as to the causes of the trouble and report to Congress.

Mr. CRAIN. Yes, but my friend from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] fails, I think, to fully understand the import of my inquiry. Arbitrators are necessarily selected by the parties to the controversy.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. So they will be under this bill.

Mr. CRAIN. You not only provide for the appointment of arbitrators, but you appoint a judge or a board of judges at the solicitation of the executive of the State, or of one of the parties to the controversy. Now, how can that be a board of arbitration?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. If my friend will pardon me, the preceding sections of the bill provide for an arbitration board to be chosen by the parties to the controversy. This is an additional feature.

Mr. CRAIN. I understand that.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. And unless the parties elect to accept the services of this board it can not act as an arbitration board. It will then be simply a board of investigation to report to Congress.

Mr. CRAIN. In other words, a committee of investigation.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Yes; they would be practically a committee of investigation, and would enable us to dispense with the special committees which we appoint to make investigations into similar questions and report to this House.

Mr. CRAIN. And their action would have no other sanction?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. They do not want any higher sanction. It would have no other legal sanction.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this, in substance, is the measure before the House. I presumed that there would be no desire for general debate upon this question, and if there is not any such express desire now, I ask to have the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate. I make that motion.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PARKER. I think the gentleman had better not undertake to dispose of this bill quite so summarily.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. My question is this: The first portion of this bill, I understood the gentleman to say, was precisely the same as the existing law.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. No, not the existing law. I said it was the same as the bill that passed the House and the Senate in the last Congress, but did not become a law. It is the same as that with perhaps some slight difference. There is no law upon the subject.

Mr. COX. It is the same as the bill which failed to become a law last year for want of the President's signature.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Then I would like to submit to the gentleman from Missouri this proposition: The trouble with the first portion of the bill, as it relates to railway strikes——

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. If the gentleman will pardon me, after we limit general debate we can take up the bill section by section, and then he can make his suggestions in regard to details.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. And the gentleman will give me time to do that?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Within the rule. You will have time under the rule any way.

Mr. Chairman, I now move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. PARKER. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to some things in this bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That can be done when we reach those sections in considering the bill section by section.

Mr. PARKER. I prefer to do it now.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Let us limit debate now. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. PARKER. I want to ask some questions first, and then to make some suggestions in regard to the provisions of the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. After we have fixed the limit of general debate I will cheerfully yield for any questions gentlemen may wish to ask.

Mr. PARKER. I do not think we shall fix the time until we see what kind of a bill this is.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported only yesterday morning, and has come into the House in print since we met to-day. I have had no opportunity even to read the bill. I do not know that I shall care to make any observations upon it. Of course gentlemen who have been members of the last Congress understand that I shall not vote for the bill at all; but I should like to have the opportunity of reading it and of hearing it discussed a little. I will state, however, that I may desire—though this I think altogether improbable—to submit some observations in regard to it. I ask the gentleman from Missouri to allow the debate to run at least until we shall have had opportunity to read through the sections of the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The Committee on Labor have a number of bills which they desire to call up. We are, in good faith, endeavoring to carry out the business intrusted to us by the House. We can not do it unless the House will aid us by limiting the time for debate. This bill was introduced on the 19th of March, and it is reported back from the committee without the slightest change.

Mr. ROGERS. But we do not consider bills until they are reported and put on the Calendar.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The fact that the bill has been considered all over the country, and that every feature of it is known and understood by the people, justifies us, I think, in asking for a limitation of time in its discussion. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting general debate.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, there were—ayes 90, noes 11.

Mr. CRAIN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion that the committee rise does not require a quorum. The ayes have it. The committee agrees to rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCCREARY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8665) to create boards of arbitration for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations and other common carriers engaged in interstate and Territorial transportation of property or passengers and their employés, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of House bill No. 8665; and pending that motion I move that all general debate in Committee of the Whole on this bill be limited. What reasonable time do gentlemen who oppose the bill ask? Will thirty minutes be enough?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to occupy ten minutes.

Mr. CRAIN. I think an hour will be sufficient.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Then I move to limit general debate in Committee of the Whole to one hour.

The motion was agreed to.

The question recurring on the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of House bill 8665, the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. MCCREARY in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8665) to create boards of arbitration for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations and other common carriers engaged in interstate and Territorial transportation of property or passengers and their employés.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN], who, I believe, desires to control the time in opposition to the bill.

Mr. CRAIN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill, because, in my judgment, it is good for nothing. It reaches nowhere and leads nowhere. It provides for nothing of any value. It is a mere temporary make-shift, leaving all the great questions that are disturbing the labor, the transportation, and the business of the country precisely where they have been, while Congress makes a pretense of having done something.

I object to the bill upon another ground. The scheme of the bill is upon the theory that here are two parties in controversy—the workmen on the railroads and the managers of the railroads; and the framers of the bill seem to consider no one else. Like those who are contesting in strikes throughout the country, they entirely ignore the producers and the consumers.

What is wanted from Congress is a law that shall have power to take care of strikes when they occur, to take care of railroad managers when they fail to perform their duty properly; a law which, if necessary, will take control of workmen and of railroads, and run the railroads for the interest of the country. There is nothing of that kind in this bill. It is merely a proposition for arbitration by agreement. Is that good for anything? Have not the parties everywhere that power already? Does it give any additional power of arbitration by agreement to have Congress say that they may arbitrate in this way?

The measure is a mere make-shift. As the boy remarked in another case, it is simply "sweetened wind." It is of no value. It is a cheat and a fraud to the business men, the workingmen, the producers, and the consumers of the country.

I find in the measure only a single proposition which is of any value whatever; that is the provision that the President may in certain cases appoint commissioners to investigate and to make public the results of the investigation. You may thus get this one thing, publicity, which is of some value. We should have, first, investigation; we should have, next, provision for publicity throughout the country. Beyond that, we should have power to compel arbitration. Beyond that, if a railroad company fails to perform its duty properly, fails to treat its men so as to secure the performance of the duty which is owing to the public, the producers and the consumers of the country, there should be power by law to declare such a road in default; the courts should take possession of it and compel it to serve the country, the public, the producers and the consumers. There should be a further power, a power to compel the workmen to continue their services until a certain time after notice has been given.

This method of treatment would give some consideration to the producers and the consumers, some consideration to the great public which furnishes the funds out of which railroad workmen are paid, out of which the interest going to bondholders is paid. These parties who create the wage and interest fund are entitled to be considered. They are, as a rule, in cases of controversy, almost entirely ignored.

What have we seen in the strikes of this country? A few men—four or five men—sometimes a single man, throwing 5,000 men out of employment, so that a great section of country finds itself dependent upon the old methods of transportation, the new ones being practically destroyed by the operation of the strikes.

Do the workmen consider anybody but themselves? They have told us repeatedly in their evidence that they considered nobody but the workmen. When we turn the other way, to the managers of the railroads, and ask them whom they consider, they reply that they consider themselves and the men who own the property in the road. "Do you expect your old men back?" we said when we were acting under Mr. Chairman TILLMAN at Philadelphia. "Certainly," was the reply. "What force do you expect will bring them back?" The answer was, "Well, their necessities." So it is—a demand upon one side that the interests of the locality and of large sections of the country shall be paralyzed unless the managers will yield to the striking men; on the other side, a proclamation that the "necessities" of the men and of their families will be used to compel the men to come back into the service of the railroads; while the great American public, most interested of all, the farmers, manufacturers, and merchants, the producers, middlemen, and consumers, who furnish all the funds, and for whom these railroads were created, and without whom these workmen would have no employment, are left without protection. And the passage of this bill will tend to prevent the enactment of a law providing adequate protection.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I will yield now for five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this bill seeks to deal, in my opinion, with a very important matter, and yet it does it in such a delicate and weak way that, in my judgment, it can hardly be regarded as pioneering or tending in the direction that legislation should tend in reference to this matter.

The strikes that the country have witnessed for now more than a decade are of great importance. They not only disturb the commerce of the country, but paralyze to a very great extent our business interests in the country, and they are of such a nature as to put in jeopardy the peace of our people from one end of the Union to the other.

It is but a little more than ten years since, by virtue of a strike, that the executives of the several States were forced to call upon their militia, and also to call upon the Chief Magistrate of the United States to preserve public peace.

Now, sir, this bill, by reason of the very great magnitude of the interest involved, of the far-reaching importance of the subject-matter with which it deals, I undertake to say, does not contain the provisions it ought to contain, nor does it go to the extent to which it should go.

This is a serious business, and, in my judgment, deserves more consideration than is given to it in a chaffy measure like this. When these strikes are on, men are at the very point of fighting, and there is no place for mere arbitrators between the contending forces. These railroad companies on the one hand, and their employés on the other, must not be permitted in this great country to take charge of the methods to settle and work out their controversies. The settlement of these labor problems it is the duty of this legislative body to prevent, and it has competent jurisdiction to deal with the subject, and to establish and originate such courts as will be able to hear and determine all controversies between railroad managers and the employés of the railroad companies.

And, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it is entirely competent for us to proceed in this direction, and, while I shall vote for this bill, if it is the best that can be obtained, still I am decidedly of the opinion the bill itself ought to be recommitted to the Committee on Labor with instructions to prepare a measure which really, in reference to this important subject, will have some meaning and some force in it. It can not be, sir, that there is no way for this country to relieve itself of the great trouble and danger involved in these strikes which occur from time to time.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN], who, I understand, is in possession of the floor at this time, whether he would not permit the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri] to give me five minutes for the purpose of having read at the Clerk's desk an amendment which I propose to offer to the bill at the proper time, for the reason that, as it changes the provisions of the pending measure very materially, it ought to be known to those who are to engage in the discussion, and I am sure would be of advantage to the gentleman himself and others in informing them of just what amendment will be proposed.

Mr. CRAIN. I have no objection to yield to the gentleman from Kansas for the purpose.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BLOUNT having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage of bills and joint resolution of the following titles; in which concurrence was requested:

BOARD OF ARBITRATION.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session (Mr. MCCREARY in the chair).

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, at the proper time I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read for the information of the committee. As the committee will see, the amendment is designed to remedy the defects in the bill suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] and others, so as to make it somewhat more effective than it is now.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the first section by striking out all after the word "if," in line 10, to the word "then," in line 13, and insert, "either party to the controversy shall make written proposition to the other to submit their differences to arbitration, the other party shall accept the same; or in the event that it does not promptly select an arbitrator, then the President shall appoint a proper person to so act for it; but if it accepts the proposition "——

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The bill as it now reads provides that whenever—

Differences or controversies may hinder, impede, obstruct, interrupt, or affect such transportation of property or passengers, if, upon the written proposition of either party to the controversy to submit their differences to arbitration, the other party shall accept the proposition, then, and in such event, the railroad company is hereby authorized to select and appoint one person, etc.

The amendment would make it to read that—

Where differences or controversies may hinder, impede, obstruct, interrupt, or affect such transportation of property or passengers, if either party to the controversy shall make written proposition to the other to submit their differences to arbitration, the other party shall accept the same—

There is the point—and in the event it does not promptly select an arbitrator, then the President shall appoint a proper person to so act for it, etc.

Now, the trouble with the bill as it stands, in my judgment, is simply that it provides for nothing more than to-day exists. If there be a difficulty between the employés and a railroad company, and they see fit to select arbitrators, they can do it to-day without any law of Congress. My amendment proposes that if either party is desirous of arbitrating the differences, then the other party shall accede to the arbitration; and if the other party declines to appoint an arbitrator, the right is given to the President under this amendment to appoint one.

Mr. WARNER. In your amendment you provide that the other party shall accept the arbitration?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER. In what time?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Promptly.

Mr. WARNER. That is not your amendment. It is that the other party shall accept it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. It means promptly; at once. But I have no objection to making it more specific in that regard. If the amendment is adopted Congress would have enacted a law to the effect that when one party to a controversy desires arbitration, then arbitration shall be had. If the one party declines to select an arbitrator, then the President would select one and arbitration would be had.

Of course, sir, gentlemen will make the point that arbitration must be a voluntary act, and that this amendment has the nature of compulsion. Very well. Allow me to say that there is a strict and narrow interpretation of the word arbitration as a purely legal term. But it has a general and far broader meaning which is here intended, and even if the word arbitration be limited to its legal signification and narrowest sense, still, where there are such vast interests at stake as are involved by railway strikes or lockouts, affecting as they do the entire business interests of the country, I vigorously claim that Congress has the power to compel an investigation or arbitration if we see fit to call it so, and to endeavor to do something, if no more than to force an investigation and declaration of facts by a constituted body. That is the amendment I shall submit at the proper time.

I am much obliged to my friend from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] for time.

Mr. CRAIN. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask the gentleman from Missouri also to yield to me for five minutes.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Very well. I will also yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will not permit this "fraud," as the gentleman from New York called it, to be passed. It is as void of any practical utility to the public, to the laborers, the railroads, or to the officers and agents of railroads as a balloon. [Laughter.] It is a mere tub to the whale—nothing compulsory, and the only good it can possibly do anybody is to allow a few officials to have big fees as arbitrators who may be nominated, and other officers connected with such arbitration; big fees to witnesses, as they are to be paid the same as if summoned by a United States court; big fees also to marshals, who are to have their customary fees as officers of a Federal court; and the sole addition to the bill that passed in the last Congress is that there is no limit scarcely in this bill as to the expenditure of money.

Now, sir, a few weeks ago this House appointed a committee to investigate a large and severe labor strike, or lockout, in Pennsylvania, and did me the honor to appoint me chairman of the committee.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. TILLMAN. If you will give me time to answer I will.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I will give the time to answer it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Very well.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The gentleman is chairman of the committee appointed to investigate the Reading strike. When was that committee appointed?

Mr. TILLMAN. On the 9th of February, as I remember.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. When will you have your report ready?

Mr. TILLMAN. You are entirely too impetuous, like most Irishmen—I can say that, as I have Irish blood myself—and if you had waited for a little while I would have told you. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I simply anticipated you.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes; I had just commenced when you interrupted me. I was coming to it as rapidly as I could. That committee, Mr. Chairman, went to Pennsylvania and tried to do its duty. We got some valuable testimony—I may say some startling testimony—which will astonish if it does not shock the country when it shall be published. Our stenographer has completed the translation of his short-hand notes into long-hand, and the witnesses, as well as members of the committee, are revising the testimony. The committee and the stenographer are preparing the testimony and the report for publication as rapidly as they can. The whole range of American, English, and even foreign law has got to be examined before the committee can be able to make a final report and recommend anything practical and useful. But, sir, we mean business. We intend to try to report something with a view to protect the public, so it may have its mail, its expressage, its freight, and its travel without interruption, either by the employés of a railroad, its officers and agents, engaging in strikes or forcing lock-outs.

I believe I can do it if I can get enough of my colleagues to co-operate with me, and I feel confident they will do it; but if I can not I at least will report something myself, and throw the responsibility upon this House of failing to do its duty or else provide a remedy against strikes and lock-outs as regards interstate commerce. [Applause.]

I believe, sir, it can be done legally and constitutionally. If I had time and it were proper to do so, I might indicate how. But it would be out of place now except to say that we mean to provide something with a penalty, and not to have a mere tub to the whale, with no sanction of law at all for violation and disregard of what purports to be a remedy for these public wrongs.

Therefore, sir, with these few remarks I will close by asking the House to sweep this empty balloon out of the way and proceed to more substantial business. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] five minutes.

Mr. TARSNEY. While, sir, I am a member of the committee that reported this bill, I am very frank to say that the bill itself in its provisions does not reach in my humble judgment the causes of the disturbances throughout the country which have led to the introduction and report of this bill. It is true that it simply proposes a voluntary arbitration, a simple tribunal by which people in these troubles may submit their differences to arbitrators, obtain their advice, and the Congress of the United States and the people of the country may obtain better information concerning the causes which lead to these troubles than we have to-day.

To my friend from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] who addressed a remark to our honored chairman in which he said that like all Irishmen he was impetuous, let me say that our chairman is an American first and complies with all the requirements and provisions of the Constitution of the United States, and this dome which overshadows us to-day is his dome and my dome; and no matter where our second love may be is no man's business.

We are Americans, and being Americans we simply ask this, that in the administration of the laws of the land there shall be a general equality for all. Perhaps this bill may not reach the remedy; it may not be perfect; but it is a move in the right direction. If you ask me what that course is I will answer you very plainly. Equalize your laws. Press the fight that was opened in this House on yesterday if you please, and so frame your tariff laws that we shall not have a few millionaires in the country kept up at the expense of pauperized millions of people. Bring that around and let there be equality and let us go on now and simply do the best we can in order to approach the remedy that ultimately will come.

By and by I will take action on the floor of this House to more fully utter the sentiments which I have in my mind, and in which I firmly believe in regard to this question which goes to the very root of the labor trouble.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE].

Mr. STRUBLE. This bill may be but a short step, but I think it may be truly said that it is a step in the right direction. Some of the objections to the bill that have been stated in this debate have not in my judgment any great force when the facts surrounding this question are considered.

It is alleged that this legislation is too mild; that it effects nothing; that it compels nothing. I shall say briefly that I believe the mildest legislation that will accomplish beneficial results in the direction intended is better than that severer, more stringent, and more tyrannical legislation that might sooner accomplish the results sought to be obtained.

I take it the railroad companies of this country appreciate that the public thought is in the direction of more stringent railroad control. If this be true, and if they are watchful of public sentiment, as I think they are, if they are desirous of doing that which is fair for their employés, will they not and will not the employés of these companies seek to avail themselves in good faith of the advantages afforded by the provisions of a measure like this, and seek, if possible, to adjust their difficulties before going to the extent of the great harm and injury which usually result from strikes? And I will say in reply to my colleague from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] that I believe instead of these men in the employ of the companies being impelled to a fever-heat of rage on account of causes for strikes existing in their minds, if this bill passes they will wait patiently for such action as the law itself provides rather than rush inconsiderately and impatiently into a war upon the companies affording them employment. If this mild form of legislation fails to accomplish any good by reason of a refusal of either the companies or the men employed to avail themselves of its power, the Government will then be clearly justified in passing a more stringent law providing by compulsory terms means for the abatement in some measure of the evils resulting from strikes.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, it is said that there is nothing in this bill and that some other measure ought to be provided to reach the real evils connected with our labor troubles. I venture to say that, while this observation is accepted by nearly every gentleman, there is scarcely one upon this floor who has in his own mind come to any conclusion as to any measure at all upon this subject. This being the case, sir, why discard this measure? Is there nothing good in it? With the great danger that threatens the property of the country and the peace of society growing out of these strikes, is it not something that the Government of the United States should, in the midst of the excitement, appoint a board or commission to go to the scene of the troubles to investigate all the facts connected with them as far as they can, and to exert the moral influence which would attach to such action on the part of those commissioners in their advice as to some mode of settlement? Is it not possible that a commission appointed by the President of the United States may go into the disturbed district, hear the complaints on either side, and find a way to some proposition that may bring about peace? And if this be true, that part of the bill which arms the President with this moral power, which oppresses none and which may do great good, should, it seems to me, command the assent of good citizens all over this land. That is one of the propositions of the bill. The other is to induce, if possible, the submission by the parties of their troubles to arbitration.

This is an effort—it may fail, but it is an effort—to bring these labor conflicts to an amicable adjustment. It binds no one except as they may agree to it; but even the very effort to arbitrate tends to allay excitement and to bring about a spirit of peace and reason.

Aside from these matters of detail, Mr. Chairman, this is a difficult question. No man has yet had the authority over the public mind of this country that would enable him to suggest a solution that would be accepted by all parties. Then, sir, if the processes provided for in this bill shall bring about an investigation which shall supply us with better information and perhaps with some practical suggestions for the settlement of these difficulties, is not the end well worth the effort? I trust, sir, that this bill will pass. The discontent in different parts of the country is no idle matter. It belongs to us here not to take part with one side or the other in this widespread controversy. Somewhere in it there is a great principle of right, to which all will eventually bow——

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] does not propose to utilize his time, I ask to be heard in that time.

Mr. CRAIN. I do not care to furnish ammunition to the enemy. Which side is the gentleman on?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am for the bill, as you were last session. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAIN. Well, I will give you three minutes to explain your position, if that is what you want.

Mr. BUCHANAN. My position is just this. The time for debate is limited. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] refuses to use his time——

Mr. CRAIN. I will give you three minutes, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] will give you two minutes, and that will make five.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, the same sort of observations that we heard upon this floor two years ago have been repeated here to-day; some objecting to this bill because it amounts to nothing and some objecting to it because it amounts to too much. Now, I think the happy medium will be found to be about the truth. As to this bill being a cheat and a snare, in the choice language of my friend from New York [Mr. PARKER], I will simply reply that his observations are conspicuously inaccurate. [Laughter.] We do not pretend that the bill is anything more than a mere voluntary arbitration bill. Great difficulties beset us when we undertook to go farther than that, and great difficulties will beset the American Congress when it undertakes to go farther than that. Enforced arbitration, to be worth anything, means an enforced award. And an enforced award means what? It means the compelling of the party against whom the award is given to comply with its terms or else go to jail.

Suppose that a difficulty arises and an arbitration is had—an enforced arbitration. Suppose an award is given against the workmen, and they drop their tools and refuse to obey. How are you going to carry out the provisions of that award unless you attach them for contempt of court, or unless you surround them with bayonets and drive them back to their employment? When I suggested this difficulty to my friend from New York [Mr. PARKER] his reply was, "Make it a misdemeanor." But what is a misdemeanor worth unless it is followed by fine or imprisonment?

Now, those are the difficulties on which you run just so surely as you undertake to pass a bill providing for enforced arbitration; and it was those difficulties which we saw staring us in the face and which compelled us to say that we would do as we did in the last Congress—adhere to the principle of voluntary arbitration, and afford every facility for the orderly conduct of a voluntary arbitration that the power and wealth of the United States Government can afford. And I say that when the Government is engaged in thus doing all it can in its limited sphere to compose these difficulties between railroad corporations and their employés, it is engaged in a grand and noble work.

This bill goes farther than the bill of last year, as was explained by the chairman of the committee [Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri], in that it provides for the appointment of certain men by the President of the United States to investigate into the causes of these labor troubles. With all due deference to my distinguished friend from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], my opinion is that this is the better way to investigate these disturbances.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would have stated the reasons for that opinion if I had had time.

Mr. CRAIN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM].

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, I agree with what has been said as to the imperfection of this bill. I am, however, in favor of its passage, inasmuch as I believe that it is a step in the right direction. It is so especially inasmuch as it provides some means by which we can compel the attendance of witnesses and the answering of questions. This has been the great trouble in all our previous investigations. If we can accomplish this difficult thing alone, we shall have taken a long stride in the right direction. My friend from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] will bear me out in the statement that the great trouble which his committee met in discharging its duty was that in the first place there was no process by which the attendance of witnesses could be enforced, and in the next place there was no way of compelling them to answer. The result was that answers would not be given except where they were favorable to the parties testifying. When a question would go to the root of the matter and would necessitate an answer dangerous to the interests of the witness, an answer was invariably refused, and there was no remedy as there was no process for contempt.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to say one word with reference to the general system of discussing these labor bills. There is scarcely a labor bill brought up here without the free-trade element attempting to prostitute the discussion in the interest of free trade by interjecting the tariff question.

Mr. TARSNEY. Will the gentleman pardon me a moment?

Mr. BRUMM. I have no time, as I have but three minutes. If you would take more pains to investigate Wall street and the Bourbonism of Kentucky; if you would take more pains to strike at the watering of stock; if you would undertake to penetrate to the very center of trusts and monopolies in the corporations and combinations in Wall street, and your damnable whisky ring in Kentucky [applause], you would strike nearer the root of the evil. It is simply the whisky-and-water syndicate of Kentucky and Wall street that is at the bottom of all the evils under which we are suffering in this country to-day. [Applause.] Scarcely ever is a labor question presented here that you do not try to kill it, as was done when the question of making reimbursement for excessive work done under the eight-hour law was considered. Amendment after amendment was offered, similar to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, followed up by the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois and others, involving the tariff question, until you forced it over the day, as though the laboring men of this country have no right to have any special bill put through——

Mr. CARUTH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. BRUMM. As though it were thought that the laboring men have no right to special legislation, but that in all such discussions tariff propositions must be interjected for the purpose, of course, of prejudicing gentlemen on the one side or the other against the bill under consideration and thus kill it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CARUTH. I merely wanted to know whether the gentleman objected to the water of Kentucky or the whisky of Kentucky. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. Not to the water; for you have none.

Mr. CRAIN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, the debate upon this bill, so far as it has progressed, has shown, by evidence upon one side and from the bill itself, as well as by an admission from its friends of the other side, that it practically provides no remedy whatever. In substance, it is (to adopt the remark of the gentleman who sits behind me, Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey, not perhaps upon this point, but upon another)—it calls the attention of the laboring men of the country, it calls the attention of the railroad men of the country to something which it is assumed is being done by Congress; and to use his words, "it amuses them, but it does not hurt us." That is all there is of this bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that he does not think I used the words in that connection!

Mr. PARKER. No, certainly not; they were originally used in quite another connection, and the quotation from time out of mind has been used in other connection, but I suggest the application of it as quite proper to this bill. It indicates what the bill amounts to; it amuses parties interested. It announces that we have enacted some legislation upon this important subject; that we have made some effort, done something, so that when something of consequence is hereafter sought to be done members may be able to point to this achievement and say, "Here is what Congress has to respond to your demand."

No one claimed that there is anything in the bill of value, except that it provides publicity. What publicity have we? Why, the publicity of the commission appointed by the President to act with the Commissioner of Labor and ascertain the facts, tell their story, and when that is done the commission is dissolved and their service is at an end. Why, Mr. Chairman, before that report is filed we will have received it through the great newspapers of the country, which would give all of the facts, which would be read at every breakfast table in the United States long before this commission would be organized or even appointed by the President.

We trust to the press of the country for our information, for our facts, for this publicity that has been suggested here; and this commission, if appointed, would do nothing of much value in that respect. But my amiable and excellent friend, for I have served with him in this connection, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON], proposes to give to the bill some value by fastening a rib into its boneless body. He thinks he can thereby make something that will be of some service, that will give strength and solidity to the structure.

But I tell him that he can not attach a rib to a body where there is no spinal column in which to fix it. [Laughter.] The trouble is that there is no backbone here. There is no stamina here, no vitality whatever. It provides for nothing under the sun. It helps nobody. It protects nobody, but seeks to attract attention for the hour from the workingmen asking for protection from the great corporations responsible for railroad management who want to have a strike stopped, and at the same time ignores the great public producers and consumers of the country and throws out this flag to attract attention, while Congress passes on and does nothing of value.

Mr. Chairman, what value would such an enactment as this be under the circumstances which occurred in the great Southwestern railroad strike of 1886, when one man as a matter of spite, and because he failed personally to receive the treatment that he assumed his official position should secure to him, a man who did not have prominence enough in his business to reach the position of foreman, yet this man, Martin Irons, by one word on his part succeeded in throwing five thousand men directly out of employment, and in the end indirectly one hundred thousand out of their work, paralyzing the transportation of four or five great States. What would be the effect of such legislation as this upon a case like that? Of what practical value would it be? What could it accomplish?

Yet these men say it would be of value. How? The President is to select under section 6 two special commissioners, and with the Commissioner of Labor they are to examine into the controversy, report upon the best means of adjustment, and then the powers of the special commission shall cease. What then? Why exactly the same condition of things would continue as existed before. The contest between the contending parties would go on and the great public would remain unprotected by law. The commissioners or the arbitrators would be absolutely powerless, communities would be powerless, transportation would be at a standstill, and the great silent public, not recognized or considered by this bill, would have no relief whatever, but would have to suffer as before.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FARQUHAR. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PARKER. My time has expired.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The gentleman seems to magnify and emphasize the work of Martin Irons. Now, I know the gentleman went into that investigation; and I would like to know whether Martin Irons did not voice the vote and expression of first his local assembly and then the district assembly? He says that one man did this. I take issue with him upon that, and ask if it is not true that he voiced both his local assembly and the district assembly; and in justice to those who put him in that position that fact ought to be proclaimed. I know the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield more time to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. CRAIN. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has three minutes.

Mr. CRAIN. I can not yield him any of that.

Mr. PARKER. Then I shall have to say to my friend from New York that I will answer him later on.

[Mr. CRAIN withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has six minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. I fully agree with the gentleman from Texas in this, that the bill recommended by the President and providing for a board of permanent arbitration would be preferable to this. While I would favor a bill of that kind, and have introduced in this Congress and in the last Congress a bill of that kind, yet I see in this bill much that is desirable, and if we can not get a whole loaf I am willing to take a half.

This bill offers something in the direction of arbitration which may be very useful and very effective. But it seems to me gentlemen very frequently lose much valuable legislation by contending for the best that could be obtained under favorable circumstances. We should rather seek what is obtainable, being willing to give up our notions in order to get something in the direction we desire.

I believe this bill will be of great use. We ought to do everything in our power to bring about an arbitration of the many difficulties, the many strikes that are occurring through the country.

I need only call the attention of gentlemen to the strike now in progress in the Northwest, of the locomotive engineers, beginning with the Burlington road, not yet solved. That strike at one time threatened to involve every road in the United States, and if not settled by some amicable arrangement before long it may affect all the transportation companies of the country. There could no greater calamity befall the people of the United States than the stoppage of all the railroads of the country, and yet that danger has been imminent in the last three or four weeks, and for a time every day, or at least on several days, we expected to read in the morning papers that transportation on every railroad of the United States had stopped at the decree of an organization of skilled labor.

I think Congress therefore ought to use every effort in its power to find some means of settling some responsibility for these strikes if we can not settle them ourselves. This bill does that, and may result in great good to the country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. When the arbitration bill was presented in the last Congress and submitted to the Committee on Labor it embodied several sections that did carry with them some elements of force; and the only change between the bill as presented and the bill as reported from the Committee on Labor was the striking out by the committee of every section in the bill that savored of anything but absolute voluntary arbitration. The labors referred to by the gentleman from Texas in connection with that bill simply consisted in striking out the sections which the committee desired to strike out. The balance was reported to the House.

We have but a short time in which to consider this bill and other measures reported from the Committee on Labor. This is the unanimous report of the committee. The last bill unanimously passed the Senate. This is the best we can offer. I appeal to the friends of labor to let us take up and pass these bills.

Let us take up this bill section by section, one after another, and perfect it and pass it. Let the enemies of labor legislation do the talking. I ask that the Clerk now read the first section.

The Clerk, reading the bill by sections, read as follows:

That whenever differences or controversies arise between railroad companies engaged in the transportation of property or passengers between two or more States of the United States, between a Territory and State, within the Territories of the United States, or within the District of Columbia, and the employés of said railroad companies, which differences or controversies may hinder, impede, obstruct, interrupt, or affect such transportation of property or passengers, if, upon the written proposition of either party to the controversy to submit their differences to arbitration, the other party shall accept the proposition, then and in such event the railroad company is hereby authorized to select and appoint one person, and such employé or employés, as the case may be, to select and appoint another person, and the two persons thus selected and appointed to select a third person, all three of whom shall be citizens of the United States, and wholly impartial and disinterested in respect to such differences or controversies; and the three persons thus selected and appointed shall be, and they are hereby, created and constituted a board of arbitration, with the duties, powers, and privileges hereinafter set forth.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I assure my friend from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] that I am a friend of this bill, and do not intend to occupy time in discussing it, but a remark dropped from the lips of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] which I can not allow to go unchallenged in this place. In discussing this matter he said, if I caught his language correctly, that the way to avoid strikes was——

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Will the gentleman pardon me a moment? I appeal to him not to inflict the tariff discussion upon this bill. [Laughter.] I was very sorry indeed that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] introduced it.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I shall have to say my own words in my own way, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] insisted that the way to avoid these strikes was to adopt the measure which was under discussion here yesterday. Mr. Chairman, that policy and the purpose to which that measure tends have been in existence in England for many years, and are there no millionaires there? Are there no strikes there? Are there no pauperized masses there? Was the gentleman happy in his selection of a tariff idea in this connection?

Mr. Chairman, but a single other word. The Irishman has for hundreds of years professed hatred to England in his heart, yet has fought her battles all over the world, in India, in Africa, in Egypt, in Europe, in America, everywhere; and now too many of them appear to fight her battles at the ballot-box of America, seduced by the word "Democracy," and appear in the Congress of the United States to break down American interests and uphold English interests. Ireland has free trade. How does she like it? Are poverty and riches equalized there? Let the gentleman learn the first principles of political economy before he lectures us here on the subject. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I regret exceedingly, sir, that anything which I may have said in my brief remarks should have opened up the tariff discussion here. I said then, and I repeat now, that it is within the cold lines of laws enacted during the last twenty-five years by such gentlemen as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] that are to be found the causes which have produced the very labor difficulties under which we are suffering to-day. It is not an equality of law, it is not an equality of individuals, but it is such legislation, whether it be through your tariff or by your railroad grants, if you please, that has brought about this condition of things. The real causes are too numerous to mention and too great to discuss here and now. But I want to say to my friend that the causes are underlying this thing and that they will be heard of.

Now, sir [addressing Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR], when you say that there are too many Irishmen upon the floor of this House to-day, representing districts in Congress, let me say to you, sir, that the time has been in the history of this country when you, skulking behind your tents, were glad to call upon the Irish race to redeem the country in which you lived. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him?

Mr. TARSNEY. I can not yield.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Allow me to say that the gentleman misrepresents my statement entirely.

Mr. TARSNEY. I can not yield.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I did not say that there were too many Irishmen here. I should not care if there were four times more. What I said was——

Mr. TARSNEY. I do not yield. I, sir, was born within the limits of the State of Michigan. I am an American, and I stand here under the American flag, an American first and always; but wherever my kinsmen live I have a right to go, and to stand up to protect a fallen and downtrodden race, oppressed by such gentlemen as you, sir, in the character of English landlords. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. A single word, Mr. Chairman. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise. My purpose is to limit debate.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Oh, no. After letting the gentleman from Michigan have his say, you can not cut off the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] in that way.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I tell you, gentlemen, you can not inject all these outside questions into this bill. [Laughter.] I have got tired of it. You have weeks and weeks for your tariff question, and you have no right to inject it into this bill.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. If I can be heard for a moment on a motion to strike out the last word, I am content; otherwise I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I insist that the Chair confine members to a discussion of the bill under consideration.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I take the floor, then, as a matter of privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] is recognized.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The gentleman from Michigan misunderstood, I hope—he misstated, I am certain—what I said. I made no sort of allusion of the kind he suggests. I did not say that there are "too many Irishmen in the country." I have from my youth welcomed them here, and shall continue to do so. I did not say there were too many in the House. I never thought of making any such statement as that. I said there were too many of them here who were seduced by a word and were found fighting the battles of England against the interests of this country. That is all I said; and I repeat it. There is no use of any man misapprehending or misstating it. Having said this, I have said all I care to say.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the end of the first section the following:

"And in the event that either party to such a controversy shall refuse to accept an aforesaid proposition for arbitration, then the President shall, upon the request of either party, immediately appoint three persons to investigate the said controversy, who, as a board of investigation, shall have all the powers and benefits hereinafter given to a board of arbitration."

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, this amendment differs in some respects from the one I had read during the general debate. The proposition I first submitted used the term "arbitration;" but there are so many legal gentlemen in the House, who properly, as a matter of exact law, regard arbitration as being purely a voluntary procedure that I do not wish to weight down the purpose I have in view by that objection. Hence, this amendment provides that in the event of either party refusing to arbitrate, then, upon the request of one of the parties, the President shall appoint three persons to investigate the controversy; and this board of investigation is to have all the powers and privileges given to the board of arbitration in the next section. I think there can be no objection to this proposition, as it is conceded on all sides that Congress may provide for an investigation of such controversies, whether the parties thereto are or are not willing to arbitrate.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. If the gentleman will read the sixth section, he will find it covers that question very fully.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I do not so understand it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Certainly it does. It provides very distinctly that the President may appoint two arbitrators, who, with the Commissioner of Labor, shall constitute a board of arbitration.

Mr. PETERS. But it does not provide that it "shall" be done upon the request of either of the parties.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. It does, most assuredly. The language is, "upon the application of one of the parties to the controversy." I refer gentlemen to the fifteenth line of section 6.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes; but in line 1, of section 6, it is provided that "the President 'may' select two special arbitrators," etc.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Well?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The appointment of the arbitrators is purely optional with the President.

Mr. PETERS. It is entirely in his discretion.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. My amendment requires that the President when called upon "shall" appoint a board of investigation, and shall do so at once. This, as I understand, is the difference between the two propositions.

I will say, however, that I have not had an opportunity to read the bill through; and if the point which the gentleman from Missouri makes is correct—if section 6 fully covers this matter—then I have no desire to press the amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. It covers it fully, I think.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to know absolutely; I do not want any "thinking" about it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. You have my statement. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I withdraw my motion for the present, until we reach section 6.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the sixth section covers the point which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] desires to meet. One of the main objects to be accomplished by this bill is to throw upon these controversies between the railroad companies and railroad employés the light of investigation, not only because thus the laborer who works for a railroad corporation may have before him in plain language the causes of the difference between the employer and the employé, but also because there is a desire on the part of that third party, the public, that they may have some knowledge as to the differences arising between the railroad companies and their employés.

The sixth section of the bill does provide that the President may order an investigation of this kind; but if there is any meaning in the English language the appointment of the committee of investigation is by that section left entirely to the President's discretion. It says he "may" do so either upon his own motion or upon the application of either party. Whether such a board shall be appointed is left to the discretion of the President, and to his discretion alone.

Now, the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas proposes that in reference to all these controversies there "shall" be appointed, upon the application of either party, a committee for the purpose of investigating the difficulties which may exist between the railroad company and its operatives. That is just what we want; that is just what the laboring men want; it is just what the people of the United States want. They want to do away with these schemes which propose to make enemies of labor and capital. In this country labor and capital are and should be brothers. The great danger is that they may be estranged by associations of demagogues on the one hand and fanatics on the other. What we want is to have more light on this question and a more intimate relation, more brotherly love between capital and labor; so that whenever a corporation says that it will not do something which the interests of its employés seem to demand, there may be thrown upon that question the light of investigation, that the laboring man and the country may know whether there is ground for the position taken by the corporation in antagonism to the demands of its employés.

And, on the other hand, when labor complains of wrong done to it, let the light of investigation be thrown on the matter complained of and let it be determined whether labor is right in demanding what it does. And, sir, when we have this harmonious action between labor and capital, this just understanding between them, we will put an end to the contests and difficulties which have brought about these strikes throughout our country.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I renew the amendment, having read the bill through. And in addition to what my colleague [Mr. PETERS] has just said, let me direct the attention of the committee to the fact that there is a very important difference between the bill and the amendment to it which I have proposed. The bill provides in the sixth section that the President "may" appoint a board of arbitration on the application of one of the parties to the controversy, while the amendment proposes that on the application of either party he "shall" appoint a board of investigation.

That is one point of difference. And the next point is this: The officials to be appointed by the President under the sixth section of the bill are to be arbitrators. That word "arbitration" raises the legal difficulty of securing the assent of both parties, which sometimes can not be obtained, as in the Burlington case to-day. My amendment avoids this contingency by providing that where either party will not accept arbitration, then, at the request of either party, there shall be, not an arbitration, not a procedure that wholly depends upon the voluntary action of the parties in controversy, but that there shall be, whether they consent or not, an investigation in behalf of both parties in interest, as well as that great third party always in interest, the people.

And for these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I renew the amendment. It certainly can do no harm. It does not affect the bill injuriously, but on the contrary is of great benefit to it, in my judgment, by putting some force in it.

Mr. BLAND. The suggestion I desire to make to the gentleman from Kansas, is this. I understand the bill merely provides that where the request is made by either party to the President he shall make this appointment.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAND. But where there is no request, I do not think it should be obligatory on the President to direct any investigation. In my judgment the action of the President in such an event should be left discretionary with him.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. It is so under my bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Yes, it is, as the gentleman will see by referring to the language of the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The bill proposes "arbitration" when the request is made by either one of the parties to the controversy. My amendment, on the contrary, proposes that in the event of either party refusing arbitration then either one of the parties may request and secure an "investigation" of the points in controversy.

Mr. BLAND. That is not the way I understand the gentleman's amendment; but on the contrary that the President shall appoint without regard to the request of either party. I do not think that that is a good amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That is the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas. He wants to change "may" to "shall," and I agree with my colleague that it is not a good amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No, I do not wish to make any such change, and you are referring to the language of the bill in the sixth section. My amendment is to the first section.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That is the meaning of your amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No, it is not. On the contrary, it provides that in the event of either party requesting the President to appoint a board of investigation he shall immediately do so, and there shall be, not an arbitration, but an investigation.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. If you will pardon me, my bill covers that fully.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No, sir. The gentleman's bill provides only for arbitration.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Wait a moment.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The bill provides for arbitration. My amendment provides for investigation.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Wait a moment. I will read the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. What part of the bill?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Section 6, page 5. It is provided in that section:

> That the President may select two special arbitrators, one of whom at least shall be a resident of the State or Territory in which the controversy arises, who, together with the Commissioner of Labor, shall constitute a temporary board for the purpose of examining the causes of the controversy——

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Hold up there. It says:

> A temporary board of arbitration.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Never mind the word.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes; but that word is the important thing.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I am trying to get at the difference between your amendment and the bill. The bill goes on to provide further that these—> together with the Commissioner of Labor, shall constitute a temporary board of arbitration for the purpose of examining the causes of the controversy, the conditions accompanying, and the best means for adjusting it.

If the gentleman can suggest words in the English language which will better cover this point, I will use them. In my judgment the language of the bill covers the matter fully.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No, it does not, I think.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let me call the attention of my friend to the eighth section of the bill, which provides:

> That upon the direction of the President, as hereinbefore provided, the board of arbitration shall visit the locality of the pending dispute——

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. What page are you reading from?

Mr. SPRINGER. Page 6, section 8:

> That upon the direction of the President, as hereinbefore provided, the board of arbitration shall visit the locality of the pending dispute, make careful inquiry into the cause thereof, hear all persons interested therein who may come before it, advise the respective parties what, if anything, ought to be done or submitted to by either or both to adjust such dispute, and make a written decision thereof.

It seems to me that this bill provides everything the gentleman desires to accomplish except this, that in his proposition it may be incumbent upon the President to order an investigation whether anybody wants it or not.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Oh, no; if one side refuses the application of the other for arbitration, then the President may do it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Exactly; the exception is where one of the parties to the controversy may want it. But the President may be of opinion and his information from the Commissioner of Labor or the commission may be of such a character as to warrant him in the belief that there was no necessity for such an investigation, and yet your amendment would make it incumbent upon him under any circumstances to order it. I think it is safe to leave it as it is.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The bill seems to be sufficient in that respect.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Well, let us have a vote.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I am ready for a vote.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Clearly, in reading this bill, it is seen that such an amendment as that suggested by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] is necessary if the bill is to accomplish the purpose sought. I am for the bill, and willing to support it through and through; yet I would like to support it, and would support it all the more earnestly, if it provided means to make it effective to accomplish the purpose for which it was drawn. I think, therefore, that this amendment, or some other similar to it, is necessary. Suppose, for instance, that this Burlington road strike, which is now in progress, was in existence under the operations of this bill, and that this amendment or something similar to it was the law; suppose the workingmen on this road made an application under color of the bill for a board of arbitration—what then? The railroad company, in the absence of such a provision as this, would sit silent even if the notice was served upon them, and would not agree or appoint a member to act for them in the arbitration. What would be the result? The bill as it stands without such an amendment would be an absolute nullity. It would have no effect in bringing these parties to terms. For this reason the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas, if adopted, would effectually settle such a question as that, and in the event of a failure, either of the road or the men to select an arbitrator the President can come in with his commission, appoint one immediately, and bring the parties to terms and have the controversy determined one way or the other. Without that there would be no safety, and no certainty of bringing these fights to a termination.

Now, in speaking of strikes, necessarily we have to investigate them and reflect upon what brings them about, what is the cause of them, and what the remedy. Some of our members are attempting to make it appear that the workingmen are in fault. The case of Martin Irons was cited as an illustration of that idea. But, Mr. Chairman, Martin Irons simply represented the great body of the Knights of Labor in the West, acting under Powderly, and when he gave the order for them to quit work he was simply voicing the sentiment of the whole association of which he was an active member.

Mr. BRUMM. I think the gentleman is in error in saying that Irons acted under Powderly.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. But notwithstanding what gentlemen may say, these strikes are brought about in nine cases out of ten by the capitalists themselves—by oppressors of labor. We can all go back to the year 1873, when the great panic afflicted the country, and it will be seen that from 1873 to 1877 there was a constant and a continual reduction of wages, not only the wages of railroad employés, but of those engaged in private enterprises. Every few months employés were served with notices of 10 per cent. reduction in wages; and they had to submit. And while for one I deprecate strikes and am not in favor of them, yet I can assure the House and the people of this country of the fact that but for the great strike of 1877 the working people of this country would be a great deal worse off than they are to-day.

Mr. BRUMM. Let me interrupt the gentleman to ask if he is not mistaken when he says that Martin Irons acted under the direction of Mr. Powderly?

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. No, I think not.

Mr. BRUMM. I do not think Mr. Powderly directed the strike in that sense.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Mr. Powderly went back on him; that is all.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move that the committee rise now for the purpose of limiting this debate.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I want five minutes more.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Why, you have already had fifteen minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I know it, and I propose to have more; and I am just as anxious to perfect and pass this bill as the gentleman is himself; but I want five minutes more.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Very well; I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. All I want to say is merely this, and I ask the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] also. This eighth section to which he has referred simply provides that the special board of arbitration "may" make an inquiry; but the section to which my amendment applies is the first section, where an original, not this special, board of arbitration is provided, and the amendment gives to the board of investigation the same power that is given to the board of arbitration by the bill. The original board of arbitration contemplated in the first section has the power to administer oaths and to make a judicial examination, while the special board has no such powers; and for this reason the gentleman will see that amendment makes a very great difference between these special arbitrators provided in the sixth and the following sections to be appointed by the President, with only the power of inquiry on the one side, and on the other a board of investigation under the first section, which either party may cause to be appointed. There is a vital difference.

The gentleman from Illinois also made the point that this amendment would be compulsory upon the President, and intimated that there might be cases where that compulsion ought not to be exercised, or rather where it would not be expedient to have an investigation. But I want to call his attention to the fact that such cases would be covered by line 9 of the first section:

Which differences or controversies may hinder, impede, obstruct, interrupt, or affect such transportation of property or passengers.

Now, it could only be when there was some serious interruption, some obstruction that was really detrimental, and that vitally affected the commerce of the country generally, that the President would be required to act.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Let us have a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

The question being taken, the Chairman stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I call for a division.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 28, noes 59.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read section 2 of the bill.

Mr. FORAN. I move to strike out the last word.

During the Forty-ninth Congress there was a measure before this House proposing arbitration somewhat of this character. I opposed that measure as I oppose this measure. I think the enactment of this bill into a law would simply place on the statute-books of the United States a legislative eunuch. There is no necessity for it. It accomplishes nothing that can not be accomplished now. It will benefit neither the employer nor the employé. It will be as useless as it will be powerless to either settle or solve labor difficulties. Its enactment will be a confession that intelligent American workingmen and employers of labor are unable to or incapable of managing their own affairs, and that the time has come when their interests and rights must be confided to the care of the Government as trustee.

The greatest and most perfect piece of arbitration legislation ever enacted is known as the Mundella law in England. It is as perfect as this character of legislation can be, and yet it is never resorted to; it is never invoked by the employers or employés.

Mr. SPRINGER. Why not?

Mr. FORAN. Because it was found to be inoperative; because experience has demonstrated that you can not have arbitration unless you have a concurrence of opinion. Unless the men and employers are willing to come together and arbitrate their differences you can have no arbitration, and when they are willing to come together they can do so without having a law providing for arbitration.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is there a compulsory provision in that law?

Mr. FORAN. There is not; and I would sooner shoulder a musket, if I were a workingman, than be placed under the operations of a law providing for compulsory arbitration, which places the rights, property, and liberties of citizens in the discretion of United States courts. Shall not an employer make a contract with his employé, or the employé with his employer, without a United States court interfering? I think gentlemen, if they stop to consider this matter, will never consent to vote for a bill providing for compulsory arbitration in labor difficulties.

A MEMBER. This does not provide any compulsion.

Mr. FORAN. I know it does not. It does not do anything. It is said that it provides for an investigation. Whenever there is a labor difficulty the newspapers investigate it, and you have all the light you could possibly get from your board of arbitration.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY], who interjected into this debate a little free-trade nonsense——

Mr. TARSNEY. Not free trade; fair trade.

Mr. FORAN. If the gentleman is a free-trader he is not consistent, because the motto and the shibboleth of free trade is "Laissez faire, laissez passer"—let it alone; it will take care of itself. Let the workingman and the capitalists of this country alone and they will work out their own salvation. That is your doctrine as to commerce. If it applies to trade it also applies to industrial avocations and to everything else. I am not gainsaying the proposition at this time, but I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that he is not consistent.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who was chairman of the special committee that investigated the Reading Railway difficulty, speaks of enacting some law creating a penalty in cases of the kind his committee investigated. I can almost imagine I hear the rattle of Gatling guns in the streets of the cities of the North or in the streets of the cities of the South where large manufacturing establishments have sprung up. I trust in God that that time will never come. I believe that these difficulties can be worked out in the evolving process of our civilization. Civilization flows and ebbs, and every time the wave rises it rises higher than the preceding wave and leaves a higher mark on the walls of time. And the time is coming when an enlightened public opinion, a consensus of public opinion brought about by your telegraphs and newspapers, will create such a condition of things in this country that capital will be fair to labor and labor will be fair to capital. That is the only way in which these difficulties can be settled.

Keep away your legislative enactments. By them you only trammel the relations of employer and employed. You accomplish no good; you never did and never will. The labor trouble can not be solved by legislative enactment. I propose to vote against the bill, and believe every member of this House who gives it due consideration will do so. I am not one of those who believe our institutions and liberties are in danger because great strikes frequently occur. I admit strikes are a great evil, but good frequently comes from the absorption of evil. Both workingmen and employers purchase experience by strikes. The purchase may be costly, but it is none the less beneficial in preventing like troubles thereafter.

Mr. PARKER. When gentlemen like my friend from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WHITE] make Martin Irons the exponent of the Knights of Labor they do a greater wrong to the Knights of Labor than any of their enemies in the country could well have the power to do. It is an act of injustice and of unkindness. The gentleman from New York asks my attention to the authority of Martin Irons for making the great Southwestern strike.

I intimated that the authority for making that strike was exercised by himself upon his own judgment. I may premise by saying that, as I understand it, the representatives of local assemblies then at Marshall, Tex., gave to Martin Irons, without consulting their assemblies, which were far distant, authority to strike if he judged it proper. Therefore I say the authority was placed in him, and the answers which he gave to certain questions in the investigation will show that I am correct.

I read from the record:

Q. Did you order or did you not?
A. After the discharge of Hall, yes, sir.
Q. Then, so far as we can see, the discharge of Hall was the ground for the strike, was it not?
A. Not at all, sir.
Q. Were you not authorized to order a strike upon the discharge of Hall?
A. Taken in consideration with the others.
Q. But were you not authorized to order a strike upon the discharge of Hall?
A.—

And here is the kernel of it—

I was, if I saw proper.

There, sir, is the authority of Martin Irons. There was placed in the hands of that one reckless man authority to throw out of employment all the railroad employés of the Southwestern system, and he exercised that power by giving the order to strike upon a mere caprice and a personal antagonism arising between himself and the officers of the railroad company whom he met. This rash and desperate act, never approved by Mr. Powderly, never approved by the national assembly, never approved by any body of men who had coolly and calmly considered it, was the act of one man in the heat of excitement, who had been unfortunately authorized to do as he thought proper. And what was the result? Within five days after he was examined in St. Louis and the position he had taken was exhibited to the public, and the men saw how they had been thrown out to their injury and to the injury and starvation of their families, this man was forced to leave the town of his residence under cover of the night.

He was the man that threw that great body of workingmen out of employment, and yet he is the man that is put forward here (most unjustly) as the representative of the Knights of Labor. I wish to say, sir, that I believe that the Knights of Labor have done great good in this country. They have called the attention of the workingmen to the importance of frugality and especially to the importance of temperance. They have thrown their great influence in favor of giving woman equal pay for equal work. They have recognized the equality of the colored laborers of the South. The benefits they have conferred upon their fellows will be lasting and permanent, and I believe we owe much of this to the conservative influence of Mr. Powderly; but Martin Irons should never be put forward as a representative of this great body of workingmen. And the rights of the producers and the consumers must be recognized and protected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of said board of arbitration, immediately upon their selection, to organize at the nearest practicable point to the place of the origin of the difficulty or controversy, and to hear and determine the matters of difference which may be submitted to them in writing by all the parties, giving them full opportunity to be heard on oath, in person and by witnesses, and also granting them the right to be represented by counsel; and after concluding its investigation said board shall publicly announce its award, which, with the findings of fact upon which it is based, shall be reduced to writing and signed by the arbitrators concurring therein, and, together with the testimony taken in the case, shall be filed with the Commissioner of Labor of the United States, who shall make such award public as soon as the same shall have been received by him.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Labor that the word "award," in the tenth line of section 3, and also in the fourteenth line of the same section, carries with it a meaning beyond the scope of the section itself, and I suggest that it would be well to substitute for it the word "decision," which I think will better express the real intention.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I have no objection to that. I move that the amendment be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That each member of said tribunal of arbitration shall receive a compensation of $10 a day for the time actually employed. That the clerk appointed by said tribunal of arbitration shall receive the same fees and compensation as clerks of United States circuit courts and district courts receive for like services. That the stenographer shall receive as full compensation for his services 20 cents for each folio of an hundred words of testimony taken and reduced to writing before said arbitrators. That United States marshals or other persons serving the process of said tribunal of arbitration shall receive the same fees and compensation for such services as they would receive for like services upon process issued by United States commissioners. That witnesses attending before said tribunal of arbitration shall receive the same fees as witnesses attending before United States commissioners. That all of said fees and compensation shall be payable by the United States in like manner as fees and compensation are payable in criminal causes under existing laws: Provided, That the said tribunal of arbitration shall have power to limit the number of witnesses in each case where fees shall be paid by the United States: And provided further, That the fees and compensation of the arbitrators, clerks, stenographers, marshals, and others for service of process, and witnesses under this act shall be examined and certified by the United States district judge of the district in which the arbitration is held before they are presented to the accounting officers of the Treasury Department for settlement, and shall then be subject to the provisions of section 846 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and a sufficient sum of money to pay all expenses under this act and to carry the same into effect is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to come in at the end of line 33.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After line 33, add:

"And provided likewise that not more than $5,000 shall be expended in defraying the cost of any single arbitration."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask the adoption of that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri if in his judgment 20 cents per folio is not a very large and excessive compensation for the stenographer?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I thought it was the customary rate.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to amend in line 7 by striking out "20" before the word cents and inserting "10."

The amendment was agreed to.

[Mr. CRAIN withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call particular attention to section 6, which is in these words:

SEC. 6. That the President may select two special arbitrators, one of whom at least shall be a resident of the State or Territory in which the controversy arises, who, together with the Commissioner of Labor, shall constitute a temporary board of arbitration for the purpose of examining the causes of the controversy, the conditions accompanying, and the best means for adjusting it; the result of which examination shall be immediately reported to the President and Congress, and on the rendering of such report the services of the two special arbitrators shall cease. The services of the board of arbitration, to be ordered at the time by the President and constituted as herein provided, may be tendered by the President for the purpose of settling a controversy such as contemplated, either upon his own motion or upon the application of one of the parties to the controversy, or upon the application of the executive of a State.

To my mind, this is the best section in the bill. I think it would be well, however, to amend it; and I will move an amendment at the proper time to strike out the words "arbitrators" and "arbitration" wherever they occur and insert the words "commissioners" and "commission." It is agreed upon all hands that we can not constitute a board of arbitration which shall make a finding that will bind the parties. Hence all that we can do by this bill is to let the Commissioner of Labor, with the two commissioners who may be specially appointed by the President, investigate under authority of law, touching any difficulties which may arise between employers and employés concerning interstate commerce.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Investigate the causes, without suggesting a remedy.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly—investigate and make a finding of fact. That is what the section provides for.

Mr. FARQUHAR. An official investigation.

Mr. CANNON. Then let the result be reported; and my belief is that in some cases—perhaps in many cases, if not all—after an investigation has been made by men trained touching these questions, and after the result has been announced, public opinion will be such that upon the one hand the railway companies, and on the other hand the railroad employés, would acquiesce in the finding. If this bill accomplishes anything at all, it will accomplish that. It can accomplish nothing else. The board which may be appointed can not make a compulsory award, and I do not believe the sixth section contemplates that they should; but I think it best that the words "commission" and "commissioners" should be substituted for "arbitration" and "arbitrators," and the word "decision" inserted in lieu of the word "award."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The meaning is practically the same.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think that the word "arbitration" as used here, and which has been the foundation of very much that has been said by my friend from Texas [Mr. CRAIN], has been misunderstood. In order to ascertain the real purpose you must read not only this section, but section 8:

SEC. 8. That upon the direction of the President, as hereinbefore provided, the board of arbitration shall visit the locality of the pending dispute, make careful inquiry into the cause thereof, hear all persons interested therein who may come before it, advise the respective parties what, if anything, ought to be done or submitted to by either or both to adjust such dispute, and make a written decision thereof. This decision shall at once be made public, shall be recorded upon proper books of record to be kept in the office of the Commissioner of Labor, who shall cause a copy thereof to be filed with the secretary of the State or Territory, or States or Territories, in which the controversy exists.

Now, it seems to me, as has been stated by my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], that this provision for investigation is the very best portion of the bill. When trouble arises in a State between a railroad company and its employés it may reach a point where the governor himself may invite this investigation, or the President himself may see fit to order it. The condition of one or the other of the parties may be such that they will desire to invite this commission, or whatever else you may designate it, to go into that State for the purpose of inquiring into all the facts, getting intelligent information, and reaching a conclusion. And I trust our experience will be that this work of inquiry will be done by men whose character shall have such moral power that when the conclusion is announced it will of itself operate to produce a settlement of the dispute.

Of course the decision will not be binding upon anybody, and nothing may come of it; but if the action of the President in the appointment of this commission, if the action of the commission in its investigation, if the thoroughness of the inquiry and the correctness of the conclusions reached may operate to quiet the disorders of the times, is not the measure well worth consideration? It is easy for us to talk glibly here; but when a community is excited, when disorders appear on every hand, when threats of force are resorted to, when property is being destroyed, may not the moral power of this commission have good influence, and is it not worth while to try a resort to such measures?

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana, obtained the floor.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will yield a moment, I will now offer my amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I do not see any reason for objecting to the word "commissioners;" I am willing, so far as I am concerned, that the word be inserted at the appropriate places in the section.

Mr. CANNON. Then I offer my amendment in this form:

Strike out the word "arbitrators," in lines 1 and 2 of section 6, and insert the word "commissioners."

In line 5, strike out "arbitration" and insert "commission."

In line 10, strike out "arbitrators" and insert "commissioners."

In lines 10 and 11, strike out the words "board of arbitration" and insert "commission."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. There is no objection to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, this section of the bill is, to my mind, the most important one in it. The purpose of the section and the appointment of these commissioners, which is the proper name to give them, rather than that of arbitrators, will accomplish great good. I am only sorry the commissioners can not sit permanently. If they had existed previous to the Burlington strike I warrant you there would have been no strike on that road, for the purpose of these commissioners, if appointed, is to examine into the causes of the controversies and the conditions accompanying them, as well as the best means for adjusting them.

What is the best method for adjusting those strikes and troubles? It is to arrive at a thorough knowledge of their causes, which are not very far to find. The cause of that great strike on the Burlington road was a trifling matter, and had these commissioners been in existence at that time there is not a question but that the influence they would have brought to bear on both parties would have averted that strike.

What was it that caused that strike? The great strike on the Burlington road was brought about simply because that road was acting arbitrarily with its employés. It was introducing a system which was foreign to this country. It was introducing amongst its employés a division of its workmen into classes, into first, second, and third classes of employés who were engaged in the same kind of labor. That is what the engineers on the Burlington road rebelled against. That is what they tried to have abandoned, but the road persisted in continuing that condition of affairs. They insisted upon continuing that system of division into classes on the part of its employés which the road had imported from Europe. It is one of the very worst anarchical institutions which could have been imported from abroad. I hope it will be abandoned not only on that road, but on every other road.

Suppose the same system of division into classes were adopted throughout our society? Suppose our people should everywhere be divided in that manner? Then our soldiers in the Army would be divided into first, second, and third classes, when in the ranks they all stand together.

The Brotherhood of Engineers insisted they should all be paid equally for the same kind of work. That is what the engineers demanded, as well as that the road should abandon the foreign system of division into classes. There is not a doubt in my mind, if we had had in existence the commissioners which this bill provides for there would not have been a strike on the Burlington road. We wish to avoid any such contests in the future, and we also wish to avoid the introduction into this country of the class system From the highest to the lowest, from the capitalist to the laborer, all men in this country stand upon an equality before the law, and so we wish it to continue. In Europe and in Asia, we all know, it is different, and that there is division into classes from the lord to the serf. We want no such system as that here, but we do want a method for the adjustment of controversies so as to avoid these strikes. Therefore I hope this amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will be adopted, as I believe it will improve the provisions of the bill and make them more effective.

[Mr. CRAIN withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BUCHANAN. I hope we will have a vote.

Mr. LAWLER. I was going to say that if the committee is ready to vote I shall not occupy its time. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That the special arbitrators provided in the preceding section shall be entitled to receive $10 each per day for each day's service rendered, and the expenses absolutely incurred in the performance of their duties; and the expenses of the Commissioner of Labor, acting as one of the board of arbitration, shall also be reimbursed to him. Such compensation and expenses shall be paid by the Treasurer of the United States, on proper vouchers, certified to by the Commissioner of Labor and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, in harmony with the amendment adopted to section 6, I move, in line 1, to strike out the words "special arbitrators" and insert "commission;" and in the sixth line to strike out the words "board of arbitration" and insert "commission."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That is right.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That upon the direction of the President, as hereinbefore provided, the board of arbitration shall visit the locality of the pending dispute, make careful inquiry into the cause thereof, hear all persons interested therein who may come before it, advise the respective parties what, if anything, ought to be done or submitted to by either or both to adjust such dispute, and make a written decision thereof. This decision shall at once be made public, shall be recorded upon proper books of record to be kept in the office of the Commissioner of Labor, who shall cause a copy thereof to be filed with the secretary of the State or Territory, or States or Territories, in which the controversy exists.

Mr. CANNON. I move also to strike out, in line 2 of section 8, the words "board of arbitration" and insert "commission."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 8, line 3, after the word "dispute," insert "and shall have all the powers and authority given in section 2 to a board of arbitration, and shall"——

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That simply gives the commission power to administer oaths.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. All right; I move its adoption.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No, you do not; it is my amendment, and I move its adoption. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Very well; either way.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That in each case the special arbitrators who may be selected as provided shall, before entering upon their duties, be sworn to the faithful discharge thereof. The Commissioner of Labor shall be chairman ex officio of the board of arbitration, and may appoint one or more clerks or stenographers to act in each controversy only, which clerks or stenographers shall be compensated at a rate not exceeding $6 per day each, and actual expenses incurred shall be reimbursed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. In this section I move to strike out the word "arbitrators" where it occurs and insert "commission."

Mr. PARKER. I would ask whether this does not include also the arbitrators provided for in the first section of the bill?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. No; not at all.

Mr. PARKER. This provides that in "each case the special arbitrators who may be selected," etc. It seems to me that unless the language is more specific it may include both cases.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The language used here refers to the cases before the commission.

Mr. PARKER. Very well. I simply called attention to it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That is all right. I move to strike out the words "board of arbitration" in lines 4 and 5 also.

The amendments were agreed to.

Section 10 was read, as follows:

SEC. 10. The Commissioner of Labor shall, as soon as possible after the passage of this act, establish such rules of procedure as shall be approved by the President; but the board shall permit each party to a controversy to appear in person or by counsel, and to examine and cross-examine witnesses. All its proceedings shall be transacted in public, except when in consultation for the purpose of deciding upon the evidence and arguments laid before it. The chairman of the board is hereby authorized to administer oaths to witnesses in all investigations conducted by the board, and such witnesses shall be summoned in the same manner as witnesses are summoned to appear before United States courts and commissioners, and they shall each receive the same fees as witnesses attending before United States commissioners.

Mr. SHAW. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 14 of section 14, after the word "commissioners:"

"Provided, That said temporary board of commissioners shall have power to limit the number of witnesses in each case where fees shall be paid by the United States."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I do not see any objection to that.

Mr. SHAW. It is the same provision contained in section 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move, in line 4, to strike out the word "board" and insert "commission."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. In lines 10 and 11 I offer the same amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I have not interfered with the progress of this bill nor offered any amendment to it; but I desire, before its consideration is completed, to enter upon the record my opposition to it precisely upon the ground that I opposed it when its substance was pending in the Forty-ninth Congress, namely, because I think the bill is unconstitutional. I believe that it is wholly, in so far as the relief that it is supposed to bring is concerned, and in its effects, illusory. I think it gives no remedy whatever to labor, and that it opens the door to a construction that ought not to be given. Besides, I think the commingling of executive and judicial functions in the tribunal created by it is not only unconstitutional but unwise.

I have no desire whatever to antagonize the bill so as to retard its progress, or delay its consideration or passage; but I do desire to put on record the fact that the opposition I had to this bill in the Forty-ninth Congress has not only not been removed, but has been strengthened by the events of the last two years.

This is not only not a remedy, but it stands in the way of true remedies. It is an attempt by legislation to do what ought not to be done, and to that extent prevents investigation as to what is the proper remedy and the application of that proper remedy to the evils under which labor lies.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to draw the attention of the chairman to this clause in line 5 of section 10:

But the board shall permit each party to a controversy to appear in person or by counsel—

That is all right—

and to examine and cross-examine witnesses.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. What is your suggestion?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. My suggestion would be to strike out the words "and to examine and cross-examine witnesses."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Do you think those words superfluous?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Not exactly that. But I think, and I base my view on the experience I had on the Reading investigation committee, that in practice you will find this compulsory power given to counsel to examine and cross-examine witnesses would become an instrument which they would use for the purpose of delaying investigation. I know that would have been the effect in the Reading investigation. In this bill you expressly assign them that power, and they would no doubt avail themselves of it. I would suggest the striking out of those words and leaving it in the power of the commission at the time; so that if under the circumstances they thought it best to allow counsel to examine and cross-examine witnesses they might do so. If not, if they found this power only being used to delay investigation, they could prevent it. That would be the practical effect of this amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I do not see any practical objection to that amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, it was not agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to an expression in lines 8 and 9 of section 5. In connection with the work of the stenographer the expression is used "reduced to writing." The proper expression would be "transcribed."

Mr. BLOUNT. That section of the bill has been passed.

The CHAIRMAN. It requires unanimous consent to go back.

Mr. HAUGEN. I ask unanimous consent to return to that section.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. It is too late; we can not go back.

Mr. HAUGEN. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read the eleventh and concluding section, as follows:

SEC. 11. All fees, expenses, and compensation shall be paid as hereinbefore provided in section 5 of this act.

Mr. RAYNER. I ask the gentleman from Missouri what is the sense of that section, if there is any sense in it?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. It provides for paying the expenses and compensation of the commission and refers back to section 5, where that provision is made.

Mr. RAYNER. If "hereinbefore provided in section 5 of this act," why provide for it over again?

Mr. BLOUNT. But this is another commission.

Mr. WARNER. I suggest an amendment in lines 11 and 12 of section 10, where the word "summoned" occurs. It should be "subpœnaed." You do not summon a witness, you subpœna him.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That is merely the change of a word. If there be no objection, I ask the Clerk to make the change.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] moves to amend in lines 11 and 12 of section 10 by striking out the word "summoned" and inserting "subpœnaed."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I offer the following amendment:

In line 1 of section 11, after the word "compensation," insert the words "of this commission;" so that it will read: "All fees, expenses, and compensation of this commission shall be paid," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. I move to strike out the last word.

In the Forty-ninth Congress, when a bill substantially the same as the first five sections of this bill was under consideration, I entered my protest against its passage, and I am unwilling to let this bill pass through the House without renewing that protest now.

The reasons for that protest were then given and I do not choose now to consume the time of the committee by undertaking to repeat them. I wish to add that if there is any feature of this bill which is worthy of consideration at all, it is, in my humble judgment, the provision or the ideas embraced in the last sections of the bill, from section 6 to section 11, inclusive. It was said that this was substantially what the President of the United States had recommended in one of his former messages. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to dissent from that statement. The President did say this in a special message sent to the Forty-ninth Congress on April 22, 1886:

But I suggest that instead of arbitrators chosen in the heat of conflicting claims and after each dispute shall arise, for the purpose of determining the same, there be created a commission of labor, consisting of three members, who shall be regular officers of the Government, charged among other duties with the consideration and settlement, when possible, of all controversies between labor and capital.

If this bill embraced a permanent board, with the duties indicated by the President of investigation, and, as I believe he states, in connection with the Bureau of Labor, I should feel inclined to give it the most earnest consideration. But I do not perceive that those provisions of the bill which are substituted for this idea accomplish this end, and I am unwilling to give my sanction to them, especially inasmuch as they are in connection with other provisions of this bill which I regard as absolutely unconstitutional, and not only so, but as a deception on honest labor through this country.

With these observations and without consuming further time I am content for the House to take whatever action it pleases on this bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am opposed to this bill, but it is evident that it is going to pass, as anything else proposed here for labor would be sure to pass. Therefore, as the bill is to pass, I desire to perfect it all I can. I have had the honor of offering one amendment which the House has adopted, limiting the expense of any single arbitration to a maximum of $5,000. I move now to add the words "or commission" after the word "arbitration;" then there will be no ambiguity about it.

The amendment comes in at the end of line 33 in section 5.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. That is all right.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the amendment as it is proposed to be adopted be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add:

"And provided likewise not more than $5,000 shall be expended in defraying the cost of any single arbitration or commission."

Mr. DINGLEY. If the gentleman has attended to the reading, he must see that the amendment does not exactly express his meaning.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask that the amendment be read again.

Mr. DINGLEY. I suggest the insertion of the word "investigation."

Mr. TILLMAN. I will accept that.

The amendment as modified was read, as follows:

And provided likewise not more than $5,000 shall be expended in defraying the cost of any single investigation by the commission hereinafter provided for.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MACDONALD. I move to amend by inserting after the word "railroad," which occurs on the third and fourth lines of section 1, the words "or other transportation."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move the adoption of that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCCREARY, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the bill H. R. 8665, and had directed him to report it to the House with sundry amendments and with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole, and I move the previous question upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any of the amendments? If not, the vote will be taken on them in gross.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Take them all together.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to know if it is not now in order to refer this bill back to the Committee on Labor without instructions.

The SPEAKER. Not at this stage. The question now is not upon the passage of the bill. The previous question has been ordered on the third reading of the bill.

The question was taken upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill, and upon that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] demands the previous question.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Labor.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. PARKER to recommit, and it was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill, etc., to create boards of arbitration of or commissions for settling controversies, etc."

PARIS INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION OF 1889.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House resolution (H. Res. 83) accepting the invitation of the French Republic to take part in the international exposition to be held at Paris in 1889, the gentleman from New York, Mr. BELMONT, the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. RAYNER, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. HITT.

EMPLOYMENT OF ENLISTED MEN IN COMPETITION WITH CIVILIANS.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the joint resolution (H. Res. 99) in reference to the employment of enlisted men in competition with local civilians.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That hereafter no enlisted man in the service of the United States, the Army and Navy respectively, whether a non-commissioned officer, musician, or private, shall be detailed, ordered, or permitted to leave his post to engage in any pursuit, business, or performance in civil life for emolument, hire, or otherwise, when the same shall interfere with the customary employment and regular engagement of local civilians in their respective arts, trades, or professions.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. If any gentleman wishes to debate this bill and will indicate his desire I will yield him time.

Mr. HERBERT. I would like to have ten minutes.

Mr. REED. I should like to have ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT].

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to do what I think I am safe in saying no law ever passed by the United States Congress has ever heretofore attempted. Its purpose is to prevent men from doing anything whatever to help themselves or their families.

No person coming within the provisions of this bill can lift his hands in any honest employment other than the service of the United States to better his condition. Just listen to the words:

That hereafter no enlisted man in the service of the United States, the Army and Navy respectively, whether a non-commissioned officer, musician, or private, shall be detailed, ordered, or permitted to leave his post to engage in any pursuit, business, or performance in civil life for emolument, hire, or otherwise, when the same shall interfere with the customary employment and regular engagement of local civilians in their respective arts, trades, or professions.

To enforce this bill as law it will be an outrage on natural liberty. If it be not intended to enforce it it is an absurdity to pass it; and the American Congress can be engaged in better business. This is a new rule the Committee on Labor is proposing to establish, that one free American shall not compete with another American, and the persons on whom it is to operate are not officers in the Army or the Navy, who are presumed to have some social and possibly political influence, but the privates, the enlisted men, who have no political power, and who, it was presumed, I suppose, have no friends on this floor. Gentlemen perhaps did not intend the bill to be as broad as it really is. The demand for it, as I understand, comes from musicians, and from no one else. If I am right in that the measure was only intended to apply to musicians; why was it not so framed as to cover them and them only?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Is the gentleman addressing his question to me?

Mr. HERBERT. I am directing my remarks to the gentleman who reported the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I will state to the gentleman that this bill was presented to the Committee on Labor in the first place by a committee of musicians, who appealed to us for protection against the unfair competition of members of Government bands, who were preventing them from earning a livelihood. It was urged that these members of Government bands, by taking outside employment in every locality and at all prices, were interfering with the efforts of outside musicians in earning a livelihood.

Mr. HERBERT. Now, was there any other demand for the bill?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I am not aware of any other demand; but it appeared to us that the principle which may properly apply to the member of a Government band applies with equal propriety to every other enlisted man. These enlisted men are paid, fed, clothed, and housed by the Government; and it is unfair to permit them to accept employment outside, and thereby prevent other persons from earning a livelihood

Mr. HERBERT. Very well; then it is as I supposed; the only demand for this bill has come from a few musicians.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Ten or twenty thousand of them.

Mr. HERBERT. Where are these Government bands? There are not in the service of the Government more perhaps than twenty bands. There is one in Washington, another in New York, another in Chicago. Most of them are in the West. Yet the Committee on Labor seems to have imagined that the limited number of musicians who did not wish to come into fair and honest competition with these few Government bands, stationed at a few points in the country, represented some widespread sentiment to which Congress ought to respond, and so it has been provided in this bill broadly that no enlisted man shall engage in any outside business whatever or perform any duties of civil life for emolument or hire.

Why did not the committee make the bill to apply to officers? Officers of the Army and Navy are detailed to service in colleges throughout the country as professors and commandants.

A MEMBER. But they do not get any pay for it.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman is mistaken. Some of them do. Why was not the bill made to apply to these officers?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The gentleman can offer such an amendment, if he pleases.

Mr. HERBERT. I want to know what harm there is in allowing a poor enlisted man in the service of the Government, who receives $25 or $30 a month, what harm is there in permitting him, if he happens to be home on leave, to accept temporary employment in a blacksmith shop or a shoe-making establishment or in any other honest occupation by which he can add to his comfort and happiness? What difference is there in principle between an enlisted man enlarging his income by such outside employment and an officer of the Army or Navy increasing his emoluments in the same way? Is it just or right to make this discrimination?

Coming to the real demand for this bill, what is it? It is a demand on the part of musicians. Do the people who have petitioned the Committee on Labor for the passage of this bill desire to prevent all competition? If the bill were so framed as to operate only in cases of unfair competition—if it were so framed as to prevent underbidding, then possibly there might be something said in favor of the measure; but as it is it prevents all competition whatever.

Now, here in the city of Washington a petition has been presented to Congress, signed, I believe, by a majority, if not by all, of the professional musicians of the District. I read from it a single sentence:

It is believed that the best purpose of the musical profession is served by honest and fair competition among its members, whether in the employ of the United States Government or otherwise.

The chairman of the committee [Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri] says an amendment will be offered, and, so far as he is concerned, allowed to exempt members of the United States Marine Band from the provisions of this bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I did not say that "so far as I am concerned" I would allow it. I said an amendment would be offered.

Mr. HERBERT. From the gentleman's remark I supposed he had no objection to the amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I am willing to let the House act upon it.

Mr. HERBERT. If there ought to be an exception in favor of the members of the United States Marine Band, why should there not be a similar exception in favor of members of every other Government band?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. The gentleman will allow me to inquire how this bill could be enforced at any rate?

Mr. HERBERT. There is no provision for its enforcement.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Then why is the gentleman making this opposition?

Mr. HERBERT. I object to the bill on principle; but I suppose one mode of enforcing it would be to make complaint (if there are persons mean enough to do so) to the officer in command, to point him to the law and say that a certain enlisted man, while upon furlough or when not occupied with his work for the Government, was competing with persons in outside employment.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I call attention to the language of the bill, which says that no enlisted man "shall be detailed, ordered, or permitted" to engage in any of these outside employments. Under this provision the punishment, if there should be a court-martial on the subject, would fall, it would seem, on the officer who ordered or permitted the men to engage in these occupations outside.

Mr. HERBERT. In that way, and I presume in that way only, could the bill be enforced, for, as the gentleman suggests, it seems to be directed in its terms to the officers, who I suppose are expected to forbid the enlisted men from taking employment outside of their work for the Government.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. In other words, there is no penalty on the enlisted man himself.

Mr. HERBERT. No penalty on the man himself.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The men engaged as members of these bands are mere privates in the Army, detailed as musicians.

Mr. HERBERT. There is no sort of complaint that the competition of these Government bands is unfair—none in the world. How will this measure operate? Suppose an Army band is stationed in a town where there are no other persons fit to furnish music for a public celebration, although there may be persons who call themselves musicians. In such a case the people might desire the services of the Government band; every man, woman, and child, except a lot of third-rate musicians, might demand good music and be willing to pay for it, and yet Congress would, by law, have declared that these third-rate musicians were masters of the situation. This would be an outrage upon a whole community.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have this bill laid aside for the present and to call up another bill for consideration. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], who originally introduced this bill in a preceding Congress, desired to be present when it came up to be acted upon. I have sent for him, but can not find him. I ask therefore the bill be withdrawn or passed over, not to lose its place upon the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the bill will be withdrawn from consideration and passed over for the present, not to lose its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ACCOUNTS OF LABORERS, ETC., UNDER THE EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9515) providing for the adjustment of accounts of laborers, workmen, and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law; and I will yield the floor to my colleague from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY].

Mr. TARSNEY. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill the title of which has been given by the chairman of the Committee on Labor.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. TOWNSHEND in the chair.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill (H. R. 9515) providing for the adjustment of accounts of laborers, workmen, and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever, as a laborer, workman, or mechanic, has been employed at per diem wages by the Government of the United States since the 25th day of June, 1868, the date of the act constituting eight hours a day's work, shall be paid for each eight hours he has been so employed as for a full day's work, without any reduction of pay on account of the reduction of the hours of labor.

SEC. 2. That all claims for labor so performed in excess of eight hours per day are hereby referred to the proper accounting officers of the several Departments, and the Secretaries of such Departments shall cause these claims to be immediately adjudicated, after the approval of this act, on the basis that eight hours constitute a day's work, and are to be paid for at the price per day as provided for in the first section of this act; and the amounts found due such claimants are to be paid by the proper officers, as provided for by exisiting law; and no payment made or receipt given for a less sum per day of eight hours' work as provided for in the first section of this act shall bar the right to recovery: Provided, That all claims arising under this act shall be presented within two years from its approval by the claimants, their heirs, or administrators, except infants and insane persons, and that no draft or warrant for money on such claim be delivered to any person except the heirs or personal representatives of such claimant; And be it further provided, That in no case shall any money be paid by reason of this act to any attorney or assignee.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Chairman, on the 20th of last month the House had under consideration House bill 1539, which involved the merits of the measure which is now presented for consideration. There was at that time pending in the Committee on Labor the bill introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], which was not reported upon in the former report of the Long bill. The committee, in view of the many objections urged and the amendments offered during the discussion at that time, have instructed me, sir, to present this bill to the House as a substitute for the bill H. R. 1664.

In order that the House may understand the difference, and the only difference, between it and the bill then under consideration, I will say that difference is just this: It was proposed at that time, as it is now proposed, whenever men shall be employed by the Government of the United States under a law which has been upon the statute-book since 1868, they shall be paid in accordance with the provisions of that law. The only difference here is as to the method by which that result may be reached. In the bill which we had under consideration last month it was provided that these claims should go to the Court of Claims for adjudication, that all rights under the law might be there adjudicated, and that then they should be brought before the House for an appropriation of money for their payment. In this bill you propose to pass by the Court of Claims and direct the accounting officers in the different departments of the Government to adjust all the claims of these men who have been compelled by duress to remain without payment of their just claims.

Mr. COBB. What is the difference between this bill and the bill passed in 1872?

Mr. TARSNEY. The eight-hour law was originally passed on the 25th day of June, 1868. Time passed on and President Grant was elected, and when his attention was called to the fact that the provisions of the eight-hour law had been disregarded he issued a proclamation, a copy of which I hold in my hand, directing the officers in the different Departments of the Government to enforce the law. On the 18th day of May, in the year 1872, which is the bill referred to by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB], at that time, by a rider on an appropriation bill, provided that all persons employed from 1868 to the date of the President's proclamation should be paid in accordance with the terms of the original act. That law covered only ten months and twenty-three days.

This bill now pending before this House to-day is strictly in accord with the original act, and with the spirit of the proclamation of President Grant as well as with the spirit of the act passed in 1872.

Subsequently a supplemental declaration was issued by General Grant, and during his entire administration, up to the 3d day of March, the end of it, in 1877, there was a practical compliance with the law throughout the country.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TARSNEY. Very well.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask my friend what is the scope of the bill? Does it cover all salaried officials; or does it simply refer to persons hired by the day?

Mr. TARSNEY. I will answer the gentleman in a moment—no, I will answer him now. The language of the original act provided—

Whoever, as a laborer, workman, or mechanic, shall be employed, etc.

It requires no profound or eminent jurist, I take it, to know who is a laborer, a workman, or a mechanic; and yet it is even possible that some technical official upon the Court of Claims or elsewhere might place a forced construction upon the words. But I am inclined to think that any intelligent accounting officer in one of the Departments of the Government might place a construction upon it. I am not here to make a definition.

But, sir, as I was proceeding to say when my friend from Georgia—not interrupted, but asked a question——

Mr. BLOUNT. I see upon an examination of the bill which is before me that this relates to per diem wages.

Mr. TARSNEY. I will explain in a few moments.

During that administration, the administration of General Grant, this law, as I have said, was practically enforced; but it was not during the succeeding administration, and I do not know but that it may be disregarded in some Departments of the Government even at the present hour.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman, but would like to ask as he proceeds if I have the right bill? This is numbered 9515.

Mr. TARSNEY. That is the correct bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. In this bill the language used is—

That whoever as a laborer, workman, or mechanic has been employed at per diem wages, etc.

Mr. TARSNEY. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understood you to say a moment ago that that was not the language of this bill.

Mr. TARSNEY. I did not mean that; no. The difference, I will state to the gentleman from Georgia, is in the eighth line of the bill, which was considered a month ago, where it provided—

Whether engaged on per diem compensation or piece or task work.

Those words have been stricken out and the words substituted which the gentleman finds in this bill. I will state briefly the reason why this was done.

One who is employed by the piece or task work may be employed perhaps but four hours' time during a day; but yet in this time, because of the character of work he is doing, he may be able to earn more than a person who is otherwise employed for eight or ten hours a day.

These men were employed under a special contract to do a particular kind of work in a given time, and to do it at so much compensation. They did it. These words, then, are stricken out so as to reach a class of people who have been paid everything the Government contemplated they should receive at the time they were employed, and all they expected to receive under their agreement.

The only other change in the bill that I now recall is this: When a like measure was before the House last month serious objections were urged here upon the floor, and amendments were offered providing that no assignee of these claims should be permitted to present the claims to the Government. Individually speaking, I should not care whether an assignee interposes or not; for I do not believe that any, or, if any, that many of these claims have been assigned. Other objections urged against the bill were that lawyers were engaged in this business with their sleeves rolled up, and waiting to get a chance in this grab. The change of this bill is found in the following language, as gentlemen will observe:

Provided, That all claims arising under this act shall be presented within two years from its approval by the claimants, their heirs, or administrators, except infants and insane persons, and that no draft or warrant for money on such claim be delivered to any person except the heirs or personal representatives of such claimant: And be it further provided, That in no case shall any money be paid by reason of this act to any attorney or assignee.

Now, then, while I stand here as a citizen and say that individually I would not care if an assignee interposed, or that a lawyer, if you please, presenting his client's case to the court, as he has a right to, should interpose, yet in the interest of that which I believe to be common justice to a wronged class of men in this country, and to whom you promised by your legislation to pay a certain sum for doing a certain service under a contract upon your part, but whom you compelled by stress of circumstances, and at times an appeal being made to the possibility of empty stomachs, to work beyond the limit fixed by the law—waiving, I say, all rights given under that law, when they come and ask that Congress shall do them simple and exact justice, and as the nation has been pledged to it, I repeat I waive any question of right of a particular individual as to the manner of presenting his claim, and stand here to say to this House to-day that the sole and only object of this bill is to carry out the provisions of the act of June 25, 1868, so that when it is enacted into a law and the wrong has been corrected you gentlemen may go back to your constituents at home and say that for once, at least, you have assisted in doing something that has carried out the promises made by Congress to the country. And let it not be said, gentlemen of the House, that the great Government of the United States dishonors its own promises, as it has dishonored them under this bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman from Michigan permit me a question?

Mr. TARSNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman give an estimate as to the probable cost of this bill?

Mr. TARSNEY. That I can not do. My recollection of the estimate obtained from the Navy Department is that it was about $3,000,000. But I say if it cost $50,000,000 it would not deter me as a Representative on this floor from voting it from the Treasury to pay an honest debt. We ought to pay in full what we promised to pay.

I have perhaps crudely, but as best I could, shown the differences between the bill we have here and the one we had before.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. ROGERS rose.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from Michigan allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TARSNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does this apply to other departments of the Government than the Navy Department?

Mr. TARSNEY. It does. It applies to every department of the Government affected by the act of June, 1868.

Mr. SPRINGER. There are a number of men employed here about the Capitol and a number employed in the construction of the Library who are all put down in the Blue Book as paid by the day. So the geological chainmen, etc., are put down as paid by the day. In this Blue Book a great many persons are shown to be employed by the day in all the branches of the Government service. Does the gentleman desire to go over all these accounts for the last twenty years and have them adjusted?

Mr. TARSNEY. I do not; but I want the accounting officers of the Government to do it and carry out the provisions of the bill. Wherever a laborer, workman, or mechanic has been employed under the provisions of that law I want it to apply.

Mr. SPRINGER. Some of these laborers are put down as paid by the month. Are they not included? Some, for example, are paid $30 or $40 a month, while others are paid so much a day. Will you make a discrimination against those who are paid by the month?

Mr. TARSNEY. I will say to my friend from Illinois that of course none of us are responsible for the violations of law by Department officers. We have attempted to frame this bill and bring it before the House so as to conform with the spirit and letter of the act of 1868. We can not go into the Departments and look at the various rulings—and misrulings in many instances—made there.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. TARSNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to ask the gentleman if the only purpose of the committee in this bill is not to have the Government carry out in this case its contract and the law of Congress?

Mr. TARSNEY. The gentleman has expressed the entire purpose of the committee.

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman will yield I understand we are to have a caucus this evening. The committee has another day, and I will move that the committee rise and that the House then adjourn.

Mr. ROGERS. I yield for that motion with the understanding that I will be recognized when this bill is again called up.

Mr. TARSNEY. I did not yield the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan said he reserved his time, and took his seat. The gentleman from Arkansas was then recognized. That gentleman yields to the gentleman from Missouri for a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. TARSNEY. I resumed the floor after stating that I reserved my time.

The question being put on Mr. BLAND'S motion that the committee rise, it was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNSHEND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9515) providing for the adjustment of accounts of laborers, workmen, and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 2179) authorizing the Kansas City, Texarkana and Gulf Railway Company to bridge the Red and Little Rivers in the State of Arkansas.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken, the Speaker stated that in the opinion of the Chair the "ayes" had it.

Mr. TARSNEY and others called for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 84, noes 45.

Mr. MORRILL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 29, noes 105.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I understand the gentlemen on the other side of the House desire to meet this evening for consultation. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. DINGLEY. That is not a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. Of course not; and the regular order is demanded.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. My parliamentary question is this, whether the Labor Committee has an assignment for a later day?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Yes; the 16th of May.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Will you have this bill called up at that time?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Yes, sir.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 76, nays 119, not voting 129; as follows:

Mr. DANIEL. I present the petition of Henry M. Price, a citizen of Virginia, grantee of the Republic of Venezuela, and of the officers and directors of the Venezuela Company, praying for the intervention of the Congress of the United States to secure protection of the rights of the grantees and reparation for wrongs committed by the authorities of Venezuela. In view of the nature of the petition, which involves an international affair, I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The petition was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your complainant, Henry M. Price, a citizen of the State of Virginia, would respectfully set forth and show that on the 5th day of February, 1866, at the office of A. I. Dovale & Co., South street, city of New York, Alvariz De Lugo, the accredited minister of the Republic of Venezuela to the United States of America, did, in fulfillment of a decree of his government, dated on the 13th of September, 1865, and by order thereof, enter into, sign, seal, and deliver a contract with and unto the said Henry M. Price and those whom he might associate with himself, all of the then unappropriated lands in the territory of Guiana and the Amizonias south of the eighth degree of north latitude for colonization purposes, and also certain exclusive privileges, mining, commercial, and otherwise, as set forth in the accompanying copy of said grant (post, marked A, pages 85, 86); which exclusive privileges were understood and intended as the source of compensation for the said Henry M. Price and his associates for their time, labor, trouble, and expense in carrying out the colonization part of the contract for the benefit of Venezuela.

Your complainant would further show that in accordance with the said grant, he associated with himself certain other citizens of Virginia and other States, and organized under the name and title of the "Venezuela Company," in order to carry out in good faith the intention and colonization purposes of said contract of grant, together with exclusive privileges accorded to them, mining, commercial, and otherwise. Said company duly organized in the town of Scottsville by the election of Henry M. Price, the grantee, as president and director; Rev. J. A. Doll, as vice-president and director; Jacob Briggs, of Scottsville, Va., as secretary and director; Christopher Hornsey, of Charlottesville, Va., as treasurer and director; and the following additional directors: James Mason, esq., of Scottsville, Va.; Col. R. H. Musser, of St. Louis, Mo.; R. R. Collier, esq., of Petersburgh, Va.; Richard Goodwin, esq., of Jackson, Tenn.; Octavius Goodrich, esq., of Smithfield, Isle of Wight County, Virginia; Commodore J. R. Tucker, C. S. N., Norfolk, Va.; Col. William Belton, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Maj. J. Harris, New York City, and Hon. Florentia Rivas, Venezuelan secretary of legation at Washington, to represent in the board of directors the special and specific interests of Venezuela.

Your complainant would further show that the officers and directors carried out the purposes of the company in good faith; he as its executive head devoting his entire time and energies to the interest and purposes of the company. That in accordance with his duty as such executive head, after first sending out from the city of New Orleans in January, 1867, under the auspices of Capt. Frederick H. Johnson, U. S. S., a party of fifty emigrants to fulfill the terms and conditions of the "contract of grant" (see book, page 119), that vested in him and his associates the grant together with the special exclusive privileges of mining, etc., emigrants chiefly citizens of Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, and Texas, he in person visited the territory granted, sailing from Wilmington, N. C., with a party of Southern emigrants, in order to select a suitable point as a commercial center, to secure the trade, commerce, and control the mining operations of the territory granted, and insure its advantages to the United States in general and the State of Virginia specially. In fulfillment of this purpose, and in accordance with sound judgment, he selected Porte La Tablas, within the grant, on the Orinoco River, at or below the mouth of the Caroni, 60 miles below Ciudad Bolivar, the most accessible shipping point of the newly-discovered gold deposits, and possessing ample water front, and depth of water for the largest vessels, with a free, unobstructed channel out. This point he named "Caroni," and it is so designated on many American maps.

Our purposes and views for the selection were frankly stated to President De La Costa, the governor of Guiana, and the fact that the grant vested in us exclusive right, control over all mines and timbers and vegetable productions, in all lands within the grant then unappropriated, nor did he question it. He evinced, in common with all the business men of Ciudad Bolivar, objection to our selection for settlement of a site below that city, but urged these objections in no unpleasant, offensive, or arbitrary manner, suggesting and urging settlement at some point above Ciudad Bolivar, making our contemplated settlement entirely tributary, commercially, to Bolivar City; which was totally incompatible with our views and purposes.

However, to gratify and satisfy him and the citizens of Bolivar, the local government providing in the most generous and liberal manner for our comfort, we explored the upper Orinoco and the Couri to its falls, finding a most magnificent country, rich in varied and valuable vegetable productions, but in no other way or respect meeting our views of the future in the selection of a permanent commercial site, and we so reported to President De La Costa. While showing evident signs of disappointment, our intercourse was still pleasant, he requesting us to give the matter further thought before the arrival of expected emigrants.

One morning some days after we happened to meet his excellency on the plaza fronting the river, and a friendly greeting passed. In the short conversation that ensued he inquired: "Do you still hold the purpose of settlement at Porte La Tablas?" We replied, "we did." "You had better reconsider and follow 'counsel and a device,'" he said. "No," we replied, "we have duly weighed and considered the matter with reference to the interests I represent, and can not change our purpose." "Do you," he asked, "see that vessel in the river?" pointing to a small vessel lying at the bank. "I order you to go aboard of that vessel, and to her destination below! You can take either of the two companions now with you in the city, to accompany you; select and I will send him aboard." I looked at him with surprise, astonished at this evidence of arbitrary power in the chief magistrate of a territory in a professed free republic modeled after the United States of America.

Your complainant would further show that after some weeks' sojourn on the Lower Orinoco he became prostrated with malignant malarial fever, and his life feared. An order came to him and his companion, John Vancourt, of St. Louis, Mo., to be ready to leave on a vessel to pass down next day bound for New York. It proved to be a Dutch vessel loaded with hides. On landing in New York we requested ourselves taken to the Manhattan House—our usual stopping place in the city—where we for weeks upon weeks hovered between life and death, but most carefully nursed and taken care of by the kind and generous host, the southern residents of the city, and the Sisters of Charity, all of whom, at one time, hourly expected our demise. We at last reached Virginia, so broken down and shattered in health that it was some two years before we fully recovered. Our companion, John Vancourt, threatened with fever, also hastened home on our arrival in New York, but developed malignant malarial fever on the way and died either before or soon after reaching home.

Your complainant would further show that after his return both himself and the officials of the company—as far as his debility permitted—continued to labor in good faith for the colonization interests of the grant, and the arranging for funds to carry out the vested exclusive purposes of the "contract of grant" in mining and commercial purposes of the company. In order to be placed in a position to borrow capital or sell bonds and stock for the purpose of carrying out these purposes a portion of the Venezuela Company, associated as a body and were duly incorporated February 13, 1868, under the laws of the State of Virginia, as per copy of the act of incorporation accompanying, marked B, Book 92-95, and organized by the election of the officers of the Venezuela Company, and continuing the same directors, except, owing to Dr. H. M. Price's health, Col. R. H. Musser, of St. Louis, Mo., was elected president of the newly incorporated company, and Benjamin H. Vancourt, of St. Louis, and A. F. Ruddler, esq., Augusta, Ga., directors, and arrangements made to blend the interests and purposes of the two companies, and I, Frederick Pattison, was chosen a director and agent of the combined companies in England, to enlarge the emigration, and also to sell stock or negotiate loans, under the Virginia charter of incorporation, to purchase vessels, to facilitate emigration, and raise funds to develop the mines and carry out the commercial ends of the company. Unconscious of any complaint or cause of complaint upon the part of the Venezuelan Government, an English emigration, sent out under the auspices of the agent of the combined companies, were refused acknowledgment under the terms and conditions of the contract of grant—as informed from private sources—but no information or reason was extended to either the grantee, the company, or officers of the company by the Venezuelan Government.

From private sources we received information that the grant was rescinded; but the Government retained the most profound silence upon the subject—why or wherefore? This was the more strange from the fact that their secretary of legation, Hon. Florentio Rivas, was not only one of the directory of the Venezuela Company but one of the charter members of the company, incorporated by the laws of the State of Virginia, and cognizant of and fully posted upon all its acts and purposes. Yet even he became suddenly most profoundly silent.

The terms and conditions of the "contract of grant," as to questions arising or that might arise between the company, or any member thereof, and the Venezuelan Government, required they should be decided or determined in their courts, but under the supervision of the accredited minister of the government from which the party hailed. They ignored this contracted and agreed method knowing they had no ground of complaint; ignored all form of legal proceeding common and requisite in all other constitutional, civilized communities, but acted alone by arbitrary power, and a simple ipse dixit, regardless of the rights of others.

Your complainant, as the grantee, would further show that neither he nor the company could avail themselves of the contracted means of redress against the Venezuelan Government except by, with, and through the concurrent action and order of the executive and State Departments instructing the American minister accredited to Venezuela to act. His complaint, with a copy of the contract of grant, was duly filed, and repeatedly since, with the Chief Executive and State Department, but so far resulting only in the withholding redress to him, the grantee, and also from the hundreds of American citizens, stockholders in the Venezuela Company, suffering pecuniarily from and by this arbitrary act of the Venezuelan Government in the face of the plain requirements of the "contract" as to mode and method of their redress.

Under these circumstances of withholding redress to him from the Venezuela Company, the stockholders, American citizens, we are compelled to throw ourselves for protection and redress due them as American citizens upon your honorable body, the representatives and protectors of the rights of each and every American citizen, be he ever so humble, against any and all foreign wrong and aggression upon and in their vested rights secured by contract. Therefore your complainant, the grantee and executive head of the Venezuela Company, organized to carry out each and every of the provisions of the contract of grant, prays that he may be restored to all and every of the special exclusive rights under the "contract of grant" made him and, through him, the numerous American citizens, stockholders in the Venezuela Company in all their vested rights acquired through the "contract of grant" to him.

Your complainant would further show that the grant gave and gives to him and his associates (the Venezuela Company) the exclusive right and control of all minerals within the grant, a mean of compensation for time, labor, and expended means in carrying out the intention of the grant. Such was his construction of the grant, such the view of President De La Costa, and such of the Hon. Horatio Rivas, the Venezuelan secretary of legation, with whom the entire correspondence preliminary to the making the grant was conducted. He so led all persons to believe with whom he corresponded, as is fully shown by his published letter, to different citizens of the South, and inserted in the Manual of the Venezuela Company, issued by them to aid colonization, page 87, which he prays may be taken and made a part of this complaint, the authenticity being duly established by accompanying paper marked C. This vested right now includes the rich and productive gold mines of Guiana, all of which are embraced within the said grant of territory, besides deposits still richer, known now only to your complainant.

Your complainant would further show that if the Venezuelan authorities meant equivocation as to the grant of exclusive privilege, such course was beneath the dignity of a sovereign State, as it is that of all honorable men—is a fraud, and can not in equity hold in either State or private affairs as against man and man.

The mines and minerals are our property and should be returned to our possession, use, and benefit by all rules of equity, as was the intention of the parties conducting the negotiations.

Your complainant would further show that a portion of the said bounds of territory embraced in the grant, that lying to the east of the Caroni River, including the gold mines, have been lately seized and taken possession of by the authorities of British Guiana as a part of their territory. As to the rights of actual sovereignty or to which it belongs is not for us to decide; but it is beyond all question that at the date of grant, in 1865, and the date of its being perfected to your complainant and his associates, in 1866, and for years after, the Republic of Venezuela held certainly the de facto sovereignty, and unquestioned exercised all the rights of sovereign authority and the rights of eminent domain. Should any future settlement pass and vest the undisputed sovereignty in British Guiana it can in no way affect the actual rights of your complainants except as to a change of sovereignty and laws and form of government; and your complainants are as justly entitled to protection at your hands as American citizens in all and every of their vested rights as fully and perfectly in the one case as the other. Of the vested rights of your complainants there can be no doubt, if any weight is attached by governments to the sanctity and inviolability of contracts as set forth and understood as to their true spirit and intent. Your complainant has no doubt of the fullest and amplest protection and the fullest and amplest reparation for all wrongs done him and his associates as American citizens by the arbitrary acts of the Venezuela Government and its officials; and he and they will ever pray, etc., as in duty bound.

HENRY M. PRICE,
Grantee and President of the Venezuela Company.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that he was directed to return to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 2613) to amend an act approved June 15, 1882, changing the boundaries of the fourth collection district of Virginia.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 83) accepting the invitation of the French Republic to take part in an international exposition to be held in Paris in 1889, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BELMONT, Mr. RAYNER, and Mr. HITT managers at the conference on its part.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 5929) to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across Staten Island Sound;

A bill (H. R. 8560) to establish a department of labor; and

A bill (H. R. 8665) to create boards of arbitration or commission for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations and other common carriers engaged in interstate and Territorial transportation of property or passengers and their employés.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 7220) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn.," approved February 25, 1885, and the act amendatory thereof, approved February 25, 1887; and

A bill (H. R. 7315) to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations, and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder.

ADMISSION OF DAKOTA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, the order of morning business is closed and the Senate resumes, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 185) to provide for the admission of the State of Dakota into the Union, and for the organization of the Territory of Lincoln, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. BUTLER to the amendment reported by the Committee on Territories.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I should not have said anything upon this somewhat trite question if it had not been for a remark or two of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], which seemed to indicate on his part a lack of knowledge of some history in which all Missourians especially ought to be pretty well posted.

In speaking of the objections which he had to the admission of South Dakota he made the following remark:

> To judge from the speeches we have heard here it is only a question for the Territory of South Dakota. When and how did it become so? What act of Congress called it into existence? When before in the history of this country was it ever known that the people of a Territory had a right to subdivide their own Territory, their own area? Will Senators point me to one single instance of the twenty-five new States admitted into this Union since 1789 where any people of a Territory but those of Dakota undertook to divide their own area and then demand admission as a State?

Mr. President, the Territory of Kansas did exactly what the Senator from Missouri says was never done. The boundaries of the Territory of Kansas extended from the Missouri River to the crest of the Rocky Mountains. Congress by an act passed in 1857, known as the English bill, offered to the people of that Territory the option of taking the Lecompton constitution, and said to them in substance that if they declined by a majority vote to be admitted under that constitution, then they should be authorized to form a new State constitution and be admitted under it. That referred of course not only to the people of the entire Territory, but to the boundaries of the Territory then existing, and yet when the Wyandotte constitutional convention assembled under and by virtue of the authority of the enabling act of which I have spoken, it proceeded to fix as the western boundary of the State of Kansas a line nearly 300 miles east of the western boundary of the Territory of Kansas. The Kansas discussion was one in which the people of Missouri took a great deal of interest, and if this particular thing was not observed by my friend at that time, it must have been because there were other phases of that struggle in which he took greater interest.

The State of California came in by boundaries self-imposed, Congress having passed neither an enabling act nor any other act defining the boundaries of the Territory, or which were to be those of the State of California.

I have no doubt there are other instances, but I refer to these in the comparatively recent history of this country for the purpose of showing that this complaint made against South Dakota is entirely without foundation.

Mr. President, it is competent for any number of citizens located in any Territory of the United States to propose to Congress to admit them into the Union as a State, and their proposition would properly embrace a statement of the boundaries which they preferred as those of the new State. It is competent for them also to propose the institutions under which they wish to be taken into the Union, and it is in no wise a derogation of any privilege of Congress that they should do this. Their petition for this purpose would be entitled to respectful consideration. It is not only perfectly competent for Congress, but Congress has in many instances, as has been stated in this debate already, accepted propositions of that kind without requiring the passage of an enabling act, or without entering into any controversy in regard to the form of the institutions or the character of the constitution as submitted.

The only consideration which the Constitution specially imposes upon Congress is that the State should have a government republican in form; and there has been nothing in the proceedings in Dakota of an anti-republican character, and no proposition of a sufficiently revolutionary character to alarm even as sensitive a person as the Senator from Missouri.

It is proper to take into account the interest of the entire nation in the admission of a new State, and yet the aspiration for statehood on the part of the people who have sought homes in the new Territories has been all-pervading. It has been recognized as in a sense a right that a Territory having as great a number of population as constitutes the ratio of representation for the admission of a Representative into the lower House of Congress should be admitted, unless there were some objection to the character of the people, to the character of the institutions proposed, or something else of a very important character indeed.

In addition to this, in the case of Dakota a promise that this Territory should be carved into new States at the proper time was contained in the treaty by which we acquired it. If the Senator has one exemplar greater than another it is Jefferson. This treaty was the work of Mr. Jefferson. No doubt that far-seeing statesman had that provision inserted in the treaty for a purpose, and for just such a purpose as the people of Dakota are now endeavoring to have carried out.

They have a right therefore, not only because they have sufficient numbers, not only because they have settled institutions, not only because they are by comparison prosperous and have all the elements of statehood, but because of the promise contained in the treaty to present themselves to Congress for admission into the Union.

This feeling upon their part and the effort which they have made in this direction has been carried on for a number of years, and the subject is not a new one. During all the progress of the debate there has been nothing said anywhere to indicate either that the people of Dakota were not possessed of requisite intelligence or that in any respect the State of South Dakota if admitted into the Union would be one which might not with propriety hold up its head in the family of States.

The Senator from Missouri was candid enough to say that this was a partisan question—that is, that the question of the admission of new States had usually been partisan in its character, and this was no exception. That this was the case at a time when parties were divided upon a different question entirely from what they are supposed to be divided upon now is unfortunately true. There was some ground for the jealousy with which the South regarded the admission of new States into the Union, and if the Senator were representing the Missouri of 1860, he would be representing that sentiment which its people regarded as material to their interests in declining to vote for the admission of any more free States. But I had hoped that with the disappearance of the institution of slavery the sentiment which justified obstruction to the admission of new States on partisan grounds merely, disappeared.

Mr. President, there has been a good deal said about the representation of small States on this floor, about the representation of States like Rhode Island, Connecticut, Vermont, and New Hampshire, and the undue proportion of power which their inequality of representation gives them in this Chamber over the larger and more populous States in the Union. It is something which we can not be rid of directly, because the Constitution says that in that particular it shall never be changed except with the consent of those States, and I do not suppose they will ever consent. Therefore, we are to rest under this inequality of representation in this Chamber unless there shall be a revolution. But in the mean time it can be modified by such a proper division of the Territories or such a limitation of the boundaries of the new States as shall give to the western part of the country a larger proportionate representation here than they would otherwise have. The preponderance of the smaller States in this body is not to be overcome or even modified by the admission of unduly large new States.

But, Mr. President, it is something which is, I think, apart from the proper division of parties, that there should be any question raised about the admission of Dakota under existing circumstances. It has not been always that the party which the Senator from Missouri represents has objected to the admission of new States for such reasons as he now puts forth. In 1857 a portion of the people of the Territory of Kansas adopted a constitution known as the Lecompton constitution. The convention which framed that constitution did not represent a majority of the people of the Territory; in fact it represented a very small minority. The convention did not submit its work in its entirety to the people, and yet when a copy of that constitution found its way through the hands of the president of the convention into the hands of Mr. Buchanan, President of the United States, Mr. Buchanan transmitted it to Congress with an urgent plea for the admission of Kansas under that constitution.

After the adoption of that constitution by the convention in the fall of 1857 and the failure to submit its work to the people, the Legislature of the Territory of Kansas submitted the question directly to the people as to whether they desired admission into the Union under the Lecompton constitution, and at an election held for that purpose on the 4th day of January, 1858, nearly nine-tenths of the people of Kansas voted against such admission and repudiated the constitution utterly. Yet, on the 2d day of February following, President Buchanan sent that constitution to Congress, himself alluding to the fact that it did not represent the people of the Territory and to the fact that it had been voted down by a large majority of the people, and he excused himself for thus asking that the will of the people should be overridden by saying that it was common for people to commit to their representatives the exercise of authority which they did not afterwards desire nor expect to pass in judgment upon.

The Senator will remember the struggle which ensued the effort to admit the State under a constitution which not only had been adopted in violation of the expressed wish of the people of the Territory, which had been voted down by them by an overwhelming majority, but a constitution which in terms fastened upon them an institution which they held in utter and eternal abhorrence, and which their presence in the Territory of Kansas was a protest against.

I never have heard the administration of Mr. Buchanan complained of from Democratic sources. The only regret I ever heard expressed concerning it from any member of the Democratic party was that it did not succeed in its effort, in the first place, to put slavery upon Kansas, and, in the next place, to compass a dissolution of the Union. Mr. Buchanan felt that the rights of the people of Kansas to be admitted into the Union under a constitution they did not frame and did not want, and which fastened slavery upon them, were so sacred that he was determined that they should come in whether or no. The people of South Dakota have framed a constitution by means of delegates which were elected by them, and their work was submitted to a popular vote and by that vote ratified. Whatever else can be said, the people of Dakota are represented in this movement for statehood.

The Senator from Missouri said further, speaking with that sensitiveness which becomes the representative of a great State:

> Gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber speak as if this were a question local to Dakota. Why, Mr. President, two Senators in this Chamber from the State of Dakota would legislate for my people and yours, Representatives in the other branch of Congress would enact laws which affect the interests of your people and mine. Is it a local question that more Senators, more Representatives, more electoral votes shall be called into existence, or is it true that Dakota is a State outside of the Union coming into existence in proprio vigore from its own people alone?

Mr. President, I think I appreciate the feeling which animates the Senator from Missouri in the critical view which he takes of the people who are seeking admission into the Union. He wants good society; he wants to associate with the representatives of vigorous, intelligent communities; he wants the people represented here by those who, coming in contact with those from Missouri and the other States of the Union, will take a view of the affairs over which they take jurisdiction which is consonant with national dignity, national power, virtue, and the interests of all, and at the same time, of course, the interests of each one of the great family of States.

What shall be said about Dakota to its discredit that can not be equally said about the States now in the Union to whose association the Senator from Missouri makes no objection? Dakota cast in 1886 in the election of delegate to Congress 104,811 votes. I am advised that the population of South Dakota, living within the area proposed by this bill, is about two-thirds of the entire population of the Territory of Dakota. Saying nothing now about the increase that has occurred in the population since 1886, South Dakota has a voting population of about 80,000.

Mr. PLATT. There were about 77,000 votes cast in South Dakota in that election. There were 104,000 votes cast in the whole Territory.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Connecticut tells me there were about 77,000 votes cast in 1886 in what is proposed to be the State of South Dakota. I turn here to the table of votes cast in other States, and I find that in Florida, in 1884, at the Presidential election of that year, an event which should have awakened some interest and brought out a full vote, the entire vote cast was 59,872. Florida has two Senators, and two Representatives in the other House of Congress. Delaware I find at the same election, in 1884, cast 30,000 votes. Turning to the vote of the State of Georgia, I find that in 1886 there was cast in that State 25,123 votes; and Georgia has ten Representatives in the other House of Congress.

The same year the State of Kansas, with only seven Representatives in the other House of Congress, cast a total vote of 273,201. A single district in that State cast more votes by two to one than the entire State of Georgia, to wit, 61,465. Arkansas last year cast about 40,000 votes, Louisiana about the same number, and there are very few indeed of the Southern States which have cast as many votes in the last five years as South Dakota cast at the last election held in 1886.

In South Carolina I find that the total vote for Congressmen in 1886 was 39,072. The Senator from Missouri does not find association with South Carolina uncomfortable on account of the small voting population contained in that State, nor is he disturbed by the fact that South Carolina casts seven votes in the House of Representatives with a voting population of less than 40,000.

Perhaps it may be the quality of the people in Dakota to which my friend from Missouri objects. The people of Dakota are as fair a representative of what we call the Anglo-Saxon race on this continent as any similar number of people in the world. It may not be perhaps fair to say that they are a choice selection, but they have been taken from the most active, energetic, and forceful of the people of the Eastern, Middle, and Western States, with a sprinkling from the South. They are men chiefly in the prime of life. They have converted a desert into a habitable land. They cultivate more acres of farm land than two-thirds of the Southern States. They devote more money annually to schools than any one of the Southern States, leaving out three or four, and the church buildings and all the other things which are at least prima facie evidences of a state of civilization which has been the accompaniment of the march of the Anglo-saxon race across this continent, are in stronger and more manifest existence in Dakota than in the majority of the States of the Union.

I think their progress from the day when the white man first set foot within the limits of Dakota to the present time has been marked by less excesses than have been common to some of the older States of the Union during that same time, and there has been in every respect not only a careful regard for the public will, but ample laws passed to give it effect, and I have yet to learn that there has ever been in Dakota, either by direction or by indirection, a serious effort to prevent a fair expression of the popular will or support it after it was made. There are not so many ballot-boxes there at the annual elections as there are in the State of South Carolina, however. The citizen of Dakota is willing to deposit his ballot containing on it the name of every person for whom he wishes to vote in a single ballot-box. When he deposits it he is positively certain that that vote will be counted. If he should happen by any freak of fortune to be transported to South Carolina, and become an elector there, he would have need to exercise most carefully his visual organs when he came to vote, for there the votes must be deposited in eight different boxes, one for each officer to be voted for, in order to be perfectly sure that he did not get some or all of his ballots in the wrong box, and thus lose his vote. That elector who makes a miss and puts a ballot into a wrong box thereby loses his vote as utterly as though he had never gone to the polls.

I shall be glad to have some Senator state whether he thinks that that mode of gathering the popular will in South Carolina is preferable to the Dakota plan and more likely to result in a fair election and the will of the people being made known, and whether Dakota, with her free elections, her free institutions, and her Anglo-Saxon people, with their order, sobriety, their school-houses and their churches, is not as fit a representative of what an American State should be as South Carolina? Who ever heard of a candidate for Congress, or any other office in Dakota, starting out on his campaign with a 12-pound cannon, as was done in Mississippi? Nor has there been in any of the elections in that Territory, so far as I am aware, any serious charge that any man was prevented from casting his vote or having his vote counted.

In all the sharp contention of interests, in all the uprooting of those ties which go to constitute what we call order, which are to some extent the accompaniment of the removal of men from their homes and settlement on the frontier, and especially a condition of things in which there is no title, there never has been anything in the career of Dakota for which any citizen of that Territory, or any citizen of the United States, or any one interested in the destiny of his race, has ever been called on to blush.

I said that the laws of Dakota were calculated to secure a fair expression of the popular will. They are fashioned after those of most of the Northern States. There is not only the division of the Territory into counties, but by minute subdivisions into townships, into school districts, into road districts, into cities; and in each one of these there is preserved to every citizen of each one of them his power as a citizen, his rights as a citizen, to vote upon every single question which concerns the well-being of the community in which he lives.

That State which my friend who sits next me [Mr. RANSOM] so ably represents, "the good old North State," in common with her sister States of the South, at a time when there was a great outcry about carpet-bag legislation, echoed the general Democratic cry in favor of what they were pleased to call local self-government, and yet what is known in the North as local self-government has no existence whatever in North Carolina.

When a county comes to be organized in that State the Legislature enacts that certain persons, who are named in the bill, shall be the magistrates for Buncombe County, or for whatever other county it is proposed to organize, and those magistrates, thus elected by the Legislature and not by the people of the county, not only perform the judicial functions due to their place, but they elect every single county officer, except sheriff and register of deeds, including the county commissioners, and these county commissioners not only levy all the taxes, but in turn appoint all the election officers in every election precinct in every county, and nearly all the township officers as well, and the people of the counties of that State do not vote on the question of the levying of taxes for any purpose, nor upon that of the building of bridges, court-houses, or other public improvements, but they are all settled through the medium of this board of county commissioners, who are created, not by a vote of the people, but by an act of the Legislature. No question vital to the people of that State is settled by a direct vote of the people.

In Virginia an election board has been erected by law at the capital, which appoints election officers in every election district in the State. The people have nothing to do with their selection, either as election officers or as officers ex officio of the class to which they belong. Everything comes from the central power, and the right of the people to express themselves freely upon all the questions which concern them has standing between them and that expression these boards created without their knowledge and without their consent.

Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri does not object to associating here with the representatives of these two old States of the original thirteen, the State of North Carolina and the State of Virginia. No one quarrels with them because they do not have institutions which gather the popular will and give it ample and constant reflection the same as in the Northern States. The Senator from Missouri is delighted with companionship of that kind, more especially perhaps because he sees in the laws and institutions which I have mentioned that "assurance double sure" which is dear to his heart that thereby those States will remain Democratic.

When I come to the State of my genial friend with whom I have served in committee so long, and of whom I am personally very fond, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and for the purpose of showing that my friend from Missouri is a little oversensitive about the admission of Dakota, I call his attention to the exhibit of taxable property returned by the auditor of state of the State of Alabama for the year 1880. It is found in the report of the State auditor to the governor, and under the head of "Exhibit 10—Continued" is a list of the counties in that State and the value and the kinds of property which are assessed for taxation therein. I find in the first column, as is perhaps proper, the first thing to be enumerated, the value of the "guns, pistols, and dirks" subject to taxation. The counties in the State are put down in alphabetical order, the first one being Autauga, and the value of guns, pistols, and dirks assessed in that county in 1880 was $4,452.

Running along over the various other items subjected to taxation in that county, an agricultural county, I come to the item of "farming tools," and I find that that county, which had $4,452 worth of guns, pistols, and dirks for taxation in 1880, only had $580 worth of farming tools. This proportion of about 8 to 1 in favor of the guns, pistols, and dirks is very nearly maintained throughout the State.

Going further down I find in the county of Dallas that there were $13,066 worth of guns, pistols, and dirks assessed for taxation, and in the same county $2,751 of farming tools; and in not a single one of the counties of the State is the proportion more favorable—the guns, pistols, and dirks always being of greater value than the farming tools. The total of guns, pistols, and dirks subject to taxation in the entire State is $357,150.75, while the total of farming tools is only $77,206.05.

When I look at the item of mechanical tools, the total value of all assessed for taxation in the State of Alabama is $222,454 as against $357,150.75 for guns, pistols, and dirks. Turning back to a preceding table I find the assessed value of libraries in the State is $181,949, being the entire value of all the books assessed for taxation in the State of Alabama, while the guns, pistols, and dirks stand at the comfortable total of $357,150.75. It exceeds not only the libraries, but the jewelry, plate, and silver ware, this last item being only $194,419, while all that I can do will not reduce this total of guns, pistols, and dirks from the appalling sum total of $357,150.75. It is not worth while to make the comparison in regard to paintings, but I observe paintings are assessed at $14,979. I will present the table.

The comparison in value of the guns, pistols, and dirks with the hogs and sheep is equally striking, and nearly equally to the disadvantage of the hogs and sheep. I will ask to have the table inserted at this point in my remarks.

The Senator from Missouri does not object to the representation of Alabama on this floor, or in the other House of Congress. He is willing to meet here the representatives of all the Southern States on the plane of equality. He does not feel that their presence here destroys the value of the representation of Missouri, or is in any way contrary to the interests of the people of that great State. Is it because of the area of Alabama? I take it not, because the area of Alabama is a little less than that of South Dakota as proposed. Is it on account of the number of people? They are greater in proportion to the representation Dakota would have than the population of the State of Alabama. Is it because the State is less fertile? I never have heard that as an objection. Or is it on account of the quality of the people? Well, Mr. President, Dakota has more farming implements, more agricultural development, more products of the soil, but has less guns, pistols, and dirks. I never heard that human life was safer in Alabama, that property was held more sacred on account of the presence of a superabundance of fire-arms; and yet after all it may be that if I could get the Senator from Missouri on his voir dire he might say under stress of an oath that it was the preponderance of agricultural implements in Dakota and the lack of guns, pistols, and dirks, and therefore the less security for Democratic success, which occasioned his present position.

Mr. President, it may not be that the votes of Dakota in the electoral college would decide the next contest for President of the United States. I do not believe myself the result will be that close; and yet shall Dakota be kept out on that account? The election of governor of a great State was once settled by one vote. The present Chief Magistrate was elected by a plurality of less than 1,200; that is to say, the plurality that gave him one State—the State of New York—with votes enough and more than votes enough to change the result was determined by less than 1,200.

The people of South Dakota are entitled to be admitted, if at all, because their State as proposed has the proper area, because it possesses the proper population in numbers, and because that population is competent for all the purposes of self-government; and these three essentials being present, what odds is it that their presence in the Federal Union might determine the election of a President of the United States? If that is a reason for keeping them out, why not for the same reason disfranchise other communities whose votes may be equally decisive?

If this is a valid objection, then it may continue forever, and the right of self-government be denied for all time. So far as I am concerned I do not care what the politics of any one of these Territories may be. I will vote for the admission of Montana, Democratic though it be; I will vote for the admission of Washington, Democratic though it be, whenever the showing is made here which has been made in the case of Dakota, and I believe that it can be made in regard to both those Territories now, because I believe the peace, the progress, and the welfare of the Republic consist, not in the existence of Territories to be governed from the national capital, not in the existence of colonies that form no integral part of the great body of the American people in their governing capacity, but because I believe the power and the perpetuity of the Republic depend upon the equal representation of all the people acknowledging allegiance to this Union, first as citizens of States—each State revolving in its own orbit, taking care of its own local concerns, but each forming one of the family of States comprising the National Government, acknowledging allegiance to the supreme power thereof, and all going one way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPOONER in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on that amendment, I desire to say a few words respecting the present situation of the Territory of Dakota. My reason for this desire lies in the fact that a good portion of South Dakota lies immediately west of the western boundary of my own State, and also in the fact that three great lines of railway having their eastern terminus at Chicago pass through my State and far into the Territory of Dakota, and also because, of the people who are in that Territory, a large number migrated from Iowa.

I have listened as well as I could to the objections made to the bill reported by the majority of the committee, which proposes to erect a State out of the southern portion of that Territory. I have tried to ascertain whether there was a substantial argument against the admission of South Dakota. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] exhausted himself in the discussion of two or three points, one being that a portion of the Territory of Dakota had arrogated to itself the right to divide that Territory and form a State constitution; and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] made that a cause of indictment against this people, that they had undertaken, without the previous advice or consent of Congress through an enabling act, to fix boundaries for the admission of a State, and characterized that as a revolutionary proceeding unheard of in the past history of our country. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] has shown us that his State came in under substantially similar circumstances and conditions. Why, Mr. President, nearly all of the Northwestern States came in under these conditions.

How did the Territory of Michigan come in, organized, I believe, in 1805? When the Territory of Michigan sought admission as a State its boundary extended to the Rocky Mountains, practically, and far northwest to the British possessions. It extended far beyond the Missouri River; it took in whatever there was of the Louisiana purchase, certainly as far west as the river which is a part of the western boundary of the proposed State of South Dakota. The Territory of Michigan comprised what is now the entire area within the existing Territory of Dakota. According to the doctrine of the Senator from South Carolina the State of Michigan was guilty of a revolutionary movement when she carved out of this territory a limited and prescribed boundary and formed for that limited area a State constitution and presented that constitution here for admission into the Union.

The Senator from Missouri said it was revolutionary because this Territory came not in a submissive way as a Territory, but that she came here as a State demanding admission. Is that a revolutionary proceeding? What do we admit if we admit this State? We do not admit the Territory of Dakota. We admit the State of Dakota or South Dakota as the case may be. The Constitution provides that new States may be admitted into the Union, and not new Territories. So the phraseology of which the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from South Carolina complain is the phraseology of the Constitution, and it finds its precedent in the State of Michigan, which, without previous authority from Congress, formed her State government, elected a Legislature and State officers, and elected Senators of the United States and asked for admission as a State into the Union, as Dakota has done.

It was not revolutionary in Michigan to do this, because the then President of the United States, Andrew Jackson, treated that petition or prayer of the State of Michigan with the consideration it deserved, and sent it here with a message to Congress saying that the State of Michigan applied for admission into the Union. And yet, forsooth, we are told by the Senator from South Carolina and by the Senator from Missouri that because South Dakota comes here pretending to be a State that is sufficient to reject her prayer, and the Senator from Missouri has made use of some rather impetuous remarks, I think, of a gentleman who came here some years ago in the interest of this Territory of South Dakota, Mr. Hugh J. Campbell; but when Senators know that Mr. Hugh J. Campbell came from rather a mercurial portion of our Union and settled in Dakota they will pardon perhaps his impetuosity in this regard.

So, Mr. President, there is nothing in what is proposed here as respects the manner of the approach of South Dakota. But it is said that South Dakota has no right to come here forming her own boundaries. So we agree; that is to say, if Dakota shall fix her boundary that boundary is subject to whatever revision we may choose to make here, which revision, I take it, if we act in good faith, must be again submitted to that people for their ratification. I believe in the bill proposed by the majority of the committee they change the boundary proposed. Is not that true?

Mr. PLATT. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. They change the boundary from the forty-sixth parallel of north latitude to the seventh standard parallel. That is precisely what was done in Iowa. Iowa, I believe, was made a Territory in 1838, cut off from the Territory of Wisconsin, which originally had been cut off from the Territory of Michigan when Michigan became a State.

The territorial boundary of Iowa extended not only to the Missouri River, but extended as far, if I am not mistaken, as the original Territory of Wisconsin extended west of the Mississippi River, as far north as the original Territory of Wisconsin extended; so that Iowa, as a Territory, embraced practically nearly all of what is now the State of Minnesota. What did Iowa do? She framed a constitution and asked admission into the Union fixing her own boundaries. Did anybody find fault with that situation at that time? Was it suggested then by the men who were in this Chamber that this was a revolutionary proceeding? Did they become indignant because Iowa of her own volition and without the consent of the two Houses of Congress undertook to organize herself into a State? Not at all. Congress proceeded to admit Iowa into the Union, admitting with it at the same time a slave State, the State of Florida, which then had a population, by the way, far less than sufficient to entitle a community to one Representative on the floor of the House of Representatives. But they admitted Florida and Iowa together, changing the boundary of the State of Iowa.

Iowa did not enjoy the changes made by Congress as respects her boundary, and when the act of admission was submitted to her people, as it provided for submission, it was rejected by the State of Iowa.

Mr. PLATT. Rejected on account of the boundary?

Mr. ALLISON. Rejected on account of the boundary. Congress undertook by its act to crib and confine the boundary of the State of Iowa so that the Missouri River should not constitute its western border as it now constitutes it, and they undertook to circumscribe the northern boundary as well. So, although Iowa was anxious to become a State in this Union, her people rejected the proposed change in her boundaries, and then proceeded straightway, in a revolutionary method, according to the characterization of the Senator from Missouri, to form her own constitution.

The Territorial Legislature of Iowa, as the Territorial Legislature of Dakota, called another constitutional convention, and that constitutional convention did just what this constitutional convention did in South Dakota. It fixed the boundaries of the State and carved those boundaries out of a much larger area, which then comprised the Territory of Iowa.

So, then, if South Dakota, in this process of fixing her own boundaries, has been guilty of a revolutionary proceeding, the State of Michigan and the State of Iowa, as also the State represented by the Senator from Kansas, were guilty of the same thing. Yet when Iowa came here with her second constitution, fixing and declaring her own boundaries and carving them out of the original Territory of Iowa, Congress admitted Iowa as a State into the Union without ever raising the question suggested by the Senators from Missouri and South Carolina.

Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri stated truthfully in the opening of his remarks yesterday or the day before that this was a political question. It is a political question. Why is it so? It is made so in this Chamber and elsewhere, where political questions are involved in the admission of States. Has not South Dakota had a population sufficient to admit her as a State of this Union for the last six years, certainly for five years? Whilst I believe in this body we have passed an act admitting Dakota twice before, in the other branch of Congress, in the House of Representatives during the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses, that question was never raised in that House either by a measure or a voice. During the Forty-eighth Congress the House Committee on Territories did not even consider the question, and during the Forty-ninth Congress it was submitted at so late a period that every one knew it was impossible to be considered in the House of Representatives before adjournment.

It is a political question, it is a party question. What is the attitude of the Democratic party upon this question on this floor? What is the attitude of the Democratic party with respect to it in the other Chamber? I perhaps can not speak of what now occurs in that Chamber, but the attitude of the Democratic party in this Chamber is non-action. Their policy is clearly disclosed in the letter which Mr. SPRINGER wrote to the Aberdeen convention in December last. I have that letter here. It is perfectly well known in Dakota that the people in that Territory are in favor of a division of the Territory. It is true, as the Senator from Missouri stated the other day, that the majority for division was only 5,000 last year; but if you were to submit to the people of Dakota whether they will have two States or one—if instead of admitting South Dakota, you proposed to admit South and North Dakota at the same moment—and then will submit to them the question whether they desire to come in as one State or two States, I venture to state, without fear of contradiction from any quarter whatever, that nine-tenths of all the people in that Territory would vote in favor of two States. You have never presented to them that issue. You have presented to them, so far as the force of a great and influential party in power is concerned, the only issue that if they did not choose to come in as a single State they should not come in at all. That is the attitude in which the Democratic party stands to-day with reference to this question. I believe that South Dakota should be admitted; I believe that North Dakota should be admitted as well; and I should be glad at this session and now to vote for the admission of the Territory of North Dakota as well as South Dakota. North Dakota has resources and population equal to those of any of the Territories that are now seeking admission on this floor.

Mr. PLATT. Or to any Territory that ever was admitted as a State.

Mr. VEST. Will my friend from Iowa permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. VEST. Suppose there were a bill now presented admitting the State of Dakota, the whole of it, I would vote for it. Will the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator catechizes me personally. He says he will do this; so does the Senator from South Carolina; but why do they not say that the Democratic party as a political organization is willing to admit the whole of Dakota to-day and allow her to come in here as an equal part of this great Union of States?

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me a word?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. My friend from Iowa is a fair debater, and I do not think he wishes to take any sort of indirect advantage. As a matter of course he knows that neither the Senator from South Carolina nor myself can speak for the Democratic party. We are here representing our respective States and responsible to our constituents for the manner in which we discharge the trust committed to us. I will say this to him, and that is as far as any Senator can go; I will say that after full deliberation and consultation (without any sort of caucus about it) with my colleagues on this side of the Chamber, there is not one Democratic Senator here who will not vote for the admission of Dakota as a whole at any time.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, Mr. President, how do we judge men or parties? We do not judge them by individual or single utterances. Has not the Democratic minority in this Chamber upon the Committee on Territories presented a counter proposition here? They propose an enabling act for the whole Territory of Dakota, but do they propose that the State shall be admitted? They simply propose that when that enabling act shall have been acted on and the various processes which are prescribed in the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina shall have been gone through with, then the Territory of Dakota shall come back here and run the gauntlet again of the two Houses of Congress and the Presidential veto of affirmation, as the case may be, depending then upon the political exigencies that may exist at that time. Am I right or not in that statement?

Mr. BUTLER. What does the Senator want?

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to know from the Senator from South Carolina if his substitute providing for the whole of Dakota authorizes its admission on Presidential proclamation after it shall have formed a constitution, or does it not provide that it shall again come here for the consideration and action of Congress?

Mr. BUTLER. For ratification by Congress of the constitution.

Mr. ALLISON. Is not that true?

Mr. BUTLER. That is true.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. So I understand.

Mr. President, although these two Senators on this floor have stated that they are in favor of admitting Dakota as a single State, yet when we come to see the action of the Democratic party in its political capacity, with the responsibility of party power, we find no such proposition. I hold in my hand a public document which not only places the admission of the whole Territory of Dakota upon that condition with a political party behind it, but also places it upon the condition that four other Territories shall come in pari passu with this Territory of Dakota.

This, in my judgment, is political legerdemain with the people of the Territory of Dakota. They have stood here for nearly six years asking for admission into the Union, and their petition has been unheard in the other House, where the Democratic party has a majority, although twice we have sent from this Chamber bills looking to the admission of South Dakota.

It will not do for Senators to say that by reason of the fact that South Dakota asks for separate admission she therefore fails to secure what the whole of Dakota could secure. If the Democratic party in their place of power have been willing hitherto to admit the whole of Dakota, why have they not made some proposition for that admission? Can anybody point me to the report of a committee of the House of Representatives in the last four years looking to the admission of Dakota? Have they not, to use a common phrase, sat down upon that Territory for the last four years in the House of Representatives, where the Democratic party had power and control?

Now, Mr. President, I desire to state, so far as the people who have gone from my own State to the Territory of Dakota are concerned, that there is no definite, distinct proposition now presented whereby the people of the Territory can come in as a State. Certain persons mean to dandle with this question until the Presidential election of 1888 shall have passed away, and then, if the political exigencies of the future shall require it, they will continue to play in the future as they have in the past.

We were told in 1884 that if that election could pass away, so that Dakota would not stand in as a political factor to disturb the requirement of the votes of the two States of New York and Indiana to elect a President, then the Territory of Dakota should have full and fair consideration; but over three years since that time have passed away and she stands in no better position now than she did then, except that she has, day by day and year by year, increased her population, her power, and her resources. Now, I put this to the Democratic party wherever it has power: if it wants Dakota in this Union let it present a bill for the admission of Dakota undivided.

I next proceed to answer the Senator from Missouri, who asked me if I would vote for the admission of Dakota as a single State. I answer that question in this way: I would hesitate long before I should be willing to admit Dakota as a single State. My reasons for that I shall proceed to state. I believe Dakota, with 150,000 square miles of area, wholly agricultural except the mineral resources of the Black Hills and the coal resources, depending almost wholly upon agriculture for its great future, is too large for one State. It should not be a State of 150,000 square miles for the convenience of the people.

Nor do I believe that it is in the interest of the great body of the people of this country living in and represented in their various capacities in the other States of this Union, that we should make a State 150,000 square miles in area in the Northwest composed entirely of an agricultural population. All the precedents are against it. It is true that under the conditions that existed in 1850, and I need not rehearse them as they are well understood here, California was admitted with a large area and a widely extended boundary; but with that exception and with the exception of Texas no other State in this Union has the territory which is proposed by Senators on the other side of the Chamber for Dakota. The admission of Texas was exceptional.

I heard the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] the other day make an inquiry as respects the obligations and duties of the country respecting the provisions as to division in the act for the admission of Texas, whether or not that was a binding obligation in any sense on the people of this country? It was, as it were, a project injected into that bill whereby a constitutional majority in both Houses of Congress, with the assent of the President, might divide the State if the people of Texas were willing that it should be divided. Why was it? The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] partly gave the reason; but he did not state the whole reason that entered into the minds of the men who admitted Texas in the last hours of the Congress which adjourned on the 4th of March, 1845. It is true that under the boundaries as claimed by Texas at that time a portion of its territory lay north of what was called the Missouri compromise line of 36° 30′; but that portion of Texas would not have carried any State into this Union in and of itself. That was a small area, if I am not mistaken. It is true that the old Spanish boundary by the treaty of 1819, which was made by John Quincy Adams, extended to the forty-second parallel of north latitude, but it extended to that parallel in mountain ranges and not in gorges, and no State was likely then to be carved out of that Territory which was then claimed by the State of Texas as a part of its boundary acquired from Mexico. So the great reason which entered into the minds of the men who provided for this division of the Territory of Texas, was first to make States "of convenient size." Why was that language inserted in the act—"States of convenient size, not exceeding four in number?" It was because hitherto the size of States admitted from Territories had ranged from 40,000 to 45,000 square miles, and it was the intent and purpose of the men of 1845, whenever the exigencies of Texas and this country should require it, to reserve power to divide that State into five States. Does any man doubt now that if the equilibrium which existed in 1845 existed to-day the State of Texas would be dismembered and destroyed in its present area for the purpose of making five States there where one exists now?

It did not enter the minds of the men of 1845 on either side to believe that at this period of our country's history Texas itself, with all its territorial area, would be a free State in this Republic. They intended that the equilibrium which had been maintained by successive admissions of new States from 1820 should go on forever, but history proves that the war with Mexico, which followed the annexation of Texas, became the Trojan horse of slavery, and when California was admitted into the Union in 1850 the equilibrium between slave and free States was destroyed.

It may not be that in the history of our country as it is to-day Texas will be divided into five States. It may not be that Congress will make that proposition to the State, or that the State will assent to it; but having made that blunder in 1845 to carry out the equilibrium then in view, is it wise for us now to admit great States into the Union agricultural in their character? Why was it that in the ordinance of 1787 it was provided that new States might be carved out of that Territory, not less than three nor more than five? What did the men mean who framed our Constitution and our system of government, in providing for local self-government through States and for a General Government covering all the great national affairs of all the States? They meant that the Northwest Territory should be carved into three or five States. Why? Because those States should be of convenient size, and not one of these five States, if I am not mistaken, covers an area of over 50,000 square miles; certainly not one of them extends to the 77,000 square miles of area in the Territory of South Dakota.

So, Mr. President, from the very beginning, from the establishment of our Government down to this present moment, it has been the public policy of this country to create States of convenient size and not of enormous size for local self-government. It is true we have many small States in the Union, and they will remain; but whilst these States are a part of our Union, and I believe ever will and ever ought to remain such, I do not think it is to the interest of the States of the Union to take an agricultural population, such as that of Dakota is and must be forever, in the very heart of this continent, and put 150,000 square miles of such agricultural territory into a single State. Therefore it is that I believe the public policy of the people of this country requires that Dakota shall be divided, and that policy of States of convenient size will remain the policy of this Government as long as we have territory to gather into States, notwithstanding the exceptional cases of California and Texas, and to some extent Colorado.

Mr. MANDERSON. If the Senator from Iowa will permit me to interrupt him, let me call his attention to the fact that the rule he speaks of is particularly to be observed in that agricultural territory lying west of the Missouri River. For instance, in carving out that which was formerly the great Territory of Nebraska, which included Kansas and the territory north, the first slice south was Kansas, with about 80,000 square miles in area; the next was Nebraska, about 77,000 square miles in area; so that due regard has been paid to that proportionate area so far as we have progressed in that agricultural district.

Mr. ALLISON. True, and I am obliged to the Senator from Nebraska for that suggestion, which I think I will amplify enough to say that the agricultural interest of this country is after all the predominating and controlling interest. What will the people of this country say if the agriculturists are to be told that when we reach an agricultural region, instead of a State of convenient size for their comfort and convenience as respects local government, we will huddle them together in States 150,000 square miles in area, thereby, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] truthfully says, diminishing their power in the Senate, which many of them think is small enough already.

Mr. President, I have said that the agricultural interest is the great interest in our country. This Territory of Dakota is the garden of that agricultural interest. Edward Atkinson, in a speech which he made about a month ago, which I have had the pleasure of reading, said that 60,000 square miles of territory employed in the production of wheat, producing 13 bushels of wheat to the acre, would produce 500,000,000 bushels, or a quantity nearly 150,000,000 bushels in excess of the consumption of our country to-day, or nearly 50,000,000 bushels in excess of our production hitherto of wheat. It is well known to every man upon this floor who has traversed the Territory of Dakota that North Dakota, with its 75,000 square miles of area, is almost wholly adapted to the raising of wheat. The Territory raised last year 60,000,000 bushels; it will raise this year 100,000,000 bushels, and it is one of the factors that will sustain and maintain our country against all comers, whether in Russia, or India, or Asia, as respects the control of the wheat-producing regions of the world. If we treat this agricultural region as we ought to treat it we shall excel in the production of wheat; we do excel now, but we shall continue so to excel every other country. We do it now in the production of cotton. What country undertakes to compete with the United States in the production of cotton or wheat, or what country can in the great future?

I appeal to Senators whether it is wise for us to be higgling here for mere temporary party advantage—because that is all it is? No man can tell, in the upheavals of party politics, what will come to pass ten years from now, or five years from now, as respects its organization. I will not enter upon that field of prophesy; I merely refer to it. But here we are for the sake of temporary party advantage—because it is nothing more or less—undertaking to keep out a great agricultural area and a great agricultural people, numbering probably 150,000 voters and 700,000 or 800,000 population, from participation in the affairs of this great Government of ours.

Look at it! Since this day's proceedings began we have released from Indian reservations 11,000,000 acres of land in South Dakota. What is to be the effect of that? The effect of it will be within the next two years to practically double the population, or nearly so, of South Dakota. Men will go in there and seize upon those agricultural lands for cultivation, so that South Dakota, that is now asking admission with 400,000 population, before another year shall have passed away will probably have a population of 600,000.

Mr. President, I would not have engaged in this debate at all (because I am not disturbed by the pleasant allusions of the Senator from South Carolina) except that I wished to present some considerations which are conclusive to my mind as respects the great political importance of admitting South Dakota as a State and North Dakota as a State as well. I will join hands with the Senators for the admission of Montana. Why should Montana be kept out of the Union? She formed a State government long ago and is entitled to admission as a State without going through the roundabout performance of an enabling act. So, Mr. President, I am ready to vote now for South Dakota, and I shall be ready to-morrow to vote for North Dakota if the Committee on Territories shall bring in a bill for that purpose and create two States out of this great Territory of 150,000 square miles.

Mr. PLATT. We have reported a bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I am obliged to the Senator for stating that. I did not know the bill was reported.

I have now said all I care to say as respects this great question. I think it is one of the most important that can come before us for consideration, because it relates to the exclusion of six or seven hundred thousand people from participation in the affairs of this great Republic of ours. That is an unjust exclusion, and it ought not to be tolerated a moment longer than they can have an opportunity to come into the Union.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I think that the Senate is to be congratulated that this discussion has got back to the issue before us, and I am obliged to the honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] that he has discussed it from the standpoint of a patriot and a statesman; and I only regret that the example set by my honorable friend from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] and by the honorable Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] had not been followed by others who have spoken on this question, and confined the debate, as I attempted to confine it, to the issue before the Senate

The Senator from Iowa has said that the Democratic party, as a party, has prevented the admission of Dakota, notwithstanding the assurances given by myself and by my honorable friend from Missouri and by other Democratic Senators, as far as they have the right to speak for that party, that that is not true, that we have been in the past, are prepared now, and will be in the future to admit this great Territory into the Union as a State upon terms of equality with the other States of the Union.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLUMB. Is he willing also to vote for an act of admission containing a covenant like that of the State of Texas, authorizing new States to be formed out of the Territory?

Mr. BUTLER. Perfectly. I have said over and over again that the best solution of this question was to admit the Territory of Dakota as a whole and leave it to the people of that State, when it became a State, to determine the question of the geographical area of the State, if it should be divided.

Mr. PLUMB. Without an enabling act?

Mr. BUTLER. No, sir.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator will admit it at some future time?

Mr. BUTLER. No, sir; I will admit it as quickly as it can be done according to the forms prescribed by the Constitution and laws.

Mr. PLUMB. When prescribed?

Mr. BUTLER. I am amazed that the Senator from Kansas should ask me that question. Fifteen out of twenty-five other States admitted into this Union have come in that way, and I will say to him that in every single instance where that regular constitutional mode has not been adopted it has been an exceptional case, as I attempted to explain in a speech which I made on this subject at the last session of Congress. In every instance where a State has been added to the Union it has been in pursuance of an enabling act by Congress except certain States referred to by the Senator from Iowa this morning, but, as I stated, those cases were exceptional. The cases of California, Oregon, Kansas, Iowa, Florida, Arkansas, Michigan, all were exceptional.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from South Carolina admits that in these cases admission was obtained without a previous enabling act from Congress. Why not give the same effect to the will of the people of Dakota now?

Mr. BUTLER. I will answer the Senator's question: because I do not believe the will of the people has been expressed. I will answer him, sir, by saying that I oppose this so-called South Dakota movement simply because, in my judgment, it is a political trick to get two Senators into this body who are not constitutionally and legally entitled to be here.

The Senator who now presides [Mr. SPOONER in the chair] stated the other day, quoting from Mr. Lincoln, that parties can not fool all the people all the time. Let me say to that Senator that the Republican party in this instance can not fool the smallest page upon this floor for one moment of time. It is so transparent, flimsy, and I was about to say flagrant in its pretensions that a blind man could almost see it.

Whilst I would not put my opposition to the admission of any Territory upon the ground that its people differed with me in political sentiment, I couple that statement with the further statement that I never will consent, if I can prevent it, to any party getting by a snap judgment a political advantage in a body where their political supremacy is rapidly waning. I hope that answers the Senator.

Mr. PLUMB. Well, Mr. President, the Senator makes a pretty broad statement, and I ask him if he did not do that same thing at one time in the organization of the Senate by putting a member of his side in the chair of the Senate, notwithstanding that there was a Republican majority elected, but three members of that party had not yet been presented for being sworn in.

Mr. BUTLER. No, sir.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator did, I think, do that very thing.

Mr. BUTLER. No, Mr. President; not at all. The Senator is mistaken in his facts, and I refer to the record to prove that he is not correct. However, that is aside from this question.

I admit, Mr. President, that I am as devoted a party man as perhaps there is on this floor; but if I know myself and know my duty to my country and to the Constitution of my country, I would perish before I would resort to some of the methods of the party to which the Senator belongs to perpetuate my party power. The Senator has indulged this morning in a very broad and sweeping statement, as did the Senator from Wisconsin the other day, arraigning the South, criticising the methods in that community, denouncing those methods, and claiming at the same time that they were governed and controlled by a judicial and non-partisan spirit for the good of the country.

Mr. President, if those two Senators and the Senator from Ohio had carried their reform sentiments into their sections of this country where there have been charges of fraud, of corruption, of bribery, of intimidation, and violence, and arson, I should have had some respect for the sincerity of their statements and some regard for the honesty of their protestation. But, sir, when they see evil in one section and close their eyes in another I must be excused if I say—and I say it without meaning to be personally disrespectful—that it descends to the level and into the very quagmire and slime of ward politics and ward-meeting controversies.

If I had the time and this were the occasion to go into ancient politics, and if I could go into those Southern States now struggling to re-establish themselves upon a basis of devotion to the Union and the institutions of this country and re-erect those disgraceful, shameful abortions of government, debauching high places of State, diffusing into the very atmosphere the stench of their corruption; those so-called State governments sustained by the Senators (who are now denouncing the present State governments) in word and deed and act, ay, more, who bolstered them up by the unwilling bayonets of the United States Army—if I could re-erect the disgraceful Republican governments in the South, hold them up and ask the country to look upon this picture and then on that one, those States as they now are with all the evils and all the abominable political heresies that characterize their elections according to the Senators, and see peace and quiet and progress and devotion to constitutional government and the Union of this country with just laws impartially executed, I think the statements of Senators who have spoken against them would be utterly scorned and driven out by intelligent people everywhere, and that they would hang their heads in shame for provoking the contrast.

But, Mr. President, something was said about slavery. I think the Senator from Wisconsin said that the first gun fired at Fort Sumter gave the death wound to slavery. So it did, sir, and the echoes from that gun rose and swelled in magnitude and volume until it sounded around the world. Slavery did go down. Speaking for myself I say I rejoice that it did; but instead of planting flowers of good-will and peace on the grave of slavery, as I think every patriot ought, the Senators who are maligning and slandering that section revive the gospel of hate and sectional animosity.

If they do not, sir, if that is not their purpose, why have they confined their animadversions to one section of this country? Why, sir, the ink is scarcely dry in the public press of this country charging the grossest, most insidious, most dangerous frauds upon the freedom of elections in the little State of Rhode Island. The country has not forgotten, and the Senators could not have forgotten, that the echoes of the election frauds and violence and outrage and wrongs in Ohio have scarcely died out in this country, and yet there is not one word of them.

I do not intend to imitate the bad example of those Senators and arraign that gallant little State of Rhode Island. I do not know, it is not my business to know, whether those charges are true or untrue, and I will not degrade my position upon this floor by arraigning a sovereign State in the settlement of her domestic affairs. Rhode Island is capable of taking care of herself, and she will. South Carolina is capable of taking care of herself, and she will; and in taking care of herself she will have due regard to the honor, and the dignity, and the character, and the welfare of this whole country. But she can do it much better than the Senator from Wisconsin or the Senator from Kansas, and so can Rhode Island attend to her affairs much better than I can. I do not intend to depart from what I conceive my duty and arraign the people of that State or any other State for the local disturbance which may have occurred. But this is rather apart from what I intended to say, and perhaps I was diverted by the questions of the Senator from Kansas.

Coming back now to what was said by the Senator from Iowa in regard to the responsibility of parties for keeping Dakota out of the Union, I will give him a little modern history which seems to have escaped his mind as it has the minds of others who have spoken upon this question. I will remind him, as I did the Senator from Missouri the other day, that the very first sound of opposition that came to the admission of Dakota came from a Republican Senator upon the other side of this Chamber, the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who, as he said, kept Dakota out of the Union to collect a debt.

But that was not all. What occurred in 1882? I give my friend from Connecticut notice that I am going to read from the proceedings of the Aberdeen convention, a body of men whom I do not know, except, I believe, a single one; but to all appearances they are intelligent, they are patriotic; they wish the good of the country; they are evidently intelligent men, and all Republicans from whom I have quoted. They all belong to this paradise of Dakota, this country which the Senator from Connecticut says is in such a deplorable state of vassalage, horrible to think of, unsuited to be inhabited by any civilized man in a Territorial form of government. Yet with a rapidity that is marvelous and phenomenal, immigrants rush in wildly, earnestly, anxiously, and put their necks in the halter and perish by the oppressions of the Federal Government.

When the president of that convention took his seat he made this statement, and the records of Congress sustain him:

> The first real effort, however, that was made to secure the division of the Territory was made in January, 1882.

I wish the Senator from Iowa were in his seat that he might hear this:

> A mass convention was held at Sioux Falls, largely attended by representative men. A committee of over one hundred men was selected to go to Washington to aid the Delegate in Congress in securing the division of Dakota and the admission of the south half.

Mark you, Mr. President, to secure the admission of the south half of Dakota.

> At that time the politicians of the Territory of Dakota—the admission party of the Territory—were in harmony with the Administration and with both Houses of Congress. This committee went to Washington, and they labored with the Delegate all winter; they were the very friends of the Territory of Dakota. They were able to accomplish nothing, however. This was upon the very eve of the Presidential election.

There, sir, is the action of a Republican Executive, a Republican Senate, and a Republican House turning the south half of Dakota away from Congress and giving her a kick as they sent her off; and yet the Senators say that the Democratic party is responsible for keeping Dakota out of the Union.

Mr. PLATT. We were not playing any political trick then.

Mr. BUTLER. Ah, Mr. President, you had not then elected two bogus Republican Senators, in a bogus State government, by a bogus legislature. Now you have; hence the change of heart and impatient zeal to admit her. On every occasion when a proposition has been made to admit Dakota it has been antagonized by the other side of this Chamber.

The Senator from Wisconsin asked me the other day if I did not admit that the south half of Dakota, the State of South Dakota, as he called it, had territory enough, and population enough, and all the qualities for a State? I tell him frankly, yes; I have no sort of doubt about that; not the slightest. So would one-half of New York have the necessary qualifications for a separate State. So would one-half of Kansas have the qualifications necessary for a State. So would one-half of Pennsylvania, and I think not unlikely one-half of Colorado and of California.

Let me advert for a moment to the observation of the Senator from Iowa that the Democratic party had kept South Dakota out of the Union, and refresh his memory by the facts as proven by the record. I should like to ask the Senator if he were in his seat, if he made such an eloquent, stirring, logical, strong protest when the small, insignificant Territory of Colorado was applying for admission? We did not hear the Senator then. Colorado had 104,000 square miles, and yet the Senator sat in his seat, I presume placidly and amiably, as he always does, and permitted this great outrage upon the other States of the Union. Colorado came in bouncing, with 104,000 square miles. The Senator did not then see the danger to the small States in admitting very large ones.

But the Senator says that Dakota is purely an agricultural State and must always be. Why? We had a lecture yesterday by the Senator from Ohio in regard to how we should be good boys down in the South and behave ourselves, diversify our industries, maintain a war tariff, and if we would only vote the Republican ticket he would take us to his arms and embrace us as brothers. If any man from that section, however, dared to say that his soul was his own, or had the hardihood and temerity to vote the Democratic ticket, he was a rebel and a traitor, and a perjurer, and a villain; but if every pore of his body was reeking with treason and crime, rebel brigadier all piled on him thick and heavy, and he votes the Republican ticket he is cleansed in a moment and taken into every heart and bosom of the Republican party. So it is.

It is said that the State of Dakota must always remain agricultural. Why? Have not the people of Dakota as much right to diversify their industries as Iowa? Have they not as much right to manufacture lager beer in Dakota as in Iowa; and when they get the plant established and large amounts invested in lager beer breweries have they not as much right to confiscate that property as in Iowa? That is one of the industries. Have they not a right to manufacture cotton or woolen goods there if they choose, or wagons, or to put up blast furnaces? Why must it always be agricultural?

At present the largest part of the vote of Dakota is agricultural, and I am therefore not surprised that a gentleman, who I am glad to say is presented prominently to the people of this country for the votes of the people in a future election, should want to cultivate the largest majority in that Territory. But there is nothing in that argument. Dakota may have agriculture this year, and in ten years she may be teeming with industries of all kinds.

But to return. The statements made by Senators upon the other side are not borne out by the facts when they say the Democratic party have opposed the admission of Dakota.

They ask us why we oppose the admission of the State of South Dakota. Will some Senator be good enough to point out to me on the map of this country such a geographical entity as South Dakota? Will he point out such a political entity as the State of South Dakota? Of course it can not be done. The very first statement in this bill is an arraignment of the whole movement. It says that the State of South Dakota is hereby declared to be a State of the United States. Where is the State of South Dakota on the map? Can you point it out? Where, I repeat, is the political entity of the State of South Dakota? It can not be found. It is not there.

When other Senators have come upon this floor as representatives of States they have generally been accompanied by credentials from the governors of those States. Mr. President, you presented yours, and you could not be sworn in until they were read from the desk. Where are the credentials of these two so-called Senators from the State of South Dakota? By whom were they signed? They must have been signed by a blizzard and countersigned by a snow-bank. I had supposed that in order to get a seat upon this floor a Senator must present his credentials, regularly made out by the governor of a State. Who is the governor of South Dakota? Where is he? What are his powers? The mere statement of the proposition carries with it its own absurdity.

Yet when we present an enabling act, regular in form, fair to all parties, in accordance with the established precedents of the Government, and ask the Republican side of the Senate to vote "ay" on it, every single vote, if I am not mistaken, will be recorded against it. There might have been something like fairness, something like sincerity, something like a due regard to the orderly proceeding in this as in all similar cases, if the majority of the committee had provided in their bill that this constitution should be resubmitted to the people of all the Territory, and to have had a reorganization of the entire State government under the bill, and a constitution as voted upon by all the people of all the Territory brought to Congress, having elected, if you choose, or if it were practicable, the same Senators and the same governor and the same Representatives to the House of Representatives, and have them present themselves. There would have been some fairness in that. But, no, this political junta, headed by a new firm of political evangelists—not Moody and Sankey, but Moody and Edgarton—say, "No, the State will not be admitted in this generation of men and women in Dakota if we are not allowed to dictate to Congress our terms and say in what manner we shall be admitted." Very well, Mr. President, if they can stand it I expect some of the rest of us can.

I join the Senator from Iowa, and I implore his political allies on the other side of the Senate Chamber to stop this higgling for party advantage, which he says is evanescent and passes away. If he will get upon some common ground of fairness and justice to all parties, to the people of the United States and to the people of the Territory of Dakota, and admit her into the Union upon terms of equality with the other States, I will meet him more than half way, and I believe that my political friends on this side of the Chamber will do it; but, sir, we will never consent, I believe (I speak, of course, only for myself), to a proceeding which proposes to settle the political supremacy in this body, rapidly drifting away from them, by seating upon this floor two Senators elected as these two have been. That is what it means, Mr. President, and that is all it means; and all this sounding of gongs and diversion from the real issues is intended to cover up and conceal from the public the real motives behind all this movement.

But, sir, the Senator from Ohio, as he usually does, after indulging in a tirade of abuse and misrepresentation of one entire section of this country, condescends to deliver us a lecture as to how we shall conduct ourselves in a certain section of this country. He then, referring to the observation submitted by the Senator from Louisiana, who is absent, sick, and who will take care of himself in his own good time, said in effect at least—I do not quote his language—he is surprised that any Senator so elected could take advantage of the wrongs, and the outrages, and the bloodshed, and murder, and take his constitutional oath as a Senator of the United States. Suppose I were to retort upon him, which I will not do, by saying to him that he got the advantage of his own wrong as a co-conspirator in the greatest fraud that ever disgraced American politics; maneuvered himself into the Treasury Department of the United States; and that he did more—which I do not believe can be said of any Southern man—he rewarded his co-conspirators in that crime and fraud out of the public Treasury of the United States by giving them office. I will not say that the Senator from Ohio did that, but it would have been just as competent for me and for the Senator from Louisiana to have retorted that upon him as it is for him to insult the dignity of his fellow-Senators by saying that they are here by fraud and bloodshed and outrage at elections.

Mr. HAWLEY. But, if I may be pardoned, the Senator from South Carolina would say that boldly concerning the Senator from Ohio if it were true, would he not?

Mr. BUTLER. No, sir; I would not upon this floor. I have too much regard for the decencies and proprieties of life and the decorum of this body.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator has practically said it, however.

Mr. BUTLER. I said that I might retort it. What I mean to say is that that charge is just as much true as the other. For one I can submit, for the peace and good feeling and harmony of this country, to a great many slanders and misrepresentations; but the Senator from Ohio went to the verge and I think beyond the verge of decorum in this high forum at least in making these charges upon men who are his equals in every aspect of life.

I am not in the habit of taking advantage of my position in this body, where I am protected for words uttered in debate, to assail the humblest man in this country; but when a Senator goes out of his way, and, as I think, maligns not only independent commonwealths in this country, but every man, woman, and child in them, he has reached a point where I feel constrained to advert to it.

I wish to say again, and for the last time in this debate, that I would not object to the admission of Dakota because of the preponderance of Republican votes in that State, or because if she were regularly admitted she would send Republican Senators to this body and to the other branch of Congress. I believe I am as good a party man as any on this floor, but in the creation of States we ought, at least, whether we do it or not, to rise above mere higgling for party advantage, to borrow the language of the Senator from Iowa, and go about it with that solemnity and deliberation which so important an act involves.

I tender now and here my vote for an enabling act, because I believe that is the regular constitutional form, and I am sincere and conscientious and honest in that. I tender now my vote for the admission of this Territory into the Union as a State, but I do not recognize any such geographical division as South Dakota, and there being no such division I can not vote for the bill of the majority.

Mr. CALL obtained the floor.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Florida permit me to make a motion?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. VEST. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. PLATT. Will not the Senator withhold the motion until we can see what becomes of this debate to-day?

Mr. VEST. I took it for granted that the Senate would carry out its order, adopted by unanimous consent, to take the vote to-day. This is the second agreement of that sort we have had, and I have never known the Senate for the second time to rescind it. My understanding is that we are to close the debate to-day, and I submit the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

FLORIDA PUBLIC LAND INVESTIGATION.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the following resolution, reported favorably thereon, and the resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the expenses attending the investigation of alleged illegal and fraudulent conveyances of public lands in the State of Florida, authorized by the resolution of the Senate of the 18th instant, be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

ADMISSION OF DAKOTA,

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 185) to provide for the admission of the State of Dakota into the Union, and for the organization of the Territory of Lincoln.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CHACE. I ask the Senator from Florida to yield to me for a few minutes.

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. CHACE. Mr. President, I was not in the Chamber at the time the Senator from South Carolina made his allusion to the recent election in the State of Rhode Island, and I am not aware of the absolute statement what it was.

Mr. BUTLER. I will repeat briefly what I said. I stated that the newspapers were full of charges of fraud, bribery, and corruption in that State, but that it was no part of my business and I did not undertake to say whether they were true or untrue; that the State of Rhode Island could take care of herself as the State of South Carolina could take care of herself. That was the substance of my statement.

Mr. CHACE. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] took occasion yesterday to make a similar allusion, and inasmuch as it has been repeated again I feel it my duty to defend the good name of the Republican party of the State of Rhode Island and to repel the slander. I denounce it in so far as it respects the action of the Republicans in the State of Rhode Island as an unqualified falsehood, and I declare that there has never been in any State in this Union, so far as the action of the Republican party is concerned, a fairer election than was the last one which occurred in that State.

The State was flooded with money, with Democratic money, money furnished, as we are advised and believe, by men who are organized to manage the affairs of the Democratic party, national and State. The rum-sellers, the saloon-keepers of the State of Rhode Island, we are informed, were called upon and contributed without exception. The Mugwump free-trade organizations in Massachusetts, we are advised, contributed liberally towards the Democratic vote. How much of funds which had been collected in the Departments at Washington from office-holders, contrary to law, was used by the Democracy of Rhode Island I know not, but this much we do know, that the evidences of the corrupt use of money by the Democracy of the State of Rhode Island were patent in that State.

This is another instance of the man who has committed larceny running down the street and crying, "Stop thief!" I will not sit here and hear the good name and fair fame of my little Commonwealth traduced in this way. Gentlemen on the other side seize on these slanders published by Democratic papers and Mugwump papers and roll them under their tongue as a sweet morsel, and they hurl them at us here as a countervailing argument, as something to break the force of the charges which have been made against the election procedures in certain Southern States.

I do not intend at this time to enter into that question, but I wish to say that the charge made by the Senator from Missouri that the vote of the State of Rhode Island was suppressed is an error. I do not charge that he intentionally misrepresented the fact, but he quotes from the last census in the table that he gives and states the voting population of the State of Rhode Island to be 76,898. That is simply an enumeration of the male population within the State who have arrived at the voting age and not of the qualified voters. Many of those men lack the qualification from a lack of residence, many others from not being naturalized, and many others from not having qualified themselves to vote under the laws of the State.

I have not the exact figures with me, but I can state with sufficient accuracy that the popular vote at the last election in the State of Rhode Island was just about 80 per cent. of the voting population of the State, and further, that the Democratic vote at the election one year ago was the largest Democratic vote ever cast in the State, and that the Democratic vote at the last election was within about 600 of the number cast the year before. The result in the State grew out of the fact that the good Republican people of Rhode Island having experienced one year of Democratic misrule were entirely satisfied, or entirely dissatisfied, and they rose up and hurled them from power. There was no corruption, there was no unfair means, there was no suppression of the vote, and the assertion that the Republican party used money corruptly is false and without foundation.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Florida permit me to say a word in reply to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. VEST. I distinctly stated in my allusion to the State of Rhode Island that the authority for the statement came from the Providence Journal, a paper which belonged to Senator Anthony during his lifetime, and the ownership of which I do not now know. I ascertained by an examination of the record of newspapers and their political tendencies in the United States, which is open to the inspection of the Senator from Rhode Island, that this is a Republican paper, and I have been told by newspaper men since that debate that it never has supported a single candidate of the Democratic party.

Mr. CHACE. I have no doubt that my friend from Missouri believes what he says, and I have no doubt he will be very glad to be corrected.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course I know nothing personally about it.

Mr. CHACE. It is true the Providence Journal was formerly owned by the late lamented Senator Anthony, and that during his life it was a sound, staunch Republican paper; but at the present time it is not only not a Republican paper, but it does not pretend to be such.

Mr. VEST. It certainly is not a Democratic paper.

Mr. CHACE. The Senator may acknowledge it or not, as he pleases; but I beg leave to say that it supports Democratic doctrine in regard to every single question which is at issue between the Republican and the Democratic party to-day. It supports the Mills tariff bill. It supports the President of the United States in his policy generally; it is opposed to internal improvements. In fact it supports all Democratic measures and opposes all Republican measures. It announces itself as an independent paper.

I suppose that the Senator will agree with me in one respect, he being a Democrat and I a Republican. I have no doubt that he will look upon an independent paper or a Mugwump paper very much as I do, and that he would say of it as we read in Holy Writ, "Thou art neither cold nor hot. * * * So, then, I will spew thee out of my mouth."

Mr. VEST. I do not know that there is any issue between the Senator from Rhode Island and myself in regard to the question of independence in politics, what is denominated in common parlance the Mugwump doctrine. That is not the issue. This paper has never supported any Democrat; that is certain.

Mr. CHACE. Oh, yes; this paper supported the entire Democratic ticket a year ago.

Mr. VEST. Yet it is not regarded as a Democratic paper.

Mr. CHACE. It advocated the election of the Democratic candidate for governor and the Democratic candidates for the Legislature openly and continuously.

Mr. VEST. I can take no issue with the Senator's assertions in regard to a State the size of Rhode Island, for it is to be taken for granted that the Senator knows intimately every fact within its domain. Therefore this is not a question of controversy between us, and can not be in the nature of the case. I stated distinctly that I had no personal knowledge in regard to it; but now I call the attention of the Senator to the unfairness of his charging the Democratic party with intending to do wrong and injustice to his people when he says that we have quoted here from a newspaper and then denounce it as an absolute falsehood. Yesterday the Senator from Ohio arraigned the whole South upon newspaper statements, reports of politicians and opinions expressed by public men, and one of them a member of this body; and yet when we quote from a paper, the largest in as small a State as Rhode Island, published in its principal city, a paper which is not a Democratic paper—if it has supported any Democrat it has not done it in any political sense, but for personal or selfish purposes—we are told that the whole Democratic party has committed a wrong and an outrage upon the people of Rhode Island.

When I made the statement from the census the Senator from Vermont interjected the inquiry whether I referred to the qualified voters or the persons over twenty-one years of age. My colleague [Mr. COCKRELL] answered before I could that it was the voters under the State law.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator's colleague was mistaken in that statement. The enumeration is that of all males in the State above twenty-one years of age.

Mr. VEST. I was about to observe that if left to my own judgment about the matter I should have stated from what I know of the enumeration of all the voters in the United States that it meant those over twenty-one years of age, because there are some 12,000,000 stated as voters in the whole Union, and they include Japanese, Chinese, Indians, and a great many who do not exercise the right of suffrage, but who are still in the enumeration, which fact I knew. They take down all those above the age of twenty-one years and who would be as a matter of assumption entitled to a right to vote.

I meant no injustice to Rhode Island. I should like to know from either of the Senators how many qualified voters there are in that State under the State laws, which I understand require a real-estate qualification.

Mr. ALDRICH. About fifty-odd thousand at the time of the recent election. We cast about 80 per cent. of our vote. I see that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] is anxious to know how many people were disqualified.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator for information tell us how many persons over twenty-one years of age are not permitted to vote under the laws of Rhode Island—who are disfranchised?

Mr. ALDRICH. By the enumeration made in 1885 by the State the number was found to be 3,402, as I remember, of foreigners who were naturalized and who could not vote on account of the real-estate qualification.

Mr. VEST. Do I understand the Senator to say that there are 50,000 qualified voters in the State?

Mr. ALDRICH. There were over 50,000 qualified voters at the time of the last election.

Mr. VEST. And that only 3,400 were disqualified by the property qualification?

Mr. ALDRICH. There were 3,400 who were naturalized and disqualified by the property qualification.

Mr. VEST. Then that census is the most misleading document that was ever issued in this country.

Mr. ALDRICH. It never has been doubted in Rhode Island, so far as I know.

Mr. VEST. The census shows that by the actual enumeration there were seventy-odd thousand voters in the State—that is, persons over twenty-one years of age.

Mr. ALDRICH. But the Senator must bear in mind that there are twenty-four thousand foreigners in the State who have never been naturalized, who as aliens would not be entitled to vote in any State in the Union. There were a certain number of our people who failed to qualify themselves by registration, and this would account for the discrepancy between the aggregate of the numbers I have mentioned and the enumeration of males above twenty-one years of age by the census.

Mr. VEST. I meant no injustice to the State of Rhode Island. I took the census as I found it, and quoted it without any other intention than to elicit the facts.

Mr. CHACE. I wish to say one more word. The way this matter has been left does not seem to me to be entirely clear. Probably the Senator from Missouri did not observe what I said. There is a very considerable number of people within the State, as there almost always are, who have removed from other States, who have not yet acquired a residence. There are others who have failed to register. There are others who are disqualified for other reasons. There is a large number of excellent citizens of the State who came from the Dominion of Canada to seek employment within the State of Rhode Island. Many of them are not naturalized; at least a large number of them are not. Now, all those men who were of the age of twenty-one were enumerated in the census of 1880. But that election in the State of Rhode Island, the last election, and all elections have been fair and open, and that every qualified citizen had an opportunity without let or hindrance to cast his vote as he pleased, and when the vote was cast that it was counted, I challenge any man to bring a scintilla of evidence to the contrary.

I stand here to defend my State from these calumnies—calumnies set on foot by partisan papers—papers disappointed, discouraged, and sickened at the honest verdict of the people of Rhode Island against Democratic misrule. I wish to read a remark of the Senator from Missouri. In his speech the other day he used the following language:

> But the Senator brings newspapers here with stories of outrage and murder and crimes innumerable. Ah, Mr. President, where would the Senator from Ohio or myself be if the newspapers were to be quoted against us? Where would any member of the Senate be? What would become of any public man in this country if newspapers are to be taken as evidence before any tribunal?

This whole story is based upon the vile slanders of partisan newspapers who are disappointed at the result of the honest vote of the State of Rhode Island.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, it is my intention to submit a very few brief observations upon the question of the admission of Dakota as a State under the pending bill.

The question of the degree of interest which the people of the different States may feel in public questions and in exercising the right of suffrage is one that has no concern whatever with the bill now before the Senate, with the question of the admission of Dakota either as one or two States, but I think it is due to the people of Florida that, before submitting any remarks upon that subject, I should put them right by comparison with other portions of the country and furnish the conclusive refutation of all the aspersions which have been made upon the Southern States so frequently, and which have been the predicate of so much hostile legislation, the coroner's inquest bill, and the various acts of Congress touching elections in the Southern States.

Facts are what the people want. Facts are what Senators and legislatures are required to have to legislate upon, and not the vain parade of assertion as the predicate of party advantage and party success.

We have been entertained here for days upon one of the most important public questions which can be presented to a legislator—the admission of a new political community to exercise important political influences, not alone upon the people of the State, not alone upon the people of to-day, but upon the generations yet to come and upon all the States which now compose the existing body-politic. We have been entertained with assertions in regard to the suppression of the vote in the Southern States, to what purpose, with what reasonable connection with this bill with the question of the admission of Dakota, can not be seen.

I wish to say that the evidence shows that by a comparison of the State of Florida, with nearly one-half the voting population of the State of Florida of the colored race, with the State of Massachusetts, black and white, the vote in the State of Florida is larger, a larger proportion of the actual voting people qualified by law to vote than in the State of Massachusetts. That fact should forever set at rest this whole question of unfair methods, of unfair disposition, of violence and intimidation on the part of the Southern white people toward the colored citizens.

The figures are, as I shall give them, from the last census, which, whether incorrect or correct, is the only accurate data, and is as fair for one as the other. The last census gave Massachusetts 1,783,085 people, of whom all but 19,303 were white. At the same time Florida had 269,493 people, of whom 126,888, or nearly one-half, were colored. The Congressional apportionment gives Florida two Congressmen and Massachusetts twelve. At the last election for Congressmen in Florida there were cast 21,882 votes in the First district and 34,895 in the Second—a total of 56,777, or an average of 28,388 for each district.

At the same election in Massachusetts the total vote cast in the First district was only 16,071, and in all twelve districts 245,304, or an average of but 20,442 for each district. In other words, while it took 34,895 votes to elect a Congressman in one district of Florida, 16,071, or less than one-half as many, sufficed to elect a Congressman in one district of Massachusetts; and while in the whole State of Florida it took an average of 28,388 to elect a Congressman, it required an average of only 20,442 votes to elect a Congressman in Massachusetts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will my friend from Florida allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Suppose that in the State of Massachusetts the counting officers had doctored the returns and had only returned half the votes cast, then the comparison of course would not be so satisfactory?

Mr. CALL. That is true, but——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Or to put the other side of the picture, suppose that in the State of Florida the returning officers had resorted to a similar process of doctoring and had reported a very large vote that was never cast at all?

Mr. CALL. I will suppose a case, too. I have just as much right, and there is just as much evidence for me to suppose that the returning officers in Massachusetts returned twice as many, even of the small vote that was returned there, as that they returned an excess in the State of Florida. In other words, the Senator from Vermont without evidence, without a particle of reason, is making an assertion of criminal conduct against men for which he has no authority and no reason whatever.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will my friend yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. CALL. Unquestionably I do.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In the first place, I did not make any assertion at all; I merely put a supposed case. In the second place, and now, I will assert that I have information which leads me to believe (it may not be good for anybody else and it is of a general character) that in general the reign of violence in the States where a white minority do not think, as they put it, that it is safe to allow a colored majority to have the reins of government, has passed the stage of open violence that existed some years ago, and has come in the true course of progress from deep barbarism toward a better civilization at last to the age of fraud, and that it is the customary course, where anything is supposed to be gained by it, to manipulate the returns according to the necessities of the occasion. Now, I should not be candid if I did not say that I believe that to be so.

Mr. CALL. I challenge the Senator from Vermont here and now to bring any evidence whatever from any respectable person, or of any fact which evidences or tends to evidence the truth of his statements in regard to the State of Florida or the vote which I am referring to here. I aver that I have never heard from any Republican in the State of Florida an allegation of that kind—not one; and I venture to say that the Republicans of the State of Florida will not point to a single fact which maintains the statement of the Senator from Vermont. There were some years ago in the Presidential election various statements made by men whom the Republicans of the State of Florida denounce and discredit, and which they themselves proved even four years ago were utterly false in regard to the election in that State. The frauds committed in the State of Florida in the Presidential election in 1876 by the Republicans, by which Mr. Hayes was placed in the Presidency; the frauds in Alachua County, at Archer precinct, where an entire return was manufactured and a false signature and oath attached, increasing the Republican vote, which was proved and admitted by its Republican perpetrator and rejected by a Republican court, ought to make the Senator from Vermont silent on this subject.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Florida to two testimonials, neither of which I have in my desk, but they are perfectly familiar to the country. Within the last ten days it is said throughout the press, and I have no doubt it is true—the article is quoted verbatim, and I have never seen any contradiction of it—by Mr. Henry Watterson, of Kentucky, an eminent Southern Democrat, the editor of a prominent Southern Democratic paper, that he should not be a man of honor if he undertook to deny that the colored majority in many of the Southern States had been overcome and the colored people not permitted to vote. I do not give the exact language, but that is the substance of it. I am speaking now of a publication made in his paper within a fortnight. There is also an article by the same eminent gentleman in the Forum, stating the same thing in substance. The Charleston News and Courier has again and again (unless what purport to be extracts from that paper are forgeries) declared that there have been methods much to be lamented in regard to the elections in that State, which the Democrats there have felt compelled to resort to, and hoping that they will not be resorted to in the future. Now, what do these things mean, if the Senator knows?

Mr. CALL. Well, I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question. If I were to go into the newspapers to bring from the State of Massachusetts the assertions of crime, of outrage, of violence, and compare with all the newspaper statements he can find in regard to the State of Florida as to crimes there, in proportion it would be all against Massachusetts. He is taking the newspapers. Mr. Watterson is a brilliant and sensational writer for his newspaper, who expresses an opinion without any accurate knowledge of the facts necessary to justify his opinion. If he means to say that other agencies are used than those that prevail in the Northern States, and that there is a greater proportion of unfair methods than exist in the Northern States, he is mistaken and can not prove his assertion by facts.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I never heard of a Massachusetts newspaper, Democratic, Republican, or Mugwump, that claimed that the elections in Massachusetts had not been perfectly fair and honest and free, and the votes honestly counted. A few years ago the committee of the dominant party in Massachusetts, when the Legislature was counting the vote for governor, on the face of the apparent returns there being no popular choice, so that the Legislature would have the right to elect the governor, discovered a discrepancy which showed that the Democratic candidate, an eminent member of the other party, had been elected by one majority on the popular vote. That was disclosed, and the Democratic governor took his seat.

What I speak of is not the charges made by partisan presses against their political opponents. I agree with the substance of what was said by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], which has been quoted correctly by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] in that regard. These are statements made by newspaper presses edited by men of high standing and character in their own party and in the country—one of them an eminent member of the other House with whom I myself served there, I think; at any rate he has been in that House—confessing or stating what they are obliged to admit to be true against their own party. I think that is a source of evidence which is to be respected. There is no use in meeting this thing without touching the merits of it. The Senator from Florida, who is a candid and honest and brave man, must know perfectly well that a statement of Mr. Henry Watterson, of Kentucky, in regard to the election conduct of the Democratic party at the South is not to be met by a sneer at newspapers.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Massachusetts will not pretend to say that the opinion of Mr. Henry Watterson upon a public question is evidence of a fact. I am referring to the statistics for the purpose of showing whether votes were suppressed or not; I am showing the enumeration of population in a State where the suffrage is universal, where there is no restriction from taxes or from qualifications, and the Senator from Vermont asserts a hypothetical case, conveying a statement or insinuation that these statistics were produced by fraud in suppressing the vote or in making a fraudulent return. Then the Senator from Massachusetts refers to the opinions of certain men upon a public question and not in regard to facts within their knowledge, but a supposed result of certain conditions of race.

Why the Senator would hardly present a respectable position before a court or a jury even upon the subject of his own coroner's-inquest law in attempting to obtain a verdict by even Mr. Henry Watterson's opinion and the fact that in his belief the Southern colored majority had not been overcome, or, to go further, had been overcome by violence. There is the fact of the enumeration; there is the vote of Massachusetts; it takes twice as many people, according to the actual returns in Florida, to elect a member of Congress as it takes in Massachusetts. How does that happen? The census is as fair to Massachusetts as it is to Florida. The insinuation that these returns is a fraud is without foundation. Here is the return made in a Republican county, and never charged by any one there to be fraudulent; that settles the fact; that disproves this whole assertion of the Senator from Massachusetts of any force or even plausibility. I repeat again, it took but 16,071 voters in a district in Massachusetts to elect a Congressman in one district, while in the whole State of Florida it took an average of 28,388.

Take, for instance, Duval County, in Florida, which has a decided preponderance of negroes in its total population of 19,430. At the election of 1886 Duval County cast 4,910 votes. Take, now, Barnstable County, in Massachusetts, which has only 420 negroes among its 31,797 people. It is obvious that the total vote of Barnstable County ought to bear the same proportion to the total vote of Duval County that their respective populations bear to each other; or, stated according to the rule of three, 19,430 : 31,797 :: 4,910 : 8,035. But in point of fact only 2,713 votes were cast in Barnstable County, or but a trifle more than one-third of the number which ought to have been cast. It is clear that nearly two-thirds of the vote of Barnstable County was suppressed; but the full enormity of the offense does not appear until one reflects that by this suppression every man who does vote in the Massachusetts county really exercises three times as much power at the polls as every man who votes in the Florida county.

The disparity is not so great, taking the whole of each State, but still it is serious enough to demand remedy. It has been shown that it takes on the average 28,388 votes to elect a Congressman in Florida, and of course it ought to take at least as many on the average to elect a Congressman in Massachusetts. But in point of fact the suppressed vote in Massachusetts was so large that an average of only 20,442 votes elected a Congressman. The result is that a total vote in Massachusetts of only 245,304 elected twelve Congressmen, whereas the Florida ratio entitles the State to only nine. In other words, through the suppression of votes Massachusetts gets three Congressmen to which she has no right if held to the standard of Florida.

In the Republican county of Duval, in the State of Florida, in which the vote is largely, perhaps seven-tenths or three-fifths of the Republican vote in the county of Duval, in which is the city of Jacksonville, of the colored race, yet the returns for a series of years show that in that county they give a Republican majority of from 900 to 1,200, and 1,500, varying between those figures.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I interrupt my friend?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish to interrupt him if it is disagreeable.

Mr. CALL. I am perfectly willing to yield.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely wish to ask for information and to make no comment upon it, if the Senator will kindly inform us what is the regulation in Florida in respect of the selection of the officers having charge of elections? Are they elected or appointed as they are in Vermont, for instance, by the people of the counties and the towns, as we call them (called parishes usually in the South, I believe), or are they elected or appointed under some general State administration?

Mr. CALL. My colleague [Mr. PASCO], who was a member of the last Legislature of Florida, which made the new constitution under which the present laws have been put in force, informs me that they are required to be two of one party and one of the other; and that law has been strictly adhered to under the Democratic rule, while it was not under the old Republican rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not on the question of who the election officers are, but under what form of law and by what authority and by what officers are they selected?

Mr. CALL. They are appointed by the county commissioners of the county.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Who elects or appoints the county commissioners?

Mr. CALL. They are appointed by the governor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That brings it back then to the general State administration. That was what I wanted to get at.

Mr. CALL. I do not see anything in that to impeach the honesty of the men appointed. But be that as it may, there is the fact that Duval County, a colored county, gives a full Republican majority larger than the vote in Barnstable County, Massachusetts, in proportion to the population. That settles the fact about false returns. There is a Republican county, and the colored vote making it a Republican county, and there is the evidence of the actual vote larger than it is in the county of Barnstable, in the State of Massachusetts, not for one election, but for a series of years under Democratic rule; and if I had time I can prove by the records of the United States court of the Yellow Bluff frauds that under Republican rule, even in this county, this was not true.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Was that vote for a member of Congress, or for governor, or at what election?

Mr. CALL. The vote was for a member of Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. At the last election?

Mr. CALL. At the last election. That is the vote always there. It is not for one case, but always, and it has been so for years. The majority varies of course, according to the candidates, the degree of prejudice or partiality they may have for them, but always the vote has been in that way for years. That settles that question. Now, I want to say a few words in regard to the question of Dakota.

What has the question of the taxable value of guns in the State of Alabama to do with the admission of Dakota? What has it to do with the great production that she grows and sends abroad every year? Does anybody believe so preposterous a statement as that a great agricultural community supporting hundreds of thousands of colored people in comfort makes this vast amount of production with guns and pistols, instead of with plows and agricultural implements?

What has it to do, if true, with the question of forming a new political organization in this country; and how are we to treat the question as legislators amenable to a sound public opinion both in the present and in the future discharging this high trust reposed in us? What is it that we are doing? We are proposing to organize a new political life to join with us in controlling and directing the associated efforts, political, industrial, of a great organization and a vast population. From what points of view are we to consider the creation of this new function and new power amongst the people of the earth and in our own organization of States?

It has been asserted here and argued for weeks as if the people of a State to be created were alone concerned. The Constitution of the United States says Congress may admit new States. "New States may be admitted by the Congress into the Union." That "may be" means unquestionably, according to the sovereign will and discretion of the persons—the Congress to which the functions of government have been intrusted here to say when and how new States shall be created. Then what considerations should govern us? With this party has nothing to do. With this the suppression of votes in the Southern States has nothing to do. With this the indifference of the people of Massachusetts or the indifference of the people of Florida, a discrimination of one-half in the exercise of political power against this or that State, has nothing to do. What are the questions with which a reasonable man can justify or vindicate himself in his vote upon this subject? Manifestly these considerations relate, first, to the continued power and security of the States already in the Union, of the political organism that is to create new States, of the 65,000,000 people who are now States. No one ever contended that new States could be created properly if that creation was to antagonize or affect injuriously the existing body-politic.

None, I presume, would say that it was fair or proper or wise to create twenty or thirty new States out of the Territory of Dakota. No one will deny that this power has been injudiciously exercised in some cases already by the creation of small States.

Then, Mr. President, the considerations are manifest which should govern this question. First, the welfare and happiness and continued power and permanence of the States already created; second, the welfare and happiness and permanence of the new States to be created and admitted. From that standpoint how are we to view this question? Certainly it is not by making States because they are agricultural; not by making them large or small because of the character of industries which exist among them. There is no permanence in that. We must have some regard in the exercise of the powers of government to the equilibrium of forces which now and hereafter are to exist in this country. We have 65,000,000 now; very soon there will be 100,000,000, and in the near future a far greater number of people.

It is not beyond the bounds of a reasonable statesmanship that Canada and Cuba, and Mexico, and perhaps Central America, may ask to be admitted into this Union of States. Shall we disregard the possibilities of such contingencies? Shall we create this Territory into small States like Rhode Island or Delaware, or even Massachusetts? Or shall we make them so large that the difference between this body and the other House in numbers will always exist, and that the number of persons in this body will bear some proportion towards a large and somewhat difficult body to manage as is the House of Representatives? Shall we preserve the idea of States so large that the Senators who represent them here will continue to be a conservative element in the Government, or shall we make the two bodies alike in all respects, throwing open the whole scheme of our Government to change, and to an essentially different character from that which it now possesses? Shall we create new States so as to concentrate the political power of the National Government in the Northwest, so as to sectionalize it, and again create sectional difficulties? Are we entirely sure that there may not be other questions besides the dead negro of the past upon which sections of the Republic may not divide?

Mr. President, I take it that is the only question to be considered in the creation of new States. Admitting the sufficiency of population, admitting the identity and sympathy of feeling, admitting the devotion to republican institutions and to our form of government, what other question is there to be considered? I venture to say that can be done in only one way, and that is by enlarging the areas of the States now to be created and those to be created in the future. In my judgment there can be no rational argument presented against this view, there has been none presented. The suggestion of imperial States has no significance. You have in the House of Representatives the full representation of the people. You have in this body a representation made equal in respect to the States, the political organization, the territory embraced within certain limits and designated by certain names as States. And the preservation of this equality of rights in this body is the great force of this Government, is its great and conservative force against sectionalism. That is the great point. Shall we give the States to be made in the Northwest territory such representation in the Senate as their increasing population will give them in the House of Representatives until they have ascendency over all other portions of the country, or shall we make them autonomies so large that they will bear their proper and just proportion of political strength and power, not as agricultural States, but as States differenced from the Middle and the East and South by distance, by climate, by the absence of that direct and immediate intercourse which even railroads will not bring.

I venture to say, then, that politically and philosophically there is no ground on which to consider this question except to so arrange these States that one section shall not have the absolute or permanent preponderance over the others. The war has passed away and slavery has gone; and my distinguished friend from Ohio, for whom I have a high respect for his ability, and the Senator from Massachusetts, are laboring in vain and are deluded when they think there remains in the people of this country any remnant of feeling which can be excited by the recollections of the war. All that is gone, and gone forever; and in the Southern States there is more sympathy, more protection, more regard for the colored race and the colored voter than there is or ever can be anywhere else, and less of violence than there is among the white race in the North toward each other, and less of intimidation and corrupt influence than there is in the party contests of the Northern States.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator permit me to ask him if he understood me to say anything about the events of the war?

Mr. CALL. Oh, no; but I was referring to the Senator's ideas about the colored people as a remnant of the war.

Mr. HOAR. What does the Senator refer to as violence in the Northern States?

Mr. CALL. Men killing one another; fathers killing their children; husbands killing their wives; trials and convictions for bribery, and election frauds. I see in the newspapers every day, in Boston, New York, Chicago, Cincinnati, everywhere, more crime than there is in the Southern States, more heinous crimes in proportion to population committed by individuals of the same race, one upon the other, than can be found in any Southern State.

Now, I venture to say that there are no communities—I would be willing to make the comparison with the statistics and man by man—where there is so much peace, so much good will, so little of crime, and so little of violence, as in all the Southern States; and I might go further and say, take it in the aggregate, it has always been so, and these statements are nothing but exaggerations and misapprehensions, having their existence only in the passions and prejudices that were the result of the war, and in the antagonisms and interests of party strife.

Mr. President, the reason why the Southern States have become Democratic, or, if you please, have come under the ascendency of the white people in those States, whether Republicans or Democrats, is simply because of the ascendency of a superior intelligence, superior wealth-giving occupation and employment, and a kind feeling amongst them. It is true the mass of the colored people are Republican voters, but the difference between the populations is not so great but that the superior intelligence, with superior means of employing them, with the kindly relations which exist amongst them, will always secure a minority of the colored people to act with the whites, who have been made almost a unit by the policy of the Republican party. There is always a colored minority sufficiently large to make the whites and that colored minority a decided majority of the whole vote fairly and honestly and properly cast and counted; and you will find it so always under the existing condition of things, and there is no truth in seeking to account for it by charges of fraud and violence.

But now I say that the only question which can possibly concern the people of the United States, of the States in the Union, is whether you will so divide the population of the Northwest and the States yet to be admitted as to create a sectional power in one section of the country over the others. In that point of view it would be wise for the Senate not to intervene party prejudices or party interests if they propose to act from the motive of legislators having in view the future glory and power of this Government, and, I may say, of the people of the world, the great hope for the improvement of mankind, for the distribution of the production of the earth fairly and justly, for the decrease of want and suffering, and the general advancement of humanity.

I think it would be wise that we should not intervene questions of personal interest or party politics in determining this question of the magnitude of the States which are to be brought into the Union. Everything points to the advantage of larger States and not too large a representation in this body as there would be by dividing them up into Territories like Rhode Island or Massachusetts. Therefore the suggestion that has been made by the Senator from South Carolina is a wise one. Admit the State of Dakota and let her exercise hereafter, in the discretion of Congress, power to divide her territory into two or more States.

The future alone can tell whether it will not be wise for the preservation of the autonomy of this Government that Mexico and Canada and Central America shall on their own request become States of this Union. The future alone can tell whether it would be wise to admit these Territories as large States or in what proportions of territory and population they should be created, while on the other hand divide this Territory and you are irrevocably committed, and you can never hereafter consider the question.

For that reason I should vote, if I had the power of determining this question, to admit Dakota as a whole, and I venture to say that these reasons can not be set aside as being merely visionary and unworthy of consideration, or as simply the result of partisan feeling and prejudice. They are facts, reasons, facts worthy of investigation. They are philosophical questions presenting political possibilities and probabilities which every man, I think, may well consider carefully, and which will be the basis of wise and safe legislation as to the creation of the new State of Dakota.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I am not a member of the Committee on Territories, and I did not expect to say one word in regard to the question of the admission of South Dakota; but charges and insinuations have been made by a number of Senators on the other side of this Chamber affecting the honor and the good name not only of members of the Senate but of the people of every Southern State of this Union. It has been asserted and insinuated that in all the Southern States the votes of the colored population are suppressed, and that men hold seats in the other House, if not in this, by fraud and intimidation. If nothing was said on this side, it might be taken that it was a confession that the statement was true.

A short time ago the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] resented, with a great deal of feeling, a mere statement in regard to a newspaper publication with regard to frauds at an election in the State of Rhode Island. He was indignant that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] had even alluded to the fact. Yet that Senator, while he stood on his feet, uttered a slander and misrepresentation as to the whole people of the South as unjust and unfounded as he said the statement was in regard to his own State.

Mr. CHACE. I do not know that I understand the Senator. Is he alluding to me now?

Mr. BERRY. I am alluding to you. I said that the Senator stated that the Senator from South Carolina was attempting to divert attention from the frauds that were committed in the Southern States by charging fraud upon the State of Rhode Island. At least I so understood the Senator. If he did not say so he can disclaim it.

Mr. CHACE. I do not think I said it, but if I did I will not take it back.

Mr. BERRY. I assert that while the Senator resents the imputation on his own State, yet without any knowledge of the condition of affairs in the Southern States, he makes the same charge against them and upon less foundation than the other was made, if he makes the charge. One would infer from what we hear from the other side of the Chamber that all the frauds and wrongs that have ever been charged in the Southern States in regard to elections were committed by members of the Democratic party.

Senators go back to 1876 and look at the statements and charge fraud in the State of Louisiana and other States! They seem to forget that prior to the advent of the Republican party in the South in 1868, a charge of ballot-box stuffing, a charge of fraudulent counting, a charge of intimidation had never been heard throughout the South. I speak particularly of my own State and of what came under my own observation when I say that in 1868 the Republican party went into power under a constitution that many of them afterward admitted was beaten by more than 10,000 majority.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me? I do not wish to interfere with him.

Mr. BERRY. I yield.

Mr. HOAR. Do I understand him to say that there was never a charge of fraud in an election at the South before 1868? Did the Senator ever hear of the Plaquemine vote in the election of Mr. James K. Polk?

Mr. BERRY. I was alluding especially to my own State when I stated that prior to 1868 a charge of stuffing the ballot-box, a charge of making false returns, a charge of intimidating a voter, had never been heard of until the Republican party came into power under the reconstruction of 1868. For six years after that every species of fraud, every method of rascality that the ingenuity of trained experts could invent, was resorted to in order to falsify the returns and place and keep a minority in power; and while the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Vermont were both members of this Senate in those six long years, when whole counties were disfranchised, when men's names by the hundred and thousand were erased from the registry books without their knowledge and without a charge against them, when the ballot-box was stuffed and fraudulent returns were made, when twenty-two members of the Legislature who had been honestly elected by the people were thrust aside and twenty-two men whom the people had rejected at the polls were put in, not one of these Senators ever raised his voice to say a word against those frauds perpetrated by the Republican party.

For six years those frauds continued until, in 1872, a governor who was fairly elected was deliberately counted out, and when the governor wrongfully counted in refused to do the bidding of the Republican junta they raised a revolution and brought about a war in the State and tried to put him out.

I heard the Senator from Ohio yesterday serve notice on the people of the South that this condition of affairs must be revised, the colored people be restored to power there, that the people of the South should either submit to that or submit to worse.

Mr. President, when I look back to that to which we submitted from 1868 to 1874, I recognize the fact that the people of the South can bear much. In the six years that party was in power within my own State they increased the indebtedness of the State $8,000,000. They created the necessity for the issuance of $280,000 of what were called Brooks and Baxter war bonds. They had out more than $2,000,000 of floating indebtedness in State scrip. Every county in the State was involved from $25,000 to $100,000 and some of them $200,000, and no public building or public work of any consequence to show for all this enormous expenditure. During that time there was constant alarm and continuous agitation.

The militia swept over the eastern and southern portions of the State of Arkansas, leaving ruined homes and desolation in their pathway; and all this was done in the name of morality, a higher civilization, and the Republican party! Yet Senators come here to-day and pretend that they are outraged and greatly wronged because some newspapers charge that wrongs have been committed. I say that during that time the voice of these Senators was not heard to protest, but they by their votes and influence sent United States troops to keep up this state of affairs.

Now, Mr. President, I want to assert, furthermore, that since 1874, when the Democrats came into power in my State, every man who has occupied a position in the other House of Congress, every man who has served as governor or in any other State office in that State, has been fairly and honestly elected by an honest majority of the voters of the State of Arkansas. Not one single man has occupied a position, either on the State ticket or in either of these bodies, who was not fairly and honestly elected by a majority of the people of the State of Arkansas. And yet we are told that throughout the entire Southern States one man's vote counts for two in the North!

I had hoped that we should not be compelled to go back to these things again. I had hoped that the peace which prevailed throughout that State would protect us from again being assailed as we have been for the last two days on the floor of this Chamber. No man who lives in the South, who loves the South, can desire that this agitation should go on. For years and years, when we were slandered and misrepresented in the Congress of the United States, immigrants passed by our doors and went to the West, to the less fertile plains of the West, and to the less genial climate of Colorado, Kansas, and Nebraska, because the South was being slandered and misrepresented.

For the last four years since that policy has ceased the tide of immigration has turned toward our States. Within the time since the Democratic party came into power there we have paid off much of the indebtedness which was left upon us by the Republican party. We have more than doubled our population; we have more than trebled our school fund and those who attend the public schools. Peace and order prevail everywhere, and we had fondly hoped that the Republican party would find some other issue on which to go into this canvass rather than to go back and stir up the feuds that existed at that time.

Mr. President, that man or that party who for individual or party purposes would again rekindle the fires of hatred and passion that burned so fiercely from 1868 to 1874, that man who to gratify his own personal ambition would make it possible again to recreate the conditions by which the people of the South were plundered as they were during the unhappy period of reconstruction, has not that high order of patriotism, that love of country, and that love of the human family which qualifies him to be the Chief Magistrate of this great nation.

I trusted that this canvass might be made upon different grounds. It is unpleasant to us to revive these things. We had hoped that the issue might be joined upon the questions presented by the President's message; and while I may be mistaken in the temper of the people of the North I do not believe that it is possible for any number of men to divert them from the great questions of tax reform and of currency upon which this canvass is to be fought, and that any party can again hoist the bloody garment and march to victory by slandering and misrepresenting the people of the South.

I have felt called upon to say this because I believe these charges are untrue. I have felt called upon to say it because I believe it interferes with our material prosperity. I have felt called upon to say it because I believe it tends to turn the tide of immigration from our doors, which we so anxiously wish to settle in our midst; and I believe furthermore that every such speech that is made on this subject, as those that have come from Senators on the other side of the Chamber, increases the bitterness between the races or tends to create division between the white and colored people of the South. In addition to that, it tends to cripple those who are anxious to see the colored man protected in every right guarantied to him by the Constitution.

We have felt and hoped that the time had come when we were again in the Union indeed; when we stood here as equals; and I say that, so far as the people within my knowledge throughout the South are concerned, they are loyal to this Government, proud of its past history, and as anxious for its future prosperity and glory as the men who followed Grant into the trenches of Petersburgh, and I assert, furthermore, that I believe that with the same love and devotion that they rallied around the fallen banner, the banner that was furled forever upon the field of Appomattox, to-day they would rally around the Stars and Stripes and defend it against all foes, and be as loyal and true to this Government as any men in any portion of this Union.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I ask a moment of the time of the Senate, simply to answer one or two observations which have been made, especially by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY].

I did not participate in this debate until the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] charged that a gentleman that I knew to be as pure as any man who had ever been in public life had been elected by fraud, applied to his name a term which is not usual in so grave a body as this, charged that he was elected by fraud and held his office by fraud and did a great many acts that are considered dishonorable among gentlemen. That language was uttered not in my presence. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] promptly took issue with the Senator from Missouri.

The whole question turned upon the events of 1876, whether or not there had been sufficient force and violence practiced in the State of Louisiana by the Democratic party as to authorize and justify the returning board in excluding the returns from certain parishes in that State. That was the whole controversy; nothing else.

In answering that charge, what did I do? Gentlemen say I read newspaper paragraphs and that newspaper paragraphs are not to be believed. What I read and all that I read was the carefully prepared and carefully revised report of a speech made by the governor of Louisiana, printed with his consent in his office, every word of which had no doubt been conned over by him. I read that to the Senate. I also read the speech of a Senator of the United States in that same canvass, carefully prepared and carefully worded. No man who knows the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS], how careful he is in his utterances, how slow and deliberate, could read the words that he uttered there as reported in his friendly organ and doubt that he was reading the words as they came from the Senator's mouth. It was not the newspaper that gave force to these utterances. It was the words of a governor of Louisiana and a Senator of Louisiana justifying the events that occurred in 1876. I only brought their testimony in to show that the testimony produced before the returning board was sustained by the statements of gentlemen who admitted that they participated in the tragic acts of 1876.

Now, why this outcry? What else has been done except to read to you the testimony of your own witnesses submitted by them to the people of Louisiana about subjects which the people of Louisiana knew all about, testifying to what was done there. Not one word did I say to excite angry feeling or sectional feeling. I merely proved that fact which made good, upon the testimony of these great men, that the action of the returning board of Louisiana was justified by facts admitted by them, and this in answer to an attack made upon a President of the United States who certainly had been kind and generous and friendly to the people of the South. The harshest thing that I said yesterday and that which I felt most keenly was that these men should turn upon this President for doing what he felt bound to do for their protection, although he was accused and arraigned for it by the members of his own party, and that there came from that side of the House no friendly word to this President who had done what they desired to be done, but mainly and I believe solely because he was compelled to do it by his sense of the obligations of the Constitution of the United States.

There is this whole controversy. You talk about newspaper paragraphs. Look beyond the newspaper, which sometimes lies. If I had quoted editorial paragraphs, the case would have been different; but the only editorial paragraph I quoted here was a paragraph from the Picayune, the organ of one of the factional parties in that State, in which the editor gives his views of the effect of the publication of these speeches made by the Senator and the governor. I quoted that not as evidence to any fact, but as evidence of a view taken by this editor of the unfortunate character of these speeches. It was the speeches and the words of Governor McEnery and the words of Senator EUSTIS that I quoted.

Why, sir, you might as well say the same when we read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the report of what is said in our debates, that that is nothing but what the reporter publishes in a newspaper, and therefore it is not to be believed! It was not the newspaper that spoke yesterday, but it was the voice of the governor of Louisiana and of the Senator from Louisiana.

I ask now, Senators, whether any one doubts or denies that these gentlemen made the very speeches that I read here. No man will question it. I did not think it necessary to ask that then, because that is one of those things that are known to all men.

When a President of the United States is charged with having held for four years the office of President, with having used the money of the United States in rewarding the men who made the returns on which he was elected, I, coming here as a Senator from his own State, say that this charge is false, false by whomever uttered, false whenever uttered; and I produce here the testimony of two witnesses who last summer in making their canvass in their State admitted everything that I alleged. That is all I did, and that I will do again whenever the occasion occurs and wherever it occurs; not to revive the animosities of the past, but to show that this foul charge made against a President of the United States is false, and in any presence, in any company, in church or graveyard, I stand by that ground; and I say that when any man impugns the integrity and character of President Hayes because according to the judgment of the organization created by the Democratic party (which I opposed), and because according to the returns of the returning board founded upon evidence furnished to them his election was legally declared, when any man asserts that he was a fraudulent President, or uses words to that effect, I declare that the statement is not true, and I will stand up and defend not only the action of the President, but my own action and the action of the great party to which I belong. Sir, that is all I did.

Newspaper paragraphs! No picked-up scandal and stuff manufactured and put into the Washington Post, and in some way or other got into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and repeated here in the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings, but the solemn declarations made by officials of the very highest rank in the presence of the people who knew whether they were telling the truth or not. That is all I did.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I call the attention of my friend from Ohio, in connection with what he is saying about the events of 1876 and 1877, to the fact that appears in the public statutes of the United States, which I suppose we may take to imply truth, that the very principle on which the Electoral Commission proceeded in regard to Louisiana, substantially in form and essentially in substance, has been put by both Houses of Congress, a Republican Senate and a Democratic House of Representatives, into a law that has been signed by a Democratic President of the United States, and passed unanimously by this body?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, one word more and I have done. The Senator from South Carolina I am told referred to frauds in Ohio, frauds on the elective franchise. They have been committed, Mr. President, but I assure the Senator that in every case where such fraud or crime or wrong has extended beyond a single individual it was done by the Democratic party.

Mr. BUTLER. What I said about Ohio was pretty much what I said about Rhode Island, that there had been charges of fraud in the elections in Ohio, and I did not undertake to be responsible for the truth or falsity of those charges, but that I had no doubt that Ohio was quite able to take care of all such questions within her own borders, as South Carolina is, and as Florida is, and as Louisiana is. That was what I said. I did not make any charges against the great State of Ohio. I am not here for any such purpose. I have stated what I said, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is all right, and so far so good. But I wish now to say a little further that the only organized frauds that ever occurred in the elections in Ohio were committed by the Democratic party, and here I wish further to remark that what the Senator says is true, that we are able to take care of the ballot, and we have done it.

I wish to say in regard to the frauds committed in 1886, the frauds by which it was attempted to manufacture a Legislature and to defeat the election of the legislative ticket in the great cities of the State, especially in Cincinnati and Columbus, it is now conceded by men of all parties that those were shameless, scandalous, monstrous frauds, as bad as any that were ever committed in the South; but they were purely the work of the Democratic party.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not quite through with this. When I am I will give way. I wish to say that when we undertook to punish these frauds, a committee of one hundred citizens of Cincinnati, where the greatest frauds had been committed, composed of men of both political parties, joined to ferret out and punish these frauds, the Democratic organization, however, opposing to every conceivable extent this careful and wholesome examination. However, that committee of a hundred did prosecute, and sent several of the guilty men to the penitentiary, and did disclose the most enormous frauds of almost every kind on the elective franchise. In the city of Columbus, where the fraud consisted in the forgery of a return by which the vote was endeavored to be changed in order to throw out the Republican members elected and put in Democratic members, the people of Columbus, without distinction of party, organized themselves to punish that fraud, and from that time to this they have been pushing the matter in every legal and proper way; and at the head of that movement, one of the leading men of that movement, and probably entitled to more credit than any other one man, was my former honored colleague, Judge Thurman, a Democrat. The public feeling in Ohio of both political parties is against these wrongs and frauds. Now, I will hear the Senator.

Mr. BUTLER. I expressed no opinion as to who was responsible for these frauds, which party or what people. It is not my business. The Senator, of course, says it was the Democratic party. The Republican party must be the immaculate party of this country——

Mr. SHERMAN. In comparison, yes.

Mr. BUTLER. And all that I complain of is, that when frauds the most disgraceful and acts the most humiliating that were ever committed by any people or any party in any country were being perpetrated in the South by the Republican party, the Senator kept his mouth, and his seat, and never uttered a word by way of remonstrance against them. That is what we complain of. If the Senator from Ohio would make his reform sweeping, universal, and extend it all over this country and correct evils in Ohio, and in Rhode Island, and in Massachusetts, and in Indiana, and in Wisconsin, or wherever they occur, if we could hear the powerful voice of the Senator from Ohio in redressing wrongs wherever they occur, committed by whatever party, we should have some hope of the country and have some respect for his opinion. But, sir, when he confines his animadversion, his insinuation, his charges against one section of the Union, and against one party only, he must pardon me if I doubt the sincerity of his motives.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, no case of fraud has ever been brought before me, either as a member of the House or of the Senate, where I have not done just what the Senator from South Carolina says ought to be done, and no case of that kind has ever been brought here which I have not treated fairly.

Now, let me go a little farther. The Senator prevented me from stating one or two more matters about the Ohio frauds. The same and kindred frauds were committed in Indiana for the same purpose. The same frauds have been committed in New York and by the Democratic party. He says that the Republican party is immaculate. No; far from it. No political party is immaculate; but, in comparison with the Democratic party, the Republican party, I claim, has always sustained and maintained the freedom of elections, the right of every man to cast one honest vote and no more, and whenever in any part of this country that right is denied to the humblest citizen of this land, I should be as hearty and earnest in condemning it whether committed by Republicans or by Democrats. I say to the benefit and the credit of the Republicans of Ohio that they would not tolerate in any portion of that State any infringement upon the right of the elective franchise, and where a single individual has for his own purposes, or for any purpose whatever, voted illegally or wrongfully, both parties join in consigning him to the penitentiary or imposing on him the penalties prescribed by law. That is all I desire to say on that matter.

Senators show a good deal too much feeling about this. When I came to the defense of President Hayes and read these two documents, they seemed to feel as if I was reviving the animosities of the war. Who did it? Are we to sit here and hear the ablest, the purest, and the best men of our party arraigned as having participated in wrongs and have our mouths shut, humbly biting the dust? No; we will defend our own. If the Republican party is wrong, either in principle or in policy or in the conduct of individuals, we will join in correcting that wrong; and my own observation has been that whenever an accusation is made against a Republican, Republicans are as eager in prosecuting the offender as anybody else.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator has charged that this character of debate was provoked from this side of the Chamber.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. May I not ask the Senator to recall the fact that the first suggestion made in regard to anything in the South came from the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]? Had any word been uttered before?

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not hear all that the Senator from Wisconsin said.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I think perhaps the Senator had better revise his statement and recall the whole debate before he makes a sweeping charge of that kind.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me the Senator is very sensitive about this matter.

Mr. BUTLER. Not at all; not one bit more sensitive than the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have here before me the very article referred to a moment ago.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not more sensitive than the Senator from Ohio appears to be. He says when a charge is made against a member of the Republican party, a pure, upright man, he is called on to resent it; and he asks if he is expected to bite the dust and submit in humility to this charge. Would he expect that from a Senator on this side of the Chamber?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly not.

Mr. BUTLER. Does he therefore charge me with being sensitive when I resent in proper language a charge of dishonorable conduct made by him against me? I think the charge of the Senator that I am unusually sensitive is not well founded. I said not one word about any State, or any election in any State, until the charge was made by the Senator from Wisconsin, which I thought was entirely outside of this discussion.

Mr. SHERMAN. He made a general charge.

Mr. BUTLER. Precisely, and I resented the general charge.

Mr. SHERMAN. He made the general charge that is made by Mr. Watterson, and in the testimony of Governor McEnery and Mr. EUSTIS, which I read. The natural course for the Senators on the other side who are offended at that phrase is to pour their vials of wrath on these associates of theirs, not on me.

Mr. BUTLER. Permit me to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I was not offended, but the Senator will pardon me for saying that I was taken with astonishment and surprise that the Senator from Ohio arraigned the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS], who he knew was absent from this body from sickness or on some other account. It did not offend me. The Senator from Louisiana is quite able to take care of himself, and will do it I have no doubt. It was not that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I read his speech, and Senator EUSTIS will not object to that being read in his presence or in his absence. I would not do an act of discourtesy to a single Senator on that side, and especially to the Senator from Louisiana, for whom I have the highest respect, but when I read his speech here I did him no disrespect.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator will allow me, I will take the liberty of saying, without being authorized by the Senator from Louisiana, that he will object to the construction put upon that speech by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is all right, but the point that touched the marrow of this subject was what was said by the Senator from Louisiana, not what I said. What I said would have no effect. It is what the Senator from Louisiana said, and he will never go back on that. He is not that kind of a man, although he may say I have given it a wrong construction. But when a man speaks here in the Senate about the impression that prevails in regard to elections in the Southern States, how can it be wondered at when there is scarcely a newspaper published in the South but what contains more or less of this kind of material? And when I read the statement of Mr. Watterson, referred to already by the Senator from Massachusetts, how can you expect that the Senators of the United States and all others shall refrain from referring to this general fact as one of those facts that are conceded on all hands? I will now read.

Mr. BUTLER. And yet when I referred to the election in Ohio and when I referred to the election in Rhode Island this morning, both of the Senators from the latter State felt inclined to resent it, and yet Senators are surprised if we resent any imputation on our side.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not resent it at all. I am trying to show that the Democratic party commits fraud almost everywhere and that we are not responsible for their frauds. I am not at all excited. The Senator must not think I am. Now, I will read what Mr. Watterson has said:

> I should be entitled to no respect or credit if I pretended that there is either a fair poll or count of the vast overflow of black votes in States where there is a negro majority, or that, in the nature of things present, there can be. There was not when the ballot-box was guarded by Federal bayonets. There is not now. There can be only when both races divide on other than race lines, and when, with the disappearance of old antagonisms, new issues, involving differences of opinion among the whites and the blacks alike, remove from each the dangers of bygone conflict.

This was in April, 1888. This states only what I suppose is a fact, a fact which I assume to exist, and upon the existence of that fact I urged our friends in the Southern States in person at Nashville and here to their representatives that it should be the common purpose of us all to turn our backs upon these bygone issues as rapidly as we can and divide our people upon new and living issues of national development. What I said yesterday is in the very line of the remarks made by Mr. Watterson. But when the issues of the past are brought up we must then stand by the impressions made upon us and stand upon the integrity and honor and good faith of the men with whom we have been associated in the Republican party.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator propose to close the debate?

Mr. PLATT. I was in hopes that I might be able to do so.

Mr. VEST. I hope he will permit me to say a word.

Mr. PLATT. I will yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. I had no idea that I should occupy the floor again on this subject, and I should not except for the extraordinary speech of the Senator from Ohio, which he seems to have meditated during the silent watches of the night and delivered to us here to-day with an enthusiasm which has heretofore not characterized his public efforts.

The Senator indulges in epithets and says he will in church or graveyard, at any time and in any place, denounce as false any statement that Hayes was not fairly elected President of the United States. This is no arena for epithet or abuse, and I hardly need remind the distinguished Senator from Ohio, with his public experience, that the world distrusts that cause which must resort to epithet in the discussion of great and historic questions. I asked a question here which has not been answered, and never will be answered to the satisfaction of the people of the United States: How was it that the returning board in Louisiana which gave the title to Hayes as to the electoral vote of that State, with the power in their hands over the governorship, while giving the Republican party the Presidential electors refused to Packard, their own candidate, the office of governor?

Mr. SHERMAN. They did return to the Legislature the list of men elected according to the returns, and the Legislature chose to disregard them, as they had the power to do under the constitution of Louisiana, and thus excluded Packard.

Mr. VEST. And Mr. Blaine, the last candidate of the Republican party for President, and their most distinguished leader, declared that that was simply a ministerial act of that Legislature.

Mr. SHERMAN. I venture to say—and I have looked into the facts—that Mr. Blaine never doubted in a single word or for a moment the legality of the election of President Hayes, but he did say that if Hayes was elected, so also was Packard, and so I say. So Mr. Blaine says in his Twenty Years' View.

Mr. VEST. If that be so, what sort of influences were brought to bear, what sort of machinations took place after "the visiting statesmen" of the Republican party went to the city of New Orleans, that brought about the result, that they were able to control the returning board so far as to obtain the electoral vote of the State of Louisiana for Hayes, but when it came to the election of a governor on the same authority Packard was thrown out and Nicholls installed?

Mr. SHERMAN. The answer is that the very men who participated in those frauds and violence had control of that Legislature, and they were passing upon the returns of their own election. The very members elected from those parishes that were in dispute voted that they were duly elected members.

Mr. VEST. The history of that transaction shows that fifty-one members of the Packard legislature went over in one single day to the Nicholls legislature—fifty-one of them. They hung on there for weeks under the guard of United States soldiers. They occupied, as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] said yesterday, a single building in the city of New Orleans, and camped and slept there until they broke up. Fifty-one of them went over in a single day, and yet we are told here, when we dare say one word in regard to that transaction, in regard to the remarkable fact that the same authority which was induced to give the electoral vote to Hayes, while Packard who had a larger vote on the face of the returns for the governorship was declared to be defeated and was sent abroad as consul to Liverpool, we should hold our mouths. The Senator from Ohio talks about shutting our mouths and sitting silently under the insults and wrongs that were perpetrated.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator——

Mr. VEST. I will yield for a question.

Mr. HOAR. I want to ask a question. What does the Senator mean by the term "the same authority?"

Mr. VEST. The returning board.

Mr. HOAR. What had the returning board to do with giving the governorship of Louisiana to Packard?

Mr. VEST. I will answer the Senator in the language of Mr. Blaine, a very distinguished person, I believe.

In a debate with the Senator from Ohio Mr. Blaine said:

I understand the Senator from Ohio to admit that the Electoral Commission did decide that the Louisiana returning board was a legal and constitutional body, competent to do what it did do, and that they were unable to review or reverse it; and that same board, competent to declare who were the Presidential electors of that State, declared also who were the Legislature of that State——

Mr. SHERMAN. So they did.

Mr. VEST.—

and the Legislature—

Mr. HOAR. What has that to do with the governor?

Mr. VEST. Permit me to go on—and the Legislature, performing a mere ministerial duty, declared who was the governor of that State.

That is what they had to do with it.

Mr. HOAR. Now, if the Senator will allow me to put him a question, what does he mean when he says that the Electoral Commission declared that the returning board were the final judges of the choice of Presidential electors?

Mr. VEST. I can not hear the Senator. Will he repeat his question?

Mr. HOAR. What does the Senator mean when he says that the Electoral Commission declared that the returning board were the final judges of the choice of Presidential electors, and that somebody else says that the returning board were the final judges of the returns of the Legislature, and that that Legislature which passed on the question of governor was the same authority?

Mr. VEST. I said it was the returning board, and Mr. Blaine says it was. That was some authority.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Blaine does not say the returning board declared who was governor.

Mr. VEST. He says that the Legislature declared who was governor, and that that was a mere ministerial act.

Mr. HOAR. Suppose he does say it was a ministerial act, how does that make it the same authority with the returning board?

Mr. VEST. What is the use of cutting up into syllables on a question like this? I quoted the authority of Mr. Blaine, and the fact bears it out, that the returning board which gave the title to the electoral votes of Louisiana to Rutherford B. Hayes was the same authority which had the power to give the governorship of Louisiana to Packard on a larger vote than the Hayes electors claimed. They created the Legislature, and the Legislature performed a mere ministerial act in declaring who was elected governor.

Mr. HOAR. The returning board declared the Hayes electors chosen in Louisiana. The Electoral Commission said their judgment was final, and we could not go behind it, as I believe nine-tenths of the Democratic lawyers now believe the law to be. But the returning board also declared, man by man, who was chosen to the Legislature of Louisiana, and they declared a Republican majority chosen to that Legislature. When that Legislature assembled, there being two bodies, a portion of one body went over to the other and made a new Legislature, some members of which got their title from the returning board and others did not, and that Legislature thus composed passed upon the title of the governor, and thereupon Nicholls came in.

Now, what does the Senator mean by saying that the same authority did it in one case as in the other. And when he is asked why, he declares that Mr. Blaine stated it was ministerial.

Mr. VEST. I meant what I repeat again, that the same authority which gave the electoral vote of Louisiana to Hayes passed upon the Legislature which gave, or ought to have given, by a logical conclusion, the same vote to Packard and did not do it; and when I ask why they did not do it, then commences the confusion on the other side of the Chamber. Why did they not do it? Let me read what Mr. Blaine said, and then let members of his own party criticise him. Mr. Blaine, after stating these facts in regard to this ministerial duty, added:

And I stand here, if I stand alone, to say that the honor and the credit and the faith of the Republican party, in so far as the election of Hayes and Wheeler are concerned, are as indissolubly united in maintaining the rightfulness of the return of that body—

That is as to the Legislature which performed the ministerial duty of declaring who was governor—

as the illustrious house of Hanover that sits on the throne of England to-day is in maintaining the rightfulness of the revolution of 1688. You discredit Packard and you discredit Hayes.

What else have I or any other Democrat said here? You did discredit Packard. You did do it. The Senator shakes his head. He did not do it, but he used the returning board to get the electoral vote of Louisiana and then dropped them like a hot potato, to use a Western phrase. After they had got the electoral vote of the State and put Hayes in, then they said to that Legislature, "We have no further use for you or the returning board either." But Mr. Blaine says if you discredit one you discredit the other, and out of his mouth I say to the Republican party to-day they convicted themselves when they threw overboard this claim of Packard, who received upon the returns a larger number of votes than were cast for the electors for Hayes in Louisiana.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Would President Hayes have been justified, when he found that the action of the returning board had not been regarded by the Legislature of Louisiana, in sending troops down there to place Packard in power, although he had not received the certificate of his election from the Legislature?

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Ohio was the premier of that administration, and he ought to have determined his policy. What have I, a poor, erring Democrat to do with that?

Mr. SHERMAN. Now that the Senator is trying to represent the extreme view of this subject on the other side, I should like to have him tell me as an attorney would he have advised President Hayes to send the Army of the United States there to maintain Packard in power when the Legislature had refused to give him a certificate?

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the absurd idea of my advising Hayes to do anything so appalls me that I can not frame a reply to any such question. I go on with Mr. Blaine, and I leave the gentlemen to argue with that distinguished Republican:

You discredit Packard and you discredit Hayes. You hold that Packard is not the legal governor of Louisiana and President Hayes has no title, and the honored Vice-President who presides over our deliberations has no title to his chair.

They did discredit Packard; they did pacify him with the consulship to Liverpool, and rewarded every solitary man who was engaged on the returning board from the doorkeeper up to the president. I have presented the official list of the salaries these men got, two hundred and thirty-odd thousand dollars a year of the people's money paid out on this account; and yet the Senator from Ohio says that it is false, and he will say so in church or graveyard, or before any tribunal in the world.

Well, Mr. President, when the Senator appears in the two rôles that he has assumed here to-day he simply astonishes the country. In the first place, he comes up here with epithets and bravado, and in the next breath he assumes the attitude of the mere political trickster, endeavoring to find out who has struck the first blow in this controversy. Are we to sit here, he says, and be insulted in silence? Oh, Mr. President, when the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] accused the Democratic party of being the party of barbarism, of savagery, of opposition to civilization, and Christianity, and the plan of redemption, the Senator from Ohio sat with a bland and benign smile, as if he was about to take the oath as President of the United States. [Laughter.]

Sir, I care nothing about this ancient history. The fraud I have always thought was perpetrated, and no epithet will deter me from saying here what I thought about it at the time and think of it now. I then had a dear friend in the other House of Congress, and if my letters could be found to-day they would show what I thought of that transaction. I appealed to him to stand out against that Electoral Commission, against anything except the absolute, naked claim of right—right upon the part of Samuel J. Tilden to be inaugurated President of this Republic, to which he was as fairly elected as George Washington, or Thomas Jefferson, or any of their illustrious successors. It is the colossal fraud in the political history of this country, in my judgment, and let me say to the Senator from Ohio, in church, or churchyard, or graveyard, anywhere, I believe the people of these United States indorse that opinion.

Mr. PLATT and Mr. HOAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PLATT. I will yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, if the statement of the reason of the honorable Senator from Missouri or the impassioned and excited and extravagant words which he spoke could go with him, I do not think either among the lawyers or the common people of this country it would be very important that his position should be answered; but it may be proper simply to state in half a dozen sentences what was the precise transaction which took place in the winter of 1876–'77 in regard to the Presidential election.

There was a dispute in the State of Louisiana, and in some other States, in regard to the election of two separate sets of Presidential electors, and according as that question was decided the title to the Presidency was decided. A large majority of both Houses of Congress believed that the right to determine the questions of law and fact which entered into the constitutional power of counting the electoral vote was lodged in the two Houses of Congress and not in the Presiding Officer of this body, which was the alternative claim; that those two Houses of Congress, therefore, constituted a tribunal consisting of an even number, and the framers of the Constitution had provided, according to the opinion which then prevailed in both Houses by a large majority, no mechanism for determining what should be done when that body was evenly divided, one of its members voting one way and the other the other. Thereupon a joint committee of the two Houses framed the measure known as the Electoral Commission bill, which provided for a tribunal which, where the two Houses of Congress should differ, should decide the question of difference. When that tribunal was proposed, a Senator on the floor of the Senate offered an amendment to the bill declaring that it should be the duty of that commission, when elected, to go behind the return of the board, or other authority established in the State to count the vote and declare the result, and ascertain what was the true fact in regard to the election; and that proposition was voted down by an almost unanimous vote, indicating, therefore, the opinion of the Senate, in which a large majority of the Democrats, as well as the Republicans in this body, participated.

The question then was presented to the Electoral Commission whether the two bodies of Congress had the right to go behind the certificate of the tribunal created by the State as to what had been the lawful and constitutional result of the vote in the State, and I undertake to affirm that the conclusion to which that body came has at this moment the support not merely of Republicans, but of the vast majority of the Democratic jurists of this country.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator will allow me to put in there—he has not the book and I have—that vote showing how the Senate voted upon the proposition to permit the commission to go behind the returns.

Mr. HOAR. I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. HAWLEY. January 24, 1877, pending the passage of the bill organizing the Electoral Commission, Mr. Morton offered the following amendment:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall authorize the said commission to go behind the finding and determination of the canvassing or returning officers of a State, authorized by the laws of the State to find and determine the result of an election for electors.

Mr. EDMUNDS moved to amend the amendment by striking out, after the word "Provided," all the negative words; so that it shall read:

"That the said commission shall have authority to go behind the finding and determination of the canvassing or returning officers," etc.

Upon that question there was one yea, Mr. Cooper, and the nays were 61, not voting 12.

The nays are about half in italics and about half in Roman.

Among the nays were Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, COCKRELL, Davis of West Virginia, Dennis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, McDonald, Maxey, Merrimon, Price, Randolph, RANSOM, Stevenson, Thurman, Whyte, Withers.

The amendment of Mr. Morton was then rejected—yeas 18, nays 47, not voting 9.

Declaring that nothing should authorize the tribunal to go behind the returns.

Mr. HOAR. Now, Mr. President, as I have said, the Electoral Commission came to just this conclusion, that the determination of the State through its lawfully constituted tribunal as to the election of Presidential electors was conclusive and binding against all the world, and that we had no more right to go behind that adjudication than a tribunal before which a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States should be sued would have the right to go behind that judgment to allege fraud or any other objection.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. CALL. I should be glad to know how that statement of the Senator comports with the fact that the tribunals of the State, the courts of the State, the Legislature of the State, in the case of Florida, decided one way and the Electoral Commission another.

Mr. HOAR. The returning board of the State of Florida declared elected the persons whose votes were counted, and the judgment of the court of Florida, which was set up against it, was a subsequent judgment. But I want to make my statement on the general principle. I will answer the Senator afterward, if he will put the inquiry, because I wish to make my statement consecutive. I only want to take two or three minutes in what I have to say. I can get it into two.

I know personally there were eight members of the Electoral Commission who were members of the Democratic party. There were seven originally of the fifteen, and one of them, Judge Thurman, becoming ill before the end of the proceeding, another Democrat took his place. All those eight, a majority of those men, have at some time or other put themselves distinctly on record as affirming the doctrine which the majority of the commission then decided.

Mr. Bayard and Mr. Thurman are on record in the debates of this body in the discussion of what was known as the Morton bill, I think, of the previous year, earnestly denying the right of the National Government to interfere to make this great invasion of State rights. Mr. Abbott, of my State, at a meeting of a large number of the ablest lawyers in Boston, the Law Club, a very few months before the decision of the Electoral Commission, in a most earnest, impassioned statement of the law, stated his opinion the same way. Now that the heat of that controversy has gone by, it seems to me one of the clearest constitutional propositions ever asserted. There can be no invasion of the rights of the State which could approach in the flagrancy of its usurpation and the destructive character of its effects the assertion by the two Houses of Congress of the right to go into the question of the actual election of Presidential electors in any of the States.

I do not now criticise either party; but what has been the history of election cases in the House of Representatives in the past thirty or forty years? Is any statesman on the other side of the Chamber, who loves his country and who rests on its Constitution, willing to get up now and put on record his belief that the election of the President of the United States is hereafter to be put upon the same plane and the same level by which election cases are decided in the popular branch of the legislative department of this Government? Look for a moment at the practical absurdity of the contrary view. The Presidential election takes place in November, and the returns at that time came in I think by the 15th of December, and the entire official process of counting that vote, declaring the result, and inaugurating the President had to be completed by the 4th day of the following March, or this Government was to fall to pieces for want of an executive authority.

Just think of the possibility of going into a trial of the legality of the votes cast for Presidential electors, man by man. If that were the law in 1876 it was equally the law in 1796, when you could not travel from Boston to the seat of Government in less than four or five weeks. I had an honored ancestor who was a member of the Senate in 1793, and it always took him three weeks to go from his residence in New Haven to Philadelphia. Think of prosecuting such an election inquiry. You have to do the same thing for Oregon or for California that you are to do for Delaware or for Pennsylvania, and if any person chose to put in issue the title of the electors of Oregon returned by the returning-board of that State, by whatever name they are called, you would have to send to Oregon and have a judicial trial, take the evidence, and hear both sides, and this in aid of a constitutional process which has got to be all completed and all told within six weeks; and that might be required of us in regard to every State in the country.

Before the Electoral Commission the Democratic party put in issue the legality of the conduct of more than one thousand constables who were election officers in the State of South Carolina, and who, they said, had intimidated and overawed the voters. We should have been obliged, if we had opened that case, to have gone in that Electoral Commission into the trial of the conduct of each of the one thousand South Carolina special constables, man by man.

As I said, I do not believe there is a constitutional lawyer on the other side of the Chamber who in his sober and calm moments will not admit that the decision of the Electoral Commission saved this country from the establishment of a principle in our Constitution which in a very few years would have brought the Government to a fatal and ignominious end.

But it is said by the honorable Senator from Missouri that its decision, whether right or wrong, resulted in depriving the constitutionally elected President of the United States of his office. I do not believe it. I do not believe that will be the judgment of history. I think the confessions of men like Henry Watterson, that he should not be entitled to any credit if he declared that the African vote in the South had been either fairly cast or fairly counted, and that the confessions of Mr. McEnery and Mr. EUSTIS, high officials in the State chiefly in dispute at that time, seeking to commend themselves to the white Democracy to-day by alleging their services in a revolutionary overthrow of the lawful majority in that State at that time—I say these things are a sufficient answer to that claim.

The honorable Senator from Missouri cites a sentence of Mr. Blaine to the effect that if you discredit Packard you discredit Hayes, because they were voted for at the same election and by the same party, and the majority for Packard was certainly equal to the majority for Hayes. It may be true that if you discredit Packard you may be making a serious admission against the honesty of your claim that you believe Mr. Hayes was elected, but the answer is that the persons who discredited Packard were a very different class of persons from the persons who maintained Hayes.

The Senator forgets or overlooks the limitations of constitutional and lawful authority in this country. The question whether Hayes was lawfully elected was a question determined by the two Houses of Congress, using the mechanism of the Electoral Commission to get at the results in particular States. The question whether Packard was lawfully elected was a question for the Legislature of Louisiana. I am surprised that so accomplished a lawyer as my honorable friend from Missouri should have misled himself or should undertake to guide the mind of anybody else to the notion that because the returning board gave certificates as to the title of members of the Louisiana house of representatives, and also gave certificates as to the title of Presidential electors, and a portion of those members of the house of representatives left the Legislature to which they had originally belonged and went over to a Democratic Legislature, and then that Democratic Legislature, by a majority, gave the title to Mr. Nicholls, anybody who had anything to do with asserting the title of Mr. Hayes is to be said to have had anything to do with giving up the title of Mr. Packard.

But it is said that President Hayes ought to have employed the troops, if he believed honestly in his own title, to have asserted the title of Mr. Packard, who he believed and who I believe was the lawfully elected governor of the State of Louisiana. There are many good men in the North who think that the greatest mistake under our Government was made when the peaceable and constitution-loving and law-abiding people of that section did not take their arms in their hands to prevent that usurpation and that overthrow of the lawful authority of a sister State. The power was there, the temptation was there, and the right was there amply; but we preferred to trust our rights and the rights of our Republican fellow-citizens in the South, and the hopes of a lawful and constitutional government in this country to the permanent though late and the returning good sense and sense of honor and honesty of the American people.

There were many reasons why President Hayes, though his title was as impregnable and as honest, to use the phrase of the Senator from Missouri, as that of George Washington himself, if he meant to obey the oath he had taken to support the Constitution, could not interfere. It is not for the President of the United States to say, "I will send the troops of the United States into any State and put in office the man whom I believe to be lawfully elected." It is for the Legislature of the State to determine that question, and the President can only send the troops under the Constitution when the Legislature of the State calls upon him to do it. No such call was made.

There is another reason which has not been stated in this debate. The Constitution of the United States provides that there shall be no appropriation for the support of the Army which shall last over two years, and in our practice under the Constitution that appropriation is made for a single year only. What is the significance, what is the purpose of that constitutional provision? It is this: The framers of the Constitution were jealous above all things else of executive power, and they meant to have it understood that the use to which the armies of the United States should be put by the Executive should be determined by the legislature and ultimately by the people, and that he should make no use of the military arm of the country for a period which should be determined by him, which should operate for a period longer than the time provided for the constitutional term of office of the popular branch. Therefore, when the two Houses of Congress have declared or intimated their purpose that the President shall not use the Army to accomplish a particular result, he is bound to stay his hand however lawful or constitutional or righteous he himself may believe that result to be.

The same Congress which declared President Hayes lawfully elected defeated the Army appropriation bill in the winter of 1876–'77. There was no lawful provision for an army in this country which would extend beyond the 30th of the following June. President Hayes assumed office on the 4th of March with that fact before him. The House of Representatives, then in Democratic hands, had declared that they would not continue the existence of the Army of the United States beyond the three or four months of the old fiscal year which remained unexpired; and it is perfectly notorious, everybody knows, that it was to prevent the use of the Army by the Executive in reference to the disputed election questions in the Southern States that the defeat of that measure was occasioned. However much President Hayes might differ from the House of Representatives, he was bound as a constitutional officer to heed that expression of the popular will manifested through the popular branch of Congress, the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, I do not desire to spend my time, which belongs to the living present, in a constant discussion of ancient history; but so long as these suggestions are made in regard to the conduct of the Electoral Commission, I think it is proper that there should be occasionally a clear statement of the facts as I understand them. My own political life has been a very humble and a very obscure one, and there are some things in it which, in looking back upon it, I wish were otherwise; but I have never had a doubt that the humble part which I was permitted by the confidence of my constituents to take in the creation of that tribunal, and the humble part I was permitted to take as a member of it by the confidence of the House of Representatives, to which I then belonged, are among the most honorable, the most useful, and the most satisfactory actions of my life.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Connecticut to allow me to make a very brief statement.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to accommodate the Senator from Florida, but I know the temper of the Senate. I know that we had yesterday an agreement to take the vote this afternoon. I know the impatience of the Senate at this time. I have yielded once and again, and I think I ought to have a few minutes to restate the case of the Committee on Territories.

Mr. CALL. The Senate has all night to conclude the debate.

Mr. PLATT. The Senate does not want to stay here all night.

Mr. CALL. The Senate can adjourn, but it can not cut off debate very well. If the Senator proceeds to speak now I shall have to submit the remarks I wish to make afterwards.

Mr. PLATT. I think I am entitled to the floor.

Mr. CALL. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut is entitled to the floor, having yielded to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President. I wish to change the scene and locality of this debate. It has been more than twelve years since there has been a pretense of a carpet-bag government in the South. It has been, with one exception, more than twelve years since the Republican party has had a governor in the South. The day of carpet-bag governments, so far as the South is concerned, are gone. Carpet-bag government is transferred to the Territory of Dakota. The only carpet-bag governments are in the Territories. There the people are governed by officers whom they do not elect, aliens in the land they rule. There they have no voice in saying who shall be their executive and administrative officers. There they are deprived of the rights of self-government, inherent in every American citizen, except so far as limited by the necessities of Territorial organization. There they can not say what the government shall be.

Yet when that people come to the door of Congress and ask, as I say, respectfully to be admitted to the Union, to participation in the conduct of its affairs and to have an equal share in its glories, they are told they can not come in, because when they come they will bring two Republican Senators to this floor. That is this issue. We are not to be diverted from it and the people of the Territory of Dakota are not to be diverted from it by allusions to what are said to have been carpet-bag governments in the Southern States now twelve years past. If the people of the South believe in a white man's government, if they believe that no carpet-bag government should be there, I ask them to let there be a white man's government in Dakota and to have the carpet-bag government cease. That is this issue.

Mr. President, if this discussion has turned into a political debate it is not my fault. I call the Senate to witness that I made no political allusion in my opening statement of this case. I refrained purposely from doing so, because I wanted to place the claim of Dakota to be admitted into the sisterhood of States upon such an impregnable basis that there could be no answer to it on the other side except that it did not suit the political interests of the Democratic party to admit the State. I succeeded. It is the only answer that has been made to it here. It is the only answer that can be made to it. The people not only of Dakota but of the United States understand that, and our hope is in an appeal to a higher authority than Congress or the Executive, and that is to the people of the United States.

The crime against Kansas of thirty years ago is supplemented by the crime against Dakota, the crime of denying to a considerable portion of the people of this country the right of self-government. That is a wrong which will be redressed by the people whenever understood, and from the Democratic party in Congress the people of Dakota appeal to the people of the United States.

Very magnanimously do Senators on the other side say that they will vote for a bill admitting Dakota as a whole. It is easy to make that promise when we know that in that branch of the legislature controlled by the Democratic party such a bill even as has been moved here as a substitute has no chance of passing by itself.

I may not allude to what takes place in the House of Representatives, but there is another body to which I may allude, and that is a body composed of the Democratic members of the House of Representatives when they meet in caucus. The edict has gone forth from that caucus that Dakota can not come in as a whole by herself; that Dakota with her 600,000 people, citizens of the United States deprived of self-government, can not be admitted as a whole into the Union upon her own merits. The resolution of the Democratic caucus of the other House, which was read here by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], proves that. It is a resolution that a bill should be passed admitting together Dakota as a whole, Montana, Washington Territory, and the Territory of New Mexico.

It is easy for those on the other side to say, "We will vote for a bill admitting Dakota as a whole. Will you vote for a bill admitting Dakota as a whole?" Let the body which controls the policy of the Democratic party present such a bill, and then ask the question. It will not do it.

There will be no consent to the admission of Dakota as a whole or as two States so long as it is thought by the Democratic party that the admission of Senators elected either in the one State or in the two States may determine the political complexion of the Senate. We may as well understand that. So it makes little difference, as far as the opposition of the Democratic party is concerned, whether Dakota presents herself here as one State or as two States. The condition imposed upon her is that she shall elect Democratic Senators or she shall not come in.

I am justified in the use of this language. I am justified in it by what the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] said the other day and has said again to-day. He says this measure is a "political trick to get ascendency in the Senate."

For seventeen long years there has been no political question in Dakota respecting this matter. Nine successive Territorial Legislatures, and usually with unanimity, have memorialized Congress to divide the Territory. Every Democratic Territorial convention that has been held in that Territory until the year 1886 has declared in favor of a division of the Territory. Yet we are told here that this bill is a political trick to maintain Republican ascendency in this Chamber.

Mr. BUTLER. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I should be glad if he would inform the Senate why the Congress of the United States, in 1882, did not admit Dakota into the Union when the House of Representatives and the Senate were controlled by the Republican party and when the Executive was a Republican?

Mr. PLATT. We have heard that over and over again in this debate. I will tell you why. Because in another branch of Congress we could not suspend the rules and pass the bill. It was because we could not get a two-thirds majority to pass the bill, every man who voted against the suspension of the rules being a Democrat. If that had been done and the bill had come here we would have passed it, with some conditions in regard to the matter of bonds.

This movement for division has been without party in Dakota. I refer again to the fact that at every Territorial convention since 1871 called by the Democratic party resolutions have been passed in favor of division.

Now, I wish to call a Democratic witness to show that this is not a political trick. We have been told here that this movement is the movement of some factious politicians who brandish their insolence in the face of the Senate. I call Mr. WILLIAM M. SPRINGER to the stand, and from the letter he addressed to the Aberdeen convention I read:

This—

That is, the Aberdeen convention—is the first concerted movement on the part of the people of Dakota for single statehood which has come to my knowledge. Heretofore the organized efforts of your people have been in the direction of division of the Territory into two parts, while individuals, partisan localities, and newspapers of the Territory have opposed such efforts.

That is what Mr. SPRINGER said; not that this is the movement of factious Republican politicians, but that it has been the movement of the whole Territory, and has been opposed only by partisan localities.

Mr. President, it is difficult to answer this claim. Senators would better not attempt to answer it. Let me refer to the two issues which they do attempt to make. One is that there is something disrespectful in the claim of South Dakota here; the second, that the people of the Territory of Dakota at this time do not desire division.

I wish to repeat what I have said heretofore in this debate, that there is no Senator here who maintains the right of the people of the Territory to frame a constitution and to demand admission into the Union as a right which can be enforced if it should not be regarded. The Democratic party in times past has held to the right of the people of a Territory to form a constitution and to be admitted into the Union. In the Cincinnati platform of the Democratic party in 1856 it was deliberately asserted that the people of a Territory, upon their own motion, had the right to form a constitution and to be admitted into the Union. But that right is to be exercised with limitations.

It is limited by the discretion of Congress as to the qualifications which a Territory must possess in coming with such a petition. Congress has a right to pass on its boundaries, on its population, on the character of its population, on the sufficiency of its resources, upon its institutions, and to see that all these are consonant with the principles of the Constitution and the principles of the Declaration of Independence. Congress has discretion in these matters, but when Congress abuses that discretion it puts itself in the wrong.

It is said there is no precedent for the people of a portion of a Territory forming a constitution for a State with boundaries less than the entire Territory. The Territories which have been admitted into the Union as States without lessening the area of the Territories at the time of admission are few—not more than two or three. The State has nearly always been less than the Territory. There are four instances in the history of the admission of new States where the people of the Territory without the sanction of Congress have formed a constitution for a new State with boundaries less than the whole Territory and have been admitted by Congress. Yet Senators stand up and say, "Why, this is without precedent." Michigan did it, Iowa did it, Oregon did it, California did it—every one of them forming a constitution without previous authority by Congress, coming with their constitutions, calling themselves States, and being admitted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And all under Democratic administrations.

Mr. PLATT. And all under Democratic administrations. The State of Michigan, while I do not cite it here as a precedent, was very much farther on the road to revolution than anything Dakota has done. Dakota has been orderly, respectful. She has presented her petition to be admitted here with a constitution formed preparatory to admission, and that is all.

The time was in England when the citizen who presented a petition to the king had to do it on bended knees. Do Senators on the other side claim that because Dakota does not come on bended knees with her petition she is to be spurned? Michigan had her constitution formed; she had her State officers exercising the powers of a State government; she had her courts, the supreme court of the State of Michigan and inferior courts, in full operation; she had her militia under arms ready to contend with the State of Ohio about the boundaries of that tract which now embraces the city of Toledo; yet she came with her constitution under those circumstances, and Andrew Jackson transmitted it to Congress as the constitution of the State of Michigan. Do not let us hear any more about disrespect on the part of Dakota.

When the State of California came in her Senators presented "the memorial of the State of California to be admitted into the Union," and it went on the records of the Senate as "the memorial of the State of California to be admitted into the Union." Do not let us quibble over words.

Dakota has done nothing for which she should be kept out of the Union except that in all her trials, in all her troubles, she holds fast to the Republican party and will not send Democratic Senators to this body.

A caucus of the dominant party in this Congress was held to determine whether a State should be admitted. Who ever heard of such a thing before in the troublous history of the United States and the admission of States into the Union? Do you want to go to the country with the plain fact that a party has caucused as to whether it will let a State into the Union?

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator I hope does not mean to intimate that there has been any caucus of the Democratic party upon this question on this side of the Capitol.

Mr. PLATT. No; I do not. On this side they ask, "Why do you not vote to admit Dakota as a whole?" On the other side, not in Congress but out of it, they say this:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the caucus that an enabling act for the Territories of Dakota, Montana, Washington, and New Mexico should be passed at this session, providing for constitutional conventions in each Territory, and the submission of those constitutions for ratification at an election in November, 1888, substantially as provided for in the bill reported by the Committee on Territories at this session.

What is that bill? That bill provides what? That even those four Territories should come into the Union? Not at all. That they may have constitutional conventions and adopt constitutions which they may submit to the people, and if ratified they may come here to Congress asking once more to be admitted, and Congress will then determine whether they or any of them shall be admitted. Then will come up this same old question, if the Democratic party is in power, are a majority of the Senators from those four States Republicans? And the course of this debate justifies me in saying that if they are some pretext will be found to return the matter again to the consideration of those Territories which have not sent Democratic Senators to this body.

I have no words in which I can characterize such an opposition as this. If the population was not there, if the resources were not there, if the area was not there, if republican institutions in their fullest growth were not there, then there would be reason for the exercise of this discretion of Congress in refusing the admission of the State. But when the discretion of Congress is exercised upon any such ground as that two Republican Senators will occupy seats on this floor, it is no longer discretion; it is injustice and it is tyranny. I wish to read one sentence from Bouvier's Law Dictionary on this subject of discretion in law:

The discretion of a judge is said to be the law of tyrants—it is always unknown; it is different in different men; it is casual, and depends upon constitution, temper, and passion. In the best it is oftentimes capriee; in the worst it is every vice, folly, and passion to which human nature is liable.

Is this the American Republic? Is this the nation based upon the fundamental idea that men are free and independent, and therefore States must be free and independent—based upon the idea that men have a right to govern themselves, and that this is a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people, and yet is a Territory with 400,000 people to be kept out of this Union because forsooth it will seat two Republican Senators if it comes in?

I said we would appeal to the people, and I want to say to the people of Dakota that in my judgment they will not have long to wait. A great wrong like this goes beyond the boundaries of the locality in which it is committed. It goes to the hearts and consciences of men. This keeping Dakota out of the Union is un-American, and the party which adds to its other un-American tendencies this un-American act of depriving a people of the right of self-government can not stand before the judgment of the people of the United States.

Now, Mr. President, there is one other thing that I wish to speak of, and that is the question of whether the people of Dakota desire division. Who speaks for the people of Dakota? Is it the Delegate in Congress?

Every Delegate in Congress since 1871 has presented memorials of the Legislature of Dakota or introduced bills for the division of this Territory. Who speaks for a Territory if not its Delegate and its Legislature? Twice the Legislature of the Territory of Dakota has authorized the calling of a constitutional convention for the framing of a constitution for the southern half of Dakota as a State. Who else has a right to speak for the people of Dakota? Oh, the Senator says, Mr. Johnson and his skeleton Aberdeen convention are now to be listened to as expressing the popular will of that Territory. I have not a great deal to say about Mr. Johnson and the Aberdeen convention; and if I had it is too late an hour to say it; but Mr. Johnson is not the disinterested, business, non-partisan man that he assumes to be. Since politics has been lugged into this debate, let me ask who is Mr. Johnson?

Mr. Johnson was a member of the last (not the present) Democratic Congressional campaign committee for the Territory of Dakota. He was the Democratic manager of the last campaign for the election of Delegate in the Territory of Dakota. And yet he is presented by the Senator from South Carolina as being a non-partisan man who is influenced only by disinterested motives and business considerations. When a Democratic governor went to the Territory of Dakota the edict went forth from this capital that the division of the Territory must be prevented. The campaign was made; the question was submitted to a vote of the entire people of the Territory of Dakota. The anti-divisionists, the one-State men, the Democratic officials of the Territory lost, and the verdict of the people of Dakota was against them. Something had to be done. I will not speak of different sections of the country; I will not say that there is any section of the country where the people do not abide by majorities; but I say wherever fair dealing is had, wherever regard for this Union is had, the people ought to regard the will of the majority.

Submitted to the people of Dakota in an election confessedly fair, where nobody charges that there was fraud, the people of Dakota voted by a large majority, 5,000, in favor of division. Something had to be done. Mr. Johnson thereupon, within ten days afterwards, moved in the matter of calling the Aberdeen convention. Where was the caucus held to decide upon that? Not in the Territory of Dakota, but in St. Paul, in the State of Minnesota. When two sections of the Territory wanted to meet to consider this question they went out of the Territory because the situation was such that it was inconvenient, if not impracticable, for them to meet at any point in the Territory, a commentary upon this whole question which ought not to be overlooked. That convention was called.

It is said that there were fifteen thousand names to the call. They never have appeared; nobody has ever seen those fifteen thousand names, unless it be Mr. Johnson. The Delegate of the Territory tells you in his testimony that the Territory was canvassed and advertised as a circus would be advertised to endeavor to get signatures to that call. It is said there were fifteen thousand names. Perhaps I can not deny it, but I say that nobody ever saw them that has told the committee so, except Mr. Johnson. The convention was held within about thirty days after this vote of the Territory, and I am not going to say anything about Captain Johnson or the men who attended that convention except what the Delegate says. He says their voice is entitled to the same credit that would be given to the voices of any other respectable gentlemen of Dakota in equal numbers, but the trouble is there were not enough of them to make a convention. You might as well talk about Falstaff and his recruits constituting a regiment or a brigade as to talk about the numbers that were there constituting a convention which was expressive of the popular will of the people of Dakota. There were in that convention not over 250 persons in an accredited delegation of 968. I have affidavits here on my table of three persons who say they counted the persons actually there, and that there were at no time over 180 persons in attendance upon that convention.

How was it when the constitutional conventions were held? From all portions of the Territory, in inclement weather, by stage and on foot, the delegates of the people of that Territory flocked to the convention. But here was a convention proposing to express a reversal of the judgment of the opinion of the people of that Territory given at the ballot-box, which consisted of one hundred and eighty men actually present; and how were they appointed? Some of them never were appointed. I can not refer to many of these affidavits, but here is one that I want to put in the RECORD:

TERRITORY OF DAKOTA, County of Bon Homme, ss:

We, the undersigned, whose names are reported as members from Bon Homme County, Dakota, to the convention held in Aberdeen, Dak., December 15, 1887, do solemnly swear that if elected as delegates to said convention it was without our knowledge or consent; that we did not attend said convention, nor authorize any person or persons to act for us in said convention, and that we are not in sympathy with the avowed object of the convention as we understand it, namely, the one-State movement.

There are nine names out of twelve delegates who appear on the roll of the convention who sign their names to this statement and swear to it and say they never were elected, and yet the vote of that county was cast, 12 votes, against the division of the Territory! I will refer in what I have to say now to no county in regard to which I have not affidavits upon my table.

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him one moment?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. I understand there are possibly one or more speeches after the Senator concludes, and his speech will necessarily be a long one. Will he not yield to a motion to adjourn?

Mr. PLATT. I can not at the present time. Let me go through with my speech. It will not be long I assure the Senator.

I will refer with regard to the mode in which those delegates were elected, to no cases except where I have affidavits upon my table to sustain the statements I make. They are from men who, I am assured by the Territorial Delegate, can be relied upon.

Deuel County cast 10 votes on roll-call; no convention held or claimed to have been held for the election of delegates.

Bon Homme County I have spoken of.

Grant County, twelve persons held the "mass convention" which was to represent the sentiment, the overwhelming sentiment of the people of Grant County against division, and elected thirteen delegates. Twelve persons held a convention and elected thirteen delegates!

Day County, no convention, no delegates. The clerk of the county court voluntarily attended and cast 12 votes for Day County.

Mr. BUTLER. Is that done at any election in the North?

Mr. PLATT. I am trying to make the Senator understand that this was not an election and was not an expression of the people of that Territory.

Mr. BUTLER. I thought those things were confined entirely to my party, according to that side of the Chamber.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They are all for your party.

Mr. BUTLER. When we have the help of the Senator from Vermont everything will be lovely!

Mr. PLATT. I beg the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to this. I hope to shock even him.

Mr. BUTLER. I am shocked in advance.

Mr. PLATT. Union County had just voted, for division of the Territory 587, and against it 290. No delegates were elected or attended the convention, but there were 17 votes on the roll-call. Seventeen votes were cast in that convention for Union County against division.

Mr. BUTLER. The only thing that shocks me about that is that it occurred in Dakota.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Because the Democratic party exists there.

Mr. PLATT. The truth about it is just this, that by ways which I can not recite without stirring up the Senators on the other side, ways which are familiar in certain sections of the country, the Democratic officials undertook to hold a convention up in Dakota and to call it a convention which expressed the will of the people, undertook to make a pitiful minority appear to be a majority.

Mr. BUTLER. The fact is that the Republicans were in the majority in that convention.

Mr. PLATT. Oh, no.

Mr. BUTLER. So it is reported.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Reported by the same people who made up the convention.

Mr. PLATT. I am not through with this convention yet, this convention upon which the Senator from South Carolina bases all his hope of being able to show that the people of Dakota do not desire to be divided. Sanborn County had just voted, for division, 944, and against it, 95. They held a "mass meeting," composed of two men, the postmaster and a man by the name of Carpenter; they held a convention and elected eight delegates, and 8 votes were cast in the convention.

Mr. FRYE. Those votes were cast against division.

Mr. PLATT. They all were. It was unanimous against division.

Faulk County had just voted, 886 for division and 74 against it. There were four persons at the convention which elected delegates, the "mass convention" which elected delegates, and they sent six delegates. All voted against division.

Mr. FRYE. A mass convention of four!

Mr. PLATT. Codington County had just voted 977 votes for division and 361 against. At its "mass convention" there were eleven delegates chosen by six persons, and one delegate attended the convention and cast a vote for the whole eleven.

Burleigh County, in which Bismarck is located, the capital of the Territory, a populous capital, held another "mass convention" to elect delegates, and seven men and a boy sent eleven delegates. I have the affidavits here, and they would not be disputed if I gave the names of the men.

La Moure County, Northern Dakota. This is where it is said they do not want to be divided. There were five men and a boy in the mass convention and they elected five delegates. The boy did not get in.

In Yankton County, in the Southeastern part of the Territory, where it is said the home of this division sentiment is, which had just voted 796 for division and 67 against it, they had twenty persons attending the mass convention. Those eleven men chose nineteen delegates, and how many attended nobody knows, but the whole nineteen votes were cast.

As to Davison County, I have an affidavit here from a man who was one of the members of the mass convention. Davison County had just voted 1,013 votes for division and 179 against it. It sent twelve delegates to represent that county as being opposed to division and one of the men who attended that convention gives his affidavit in which he says:

A few of us got together and made up the list, not to exceed ten persons in all.

Lawrence County—and I must stop a moment. This will be the last to which I shall allude. They are all of the same kind, but I must allude to Lawrence County.

I wanted to read from the resolutions that were passed in the Lawrence County convention. Deadwood is in Lawrence County. Lawrence County is a populous county in the mining district of Dakota. It has ten or twelve thousand inhabitants. It has been a division county, always a division county, and Judge Bennett, whom the Senator from South Carolina quotes with a good deal of gusto, attended that convention. There they passed resolutions against division and in favor of admission as one State; high-sounding resolutions. You would have supposed to listen to these resolutions that the whole people of Lawrence County were terribly in earnest about this question of being admitted as one State. Here are the resolutions:

Whereas the Territory of Dakota from small beginning has grown in strength, wealth, population, and in the varied industries of civilization to proportions so great as fairly to entitle her to statehood; and, as the times are auspicious for her citizens to request Congress of the United States—which is charged with duty and clothed with the power of admitting new States—to hasten that event by an early consideration of the condition of our people and their strong desire for local self government—to this end we invite public attention to the general intelligence of the people who have selected homes and cast their lots on the virgin bosom of this empire Territory, to their public and social virtues, to the rapid strides of social industries, the bounteous rewards bestowed on the labor of the husbandman and the miner, to the strong financial credit which the Territory has without as well as within her borders, and to the good order observed everywhere within her limits. The local feeling manifest, in times past, in certain sections, to arrogate for the inhabitants of a section of the Territory extraordinary political power belonging only to Congress has subsided, and is rapidly dissipating under more sober consideration.

Therefore, the people of Lawrence County in convention assembled at Deadwood, declare that they are desirous that our form of local government shall be changed to a more stable and satisfactory one of a State; and irrespective of party affiliations, they respectfully request the national Congress to pass an act to enable the people of the Territory to form a State government in the usual and ordinary manner, and that the same paternal solicitude heretofore evinced, and the same generous bounty that has been extended by Congress toward new States, may not be omitted in the enabling act for Dakota. It is therefore,

Resolved, That this Convention desires the early admission as a State of the Union of the entire Territory of Dakota.

I suppose that when these resolutions were presented by the Senator from South Carolina, Senators who paid attention pictured to themselves a great, earnest uprising of the people of Lawrence County to express themselves upon this subject. They thought of the full hall, of the enthusiasm manifested in their haste to get in not as two States but as one. I am sorry to disturb them in their enjoyment of the picture, but Lawrence County had just voted 1,054 for division and 641 against it. The "mass convention" consisted of sixteen persons—the convention that passed these high-sounding resolutions. I have here the names of all the persons who composed it, and their politics and their offices. Of the six names signed to the call for Lawrence County, two are unknown to anybody in the county, and one is a resident of Clay County. But these sixteen men sent twenty-one delegates to the convention that adopted these wonderful resolutions expressive of the will of the people of Lawrence County for early admission as a whole, but they did not attend.

They sent them, but they did not go; and the most remarkable thing about the whole matter is that this county, brought up here and relied upon by the Senator from South Carolina upon the authority of Judge Bennett as being in favor of the admission of the whole Territory as one State, cast its vote in that convention by Governor Pennington authorized by a vote of the convention to cast the vote of Lawrence County, and here it is in the record. Here is part of the record of the convention:

Governor PENNINGTON. As to the letter from my distinguished friend, of Lawrence County, I desire, as the Congressman would say, to adopt that as a part of my speech, and I move that the chairman be authorized to name some person present, if any one is present who can do so, to cast the entire vote of Lawrence County.

The motion was seconded by M. W. Greene, of Cass County, and carried.

The Chair then appointed Governor Pennington as the person to cast the vote of Lawrence County.

Mr. DAWES. Where did he live?

Mr. PLATT. He lived at Yankton. Is it not a farce? Was ever such a farce as the attempt to make out that this Aberdeen convention—this skeleton of a convention of not more than 180 men—speak for the people of the Territory of Dakota as to whether they want one or two States? It is too late to say that the people of Dakota do not desire division. They have been praying for it ever since 1871. They have been begging for it. They have come, as the Senator from Missouri would have them come, on their knees, to ask for it; and the only reason there was not a much larger majority in favor of division than appeared at the election in which the vote was cast, as I stated in my opening argument, was simply because they had been given to understand by the leaders of the Democratic party in Washington that they could not get in unless they came as one State.

Let me read just a word from the letter of Mr. SPRINGER to the Aberdeen convention. Was it not a strange thing in a far-off Territory, where its people were supposed to meet to determine how they should petition Congress to be admitted into the Union as a State, to express their own sentiments untrammeled and uninfluenced, that a letter from the Democratic chairman of the Committee on the Territories in the House of Representatives should be spread upon the records of that convention? What would have been said if at a division meeting a letter had been sent to the meeting from me telling them to hold on and stand by their position, that the day of deliverance was near; to be patient, and that their claim would at last be recognized by the American people? What would have been said about that? And yet Mr. SPRINGER tells them at that convention:

Those who are wedded to the idea of division may well postpone the realization of their hopes until a more convenient season. For I can assure them, from my knowledge of public sentiment here—that the division of Dakota at this time, and the erection of two States within her border, is utterly impossible.

He told the truth; he spoke for a larger constituency than the Territorial Committee of the House; he spoke for the entire Democratic party.

Now, Mr. President, a single allusion to another thing that was said by the Senator from South Carolina. He attacks the report made by me, and suggests that it is impossible that the name that was proposed to be given to the Territory which would remain after the State should be admitted could have any influence whatever in determining whether the people would vote for admission as a whole or for division. I think it is a wonder that the people of that Territory at that election voted 5,000 strong for division. Their desire for statehood is so intense, they are so anxious to be admitted to participate in the benefits and privileges of this Union, they so desire statehood at any price, that I should not have been surprised if the vote had been against division; and then a people dislikes to have its name taken away from it. I have no doubt, as I stated in my report, that it cost many votes. The Senator from South Carolina says, is it possible that the proposed name of Lincoln should make anybody vote against division, that the proposal that the name of that great and illustrious President should be given to the Territory should have any influence upon the people?

He seems to draw by inference the conclusion that the people of Dakota do not reverence the name of Lincoln as do the people of South Carolina and the Senator himself, if that can be true. Why, Mr. President, no such inference is to be drawn. Suppose that some one should propose to change the name of the Senator and call him by the name of that most illustrious of all Presidents, the father of his country, and that his name henceforth, instead of being Matthew C. Butler should be Matthew C. Washington, and that he should object and say, "My name is Butler; I do not desire to change it." Would he be held lacking in respect and admiration for the great name of Washington? Not at all. And no more are the soldiers of North Dakota, who followed the flag and carried the musket, who, under the lead of the great Lincoln, preserved the Government when it was assailed—no more are they to be charged with being wanting in respect to the name of Lincoln. I congratulate the Senator from South Carolina, and I congratulate the country on his new-born zeal and admiration for the memory of Lincoln.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Connecticut permit me to say a word?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Every Southern man in his heart admits that Mr. Lincoln was a true patriot, and does him reverence and honor. So this is not new-born zeal on my part.

Mr. PLATT. Oh, Mr. President, I am not very old, but I remember the time myself—I do not attribute it to the Senator from South Carolina—when the men of his section and with whom he affiliated called that great man a "tyrant" and his soldiers "Lincoln's hirelings," when they called him a "buffoon" and a "baboon," and I think I do not misstate the truth of history when I say that a recently chosen occupant of a seat upon the bench of the Supreme Court in a public speech called him a "buffoon."

Mr. BUTLER. Where was that, and when?

Mr. PLATT. I think it was in a Richmond speech. All these things are too recent in the memory of some of us. The election of Abraham Lincoln was made the occasion of secession. In the secession convention it was insisted upon as a justifiable cause of secession. I congratulate the Senator and the country once more that whether the love and admiration are new-born or old-born, he and his people do now admire and reverence the name of Lincoln.

One other allusion, and I am done. There have been many surprises, Mr. President, in this discussion; but the greatest surprise of all was when the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] suggested that I had some ambition in this matter, that I was ambitious in some way to connect my name with the future history of the State of South Dakota, that I might be considered in some sense as its legislative founder. No, Mr. President, this movement did not originate with me. It has been here year after year, advocated by abler men than myself, but by none, I am sure, who have felt more keenly the injustice done to this people. If the Senator from Indiana had known me as I would wish to be known, he would have understood that the idea of connecting my name with the future of the State of South Dakota had never entered my mind.

Mr. President, if I know my own heart, ambition is with me a thing of the past. Whatever of ambition I may have had in my younger years has been satisfied in full measure by the confidence which is reposed in me by the people of my own State. I have but a single ambition left, and that has prompted me in all that I have done with reference to South Dakota. It is to do well, as well as I may, those things which are set me to do. But, if I were ambitious, what nobler, higher incentive or motive could a man have than here in the Senate of the United States to speak for that voiceless people of South Dakota, to beg, yes, in their name, to demand that the citizens of that Territory shall be accorded the common right enjoyed by the humblest citizens of any State—the right of self-government?

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, it was stated yesterday by the Senator from Ohio that gross outrages on the ballot-box had been committed all over the South; and the Senator from Massachusetts to-day has referred to the events of the election of 1876 in Florida. I do not think I should be justified in remaining entirely silent at the present time under such accusations, because my silence might be construed as admitting the truth of the statements made; but still I do not propose to consume the time of the Senate at this late hour, after this long discussion, in bringing up the matter; but I simply desire to give notice that I will on a future occasion submit a few remarks on the condition of things in the State of Florida.

Mr. CALL. I do not propose to detain the Senate by making any further remarks on this bill; but I wish to make a statement of facts, which will occupy about five minutes, that I think will be a successful refutation of and answer to the argument made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] in regard to the Electoral Commission. I wish it to go on the record in reply to his statement that the commission acted under the authority of the principle that the tribunals of the State were to be respected in their action as a finality in determining who were chosen electors of President.

In the State of Florida the Republican returning board, upon the conclusion of their informal canvass of the returns, were served with a mandamus from the Republican supreme court of the State of Florida, requiring them to canvass all the returns of the different counties. In reply to that writ the Republican returning board did canvass, under the instructions of the supreme court of the State, a Republican tribunal, the vote of that State, and declared the Democratic candidate, Drew, elected governor. No canvass was made by them under any writ of the court of the electoral candidates, but they applied a different rule to the canvass for the electoral candidates, excluding from the return the celebrated precinct box No. 2, I think it was.

At that stage of the transaction the circuit court of the State of Florida was appealed to and by a writ of quo warranto addressed to those electors who, under this canvass, were declared to be the electors, and upon proceedings had in accordance with law under the construction and the decision of the Republican supreme court of the State, the judgment was awarded in favor of the Democratic electors according to the canvass as made under the direction of the supreme court. The governor, who was installed under that decision of the supreme court, certified to the fact that these were the electors elected under that canvass and construction of the law by the supreme court of the State, that the judgment rendered in the circuit court, from which no appeal was taken, and the records of these proceedings were correct records to which full faith should be given under the provisions of law.

Thus stood the case before the commission, with the certificate of the governor installed under the mandamus of the supreme court declaring the canvass of the electoral votes to have been irregular and fraudulent, with the canvass as made by the Legislature of the State, having thus the judgment of the supreme court, the judgment of the circuit court, the certificate of the governor of the State, and behind it all the fact, as admitted and on file in the records here, that the vote for the Hayes electors at No. 2 precinct was a fraud from beginning to end and made upon a substituted return, forged and falsely sworn to and confessed by the very perpetrators of the fraud.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not propose to delay the Senate from a vote on the admission of Dakota by entering at length this evening into the discussion of the Presidential election of 1876 in reference to the controverted State of Florida or any other State. I hope I may be present in the Senate when the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] takes occasion to submit the remarks which he has given notice that he will make on that subject, and I shall hope to maintain as best I may the justice, equity, and lawfulness of the count of the Presidential vote of the State of Florida in 1876 for President Hayes.

In reference now to the statement made by the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] in regard to the judgment of the courts of the State of Florida, which he says was disregarded by the Electoral Commission, I take occasion to call his attention to the fact that what he refers to was the finding of one judge of a circuit court of the State. The judgment of the supreme court of the State of Florida never was rendered in favor of the election of my friend, the Senator, and the other three defeated candidates for Presidential electors. A quo warranto proceeding was commenced on the 6th day of December, 1876, at the time when the Presidential electors were engaged in casting their votes. It was prosecuted before one judge. A decision was rendered on the 25th day of January, 1877, and not until that time. An appeal was taken, and that appeal never was heard before the supreme court of the State of Florida, and the electors had cast their votes on the 6th of December and were casting them at the time this quo warranto proceeding was commenced, and, as every Senator knows, an appeal vacates a judgment, and the proceedings were in every point of view absolutely worthless for any purpose.

Mr. PASCO. I will state to the gentleman that the appeal was reached and that the counsel engaged in that cause for the Hayes electors abandoned the appeal.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think possibly such may have been the case after President Hayes was inaugurated.

Mr. PASCO. It was done when the case was reached on the docket.

Mr. KENNA. The Senator announced that it had never been heard at all.

Mr. CHANDLER. Which Senator is addressing me? Am I yielding to the Senator from Florida or to the Senator from West Virginia?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am willing to yield to either Senator or to both at once.

Mr. PASCO. I was saying——

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator will excuse me. I think he was interrupted by the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. PASCO. Not at all. I will state that the appeal was heard by the supreme court. The counsel for the Hayes electors abandoned the case, and the appeal was dismissed.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator state at what date?

Mr. PASCO. When the case came up from the court below, when the case came to the supreme court on the regular call of the docket, after the election. It was delayed because the counsel on one side refused to advance the case on the docket and allow it to be heard.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator state now when, as a matter of fact, the appeal was abandoned?

Mr. PASCO. The appeal was abandoned. The appeal was only entered to delay action under the original judgment. It never was intended to be prosecuted.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator state, if he knows, when the appeal was abandoned in the supreme court?

Mr. PASCO. The appeal was taken after the election was over.

Mr. CHANDLER. On what date was it abandoned?

Mr. PASCO. I can not give the date, but it was after the election was over.

Mr. CHANDLER. After what election? After the 4th of March?

Mr. PASCO. It was after the vote declaring the canvass of the counties, and the result was declared by the Legislature.

Mr. HOAR. Here is the statement of Charles O'Conor, one of the Democratic counsel, of the whole case.

Mr. CHANDLER. Unless the Senator from Florida has something more to say, I will go on.

Mr. PASCO. The appeal was never prosecuted and never was intended to be prosecuted. It was abandoned in the supreme court, and, finally, when the case was reached in its regular order on the docket, the supreme court made an order dismissing the appeal.

Mr. CHANDLER. The gentleman has been very free in stating the objects and motives of the appeal and of that prosecution. It is sufficient to say that it was the judgment of one member of the court on a nisi prius hearing. It was appealed from and the appeal was never heard, and by every rule of law the appeal vacated the judgment and it was of no account.

Mr. KENNA. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. KENNA. Does the Senator mean to assert that when a judgment is rendered by a judge of a nisi prius court and that judgment is appealed from, the abandonment of that appeal does not leave the judgment of the judge of the nisi prius court in full force and effect?

Mr. CHANDLER. I did not say anything of that kind. I said that pending the appeal the judgment was of no account, and I stand by that assertion.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. CALL. I should like the Senator to answer the question whether he asserts or denies that the canvass as ordered by the supreme court for governor determined exactly by the course of law what was the proper canvass of the vote for electors?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will answer the question by saying that I deny it, and I have before me the canvass. The vote for the Republican candidate for governor was several hundred less than the vote for the Republican candidates for electors, and when the recanvass was made by the canvassing board under the order of the supreme court of the State and in accordance with certain principles announced by the court, and that recanvass counted in the Democratic candidate for governor, the canvassing board proceeded to—make further return to the court, and say that though not ordered so to do by the court, for various reasons they deemed it best to make, while reassembled as a board as aforesaid, a recanvass of the said returns of the said election on file in the office of the Secretary of State, of and concerning the election of other officers voted for at said election, which will be found in the certificate of the result of such recanvass hereto appended as part of this return. And the undersigned further inform the court that we regard our former canvass of the returns of the election for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, on file in the office of the Secretary of State, as conclusive. Yet, in view of the decision of the Supreme Court, we have re-examined the said returns, and find that a recanvass of them according to the said decision would show that of the candidates for said electors Frederick C. Humphreys received 24,215 votes, Charles H. Pearce received 24,211 votes, Thomas W. Long received 24,209 votes, William H. Holden received 24,215 votes, James E. Yonge received 24,004 votes, Wilkinson Call received 24,001 votes, Robert B. Hilton received 24,001 votes, Robert Bullock received 24,001 votes.

So that upon the recanvass made by the canvassing board upon the order of the supreme court and in accordance with the principles of the supreme court, my friend, the senior Senator, and the other three so-called Tilden electors were defeated by about 200.

Mr. CALL. The question I asked the Senator to answer is this——

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Florida will permit me to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question. I should like very much to know whether the Senator wants to try that Florida case over again this evening. If that is the intention, I will make my arrangement to——

Mr. PLATT. I hope we may have a vote on Dakota.

Mr. CHANDLER. All I desire to add further—and I believe I have not occupied quite so much time as my interrupters—is to read at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] Mr. O'Conor's statement. He says:

A quo warranto was commenced against the Hayes electors in the proper court of Florida on the said 6th day of December, 1876—

That was when the electors were voting—

before they had cast their votes, which eventuated in a judgment against them on 25th of January, 1877.

Then it appears from Mr. McCrary's statement that—

An appeal has been regularly taken in that case and that it is now pending in the supreme court of the State of Florida, and whatever may have been the value or the force of the original judgment of the circuit court, it is vacated by that appeal.

This, however, is not the whole question with reference to the decision of the Electoral Commission, for a majority of the Electoral Commission held that after the electoral votes had been cast by the electors on the 6th day of December they were in the national ballot-boxes, and that they were beyond the reach of any State authority, Legislature, court, or any other authority, and that I understand to be, as stated by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], the exact law which has recently been passed by both Houses of Congress.

Mr. CALL. The Senator will allow me——

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield the floor altogether.

Mr. CALL. This is all I have to say. If the Senator had stated the fact that precisely the same return of the votes cast for electors and cast for governor required, by the decision of the supreme court, to be canvassed had been canvassed by that returning board, the result would have been in favor of the Democratic electors under the ruling of that court, not only in that case, but in the case of the governor.

Does the Senator not know the fact that Mr. Dennis, a Republican official, and a politician of conspicuous standing and reputation in that State, himself testified—and his testimony is on file—that the returns which the returning board assigned to the electors at ballot-box No. 2 was forged by himself and the affidavits attached to it, and that statement is on record?

Mr. CHANDLER. I deny the statement of the Senator in toto. Mr. Dennis never testified to any such thing, and the principle that the Senator states in reference to the declaration of the vote upon the recanvass he states incorrectly, as I understand.

Several SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] to the amendment reported by the Committee on Territories.

Mr. BUTLER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK]. As he is not here I shall withhold my vote. I would vote "yea" if at liberty.

Mr. FAULKNER (when Mr. COCKRELL's name was called). I am requested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to state that he is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. HARRIS (when Mr. DANIEL's name was called). The Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] is necessarily absent. I have a standing pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. I have transferred that pair, as the Senator from Vermont is also absent, to the Senator from Virginia, and therefore I reserve the right to vote.

Mr. DOLPH (when his name was called). I have agreed to pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. CULLOM. He is paired with another Senator.

Mr. DOLPH. I am informed that the pair of the Senator from Ohio has been transferred to the senior Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD]. I vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER (when Mr. HAMPTON'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HAMPTON] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. HISCOCK (when his name was called). I was paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] with the understanding that I may vote to make a quorum. Understanding that the pair has been transferred to another Senator, I vote "nay."

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. If he were present, I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

Mr. STEWART (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. If he were here, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MORGAN. I was paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], but the pair has been transferred to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. CULLOM. I rise simply to announce pairs. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. The Senator from Colorado, if present, would vote "nay," and I suppose the Senator from Louisiana would vote "yea." The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON]. The Senator from Maine would vote "nay," if present, and the Senator from Louisiana would vote "yea." The Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] is paired with the Senator from California [Mr. HEARST]. The Senator from Nevada, if present, would vote "nay," and the Senator from California would vote "yea." The Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE], and, if present, would vote with his party. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. The pair of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK], I believe, has been announced.

I believe those are all who are absent and unaccounted for.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 26; as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. PLATT. I move to amend the title so as to read: "A bill to provide for the admission of the State of South Dakota into the Union, and for the organization of the Territory of North Dakota."

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I had intended to ask the Senate immediately upon the conclusion of this bill to take up the other bills for three Territories, but I know now that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] is desirous of proceeding with the special order, and that is entitled to the right of way. I wish merely to say that just as soon as I can get up those bills for the admission of the three other Territories as States I shall do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Two bills have been assigned by order of the Senate as special orders.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to make a report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received, if there be no objection.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 56) authorizing the use and improvement of Castle Island, in Boston Harbor, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I shall ask to have that Castle Island joint resolution taken up in the morning hour at an early day next week.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 349) for the erection of a public building at Akron, Ohio, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1864) to provide for the erection of a public building at San Diego, Cal., reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1948) to authorize the Fort Smith and Choctaw Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Poteau River, in the Choctaw Nation, near Fort Smith, Ark., reported it with amendments.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1507) providing for an additional associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before submitting that motion the Chair will lay before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

The bill (H. R. 5929) to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across Staten Island Sound was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 8560) to establish a department of labor was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The bill (H. R. 8665) to create boards of arbitration or commission for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations and other common carriers engaged in interstate and Territorial transportation of property or passengers and their employés was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, if no objection be interposed.

Mr. BLAIR. The bill from the House providing for the appointment of a board of arbitration should be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That reference will be made if there be no objection.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. FAULKNER introduced a bill (S. 2740) for the relief of the trustees of the German Evangelical Church of Martinsburgh, W. Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the special order, which is the bill (S. 2083) to provide for the establishment of a Bureau of Animal Industry, and to facilitate the exportation of live-stock and their products, to extirpate contagious pleuro-pneumonia and other diseases among domestic animals, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRIS. I renew my motion that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 23, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 19, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

UNITED STATES PENITENTIARY, DEER LODGE CITY, MONT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, transmitting a letter from the governor of Montana, recommending additions to the United States penitentiary at Deer Lodge City, Mont.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

KANSAS CITY, TEXARKANA AND GULF RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2179) authorizing the Kansas City, Texarkana and Gulf Railroad Company to bridge the Red and Little Rivers, in the State of Arkansas; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, this is exactly similar to the bill introduced by me some time ago, and which has been favorably reported by the House Committee on Commerce, and would no doubt have been passed but for the filibuster of last week, which knocked the committee out of its day. This road has been constructed to Red River, one of the rivers to be bridged, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that it be considered now.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I feel compelled to demand the regular order, even against the request of one of my colleagues.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, this is an important matter to the railroad company and some of my constituents who want the road. It is important that it pass at once. It will take no money, and but little time, only enough to read it. If more I will agree to withdraw it. It will not interfere with the tariff bill, or with any other matter of importance, and it should be considered now. It will take but a very few minutes. The road is constructed to one of the rivers, and this authority to bridge the stream in question should be granted at once. I am utterly astonished that my colleague should interpose his objection to a measure so just and urgent.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. There is no objection to the bill on my part; but for the purpose of getting on with matters of public importance I must insist upon the regular order.

Mr. McRAE. That is no explanation at all. It defeats the bill, and men are presumed to intend the consequences of their own acts. This is a matter of public importance.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the bill lie over until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate bills; which were severally read twice, and referred as follows, namely:

The bill (S. 21) to provide for the construction of a public building at Salem, Oregon—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill (S. 164) for the erection of a public building in the city of Pawtucket, R. I.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

OMAHA INDIANS, NEBRASKA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2267) for the relief of the Omaha tribe of Indians in Nebraska, to extend the time of payment to purchasers of land of said Indians, and for other purposes; which was read twice.

Mr. DORSEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas insists upon the regular order, which cuts off all requests for unanimous consent.

Mr. DORSEY. It will take but a moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the gentleman's request to the House. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate bill?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The regular order has been demanded, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DORSEY. Then I ask that this bill be allowed to remain on the table for the present.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request with reference to the bill called up by my colleague [Mr. McRAE] a few moments ago.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

EMORY R. SEWARD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7319) for the relief of Emory R. Seward, returned with amendments and a request by the Senate for a committee of conference.

Mr. BELDEN. I ask unanimous consent that the House non-concur in the amendments, and that the request of the Senate for a committee of conference be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York that the gentleman from Arkansas demands the regular order, and unless that is withdrawn the Chair must enforce the regular order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let that lie on the table.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, said: I learn that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELDEN], who asked for the appointment of a conference committee, is compelled to leave the city to attend a funeral. In regard to his request I withdraw the demand for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has stated his request. If there be no objection, the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 7319) will be non-concurred in and a committee of conference agreed to as requested.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the managers of the conference on the part of the House during the day.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7220) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn.," approved February 25, 1885, and the act amendatory thereof approved February 25, 1887.

A bill (H. R. 7315) to divide the Great Sioux Indian reservation into separate smaller reservations, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent to make a request which I think will meet the views of gentlemen interested. I propose that to-day the Committee on Ways and Means shall give way to the Committee on Appropriations for the completion of the Indian appropriation bill and for the pension appropriation bill, and that Saturday be taken from the Committee on Public Lands and be devoted to the continuation of the tariff debate, and that the Committee on Public Lands shall have next Tuesday in lieu of Saturday. To-morrow, of course, is private bill day.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask the gentleman whether the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands [Mr. HOLMAN] has been consulted?

Mr. MILLS. He has been, and agrees to this arrangement.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is correct.

Mr. BURROWS. Why might not the Committee on Public Lands have its day on Saturday, as previously agreed, and let the debate on the tariff be resumed on Tuesday?

Mr. MILLS. I made the suggestion at the instance of my friend from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN]. If my friend from Tennessee is willing and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] is willing, I have no objection to what the gentleman from Michigan suggests.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have no feeling in the matter. Whatever suits the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means will be agreeable to me. The House no doubt desires to get the appropriation bills into the Senate as speedily as possible that the Senate may have an opportunity of working upon them.

The SPEAKER. Then there is no necessity for any order.

Mr. MCCREARY. I wish to inquire whether the pension appropriation bill comes next on the Calendar to the Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. MILLS. It does.

The SPEAKER. There is no necessity for any order if it is understood that the House will assign to-day for the consideration of other business than the tariff.

Mr. MILLS. Is that agreed to?

The SPEAKER. There is no necessity for an agreement. The order giving Saturday to the Committee on the Public Lands has already been made; and all the gentleman from Texas has to do to carry out his proposition is simply not to move to-day that the House go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of revenue measures.

Mr. REED. Then that is understood.

BEACON LIGHTS FOR ILLINOIS RIVER.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 2085) to provide for protecting the navigation of the Illinois River by extending the system of beacon lights to said river, which was laid before the House this morning, be returned to the Speaker's table.

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. FORAN. I desire to make a personal explanation. During the latter part of last week I was paired with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HOLMES]. When I reached the city yesterday morning I notified the officer who has charge of the pairs that my pair would be withdrawn, and supposed it would be. On yesterday I voted and find that I am recorded as being paired. It was not my fault.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PEEL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have first to move to dispense with the morning hour for the reports of committees, which requires a two-thirds vote.

Mr. PEEL. I make that motion.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the morning hour is dispensed with, I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen who have reports to make have leave to file them at the Clerk's desk.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The motion to dispense with the morning hour was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

The reports filed at the Clerk's desk were as follows:

Mr. ROWELL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with an amendment the bill (S. 2458) to amend an act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River at the foot of Pennsylvania avenue east; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the amendment and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON CABLE ELECTRIC RAILWAY.

Mr. ROWELL also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with amendments the bill (S. 931) to incorporate the Washington Cable Electric Railway of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. NEAL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 6142, a bill (H. R. 9556) for the erection of a public building at Lima, Ohio; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill H. R. 6142 was laid on the table.

CITY OF TACOMA, WASH.

Mr. VOORHEES, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 1870) granting the use of certain lands in Pierce County, Washington Territory, to the city of Tacoma for the purposes of a public park; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

AID TO WRECKED VESSELS.

Mr. CHIPMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 8063) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid vessels wrecked or disabled in the waters coterminous to the United States and the Dominion of Canada," approved June 19, 1878; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS.

Mr. GALLINGER, in accordance with leave hitherto granted, presented the views of the minority of the Committee on Invalid Pensions on the bill (S. 181) granting pensions to ex-soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to dependent relatives of deceased soldiers and sailors; which were ordered to be printed with the report of the committee, as Part 2.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of appropriation bills was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills. The Clerk will report the pending bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8565) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. At the last sitting of the Committee of the Whole upon this bill an amendment was pending which the Clerk will now report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 1020, the following amendment was submitted by the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CANNON:

"For the support of eighty Indians at the Cherokee training-school, at Cherokee, N. C., at $150 per annum each, $12,000."

To which the following amendment was proposed by the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. JOHNSTON:

"To be paid out to such persons as may be employed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to superintend such schools, and for the support of such schools."

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I desire permission to withdraw that amendment, in order that I may offer another by way of a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, offered the following as a substitute for the pending amendment of Mr. CANNON:

For the support of the training-school at Cherokee, N. C., and such other schools as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may think necessary, $12,000.

Mr. CANNON. I can not assent to that amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in offering this amendment is to give a discretion to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I do not want to interfere at all with the school already established; but the trouble is that that school is so situated that a considerable number of pupils living at a distance of from 50 to 60 miles are deprived of its benefits. My purpose is to put within the control of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs this $12,000, so that he may keep up this existing school and also may establish such others as he may think necessary for the benefit of the whole of the Indians in that part of the country. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman desires to provide for additional training-schools, I hope he will offer an amendment for that purpose that will not interfere with the one I have offered. These are the facts touching the training-school for the Eastern Cherokees. There is one training-school, and it has now only forty pupils. Gentlemen understand what a training-school is. It is a boarding-school where the Indian children are clothed, boarded, and taught.

Now, there are only three thousand of these Eastern Cherokees in North Carolina, taken all together, men, women, and children. Besides this training-school there are day schools which are supported from the trust fund that belongs to the Eastern Cherokees. The Indian agent, an appointee of the present Administration, and, as I understand, a very intelligent man, reports that this training-school, now situate on the reservation, has a capacity for from eighty to one hundred students, whereas it has only forty. The amendment I have offered provides for eighty instead of forty at $150 a year each, which is $37 below the average cost of supporting the students at the other Government training-schools. It seems to me that where there are only three thousand Indians, men, women, and children all told, it would be folly to establish another training-school until the existing one is fully utilized. I have not seen Mr. Smith, the chief of the Eastern Cherokees, who is a man of very good intelligence and who represents his tribe here, but I am informed by gentlemen who have seen him that he is very anxious that this appropriation should be made according to the amendment which I have offered. Now, it may be that another boarding-school should be established for these Indians, but that will come in time. Let us first utilize the one we have before we undertake to provide for another. The education of these Eastern Cherokees and the progress they have made is a very interesting subject. I undertake to say from the examination I have been able to give to it that they have made better progress than perhaps any other Indians upon the continent within the last five years. But while that is true their funds have been somewhat dissipated.

In 1875 Congress set apart this fund for the purpose of educating the Eastern Cherokees. It then amounted to $76,927. A year afterwards, in 1876, it was found that the fund had dwindled to $51,423, and then a provision was inserted in the statute prohibiting the use of more than $6,000, principal and interest, in any one year. In 1877 the fund stood at $40,557, and in 1887 at $31,268; but it is fair to state that for some years past, as I am informed, under the present management of that fund, the interest only is used, and that for the support of the day schools for the Eastern Cherokees; and the chief says, the gentleman in charge says, the church says, and all hands say that the educational facilities have never before been so good and so thorough as they are at this time. I am told that the chief expressly desires there should be no interference with the present educational facilities for these Indians. Therefore, I feel constrained to resist the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina, and to ask that the amendment which I have submitted be adopted. If, in addition to my amendment, any further provision be deemed wise by the House, let it be offered and adopted.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I have but a few words to say in reply to the position taken by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. He proposes, he says, to preserve this training-school at Cherokee, N. C. My amendment proposes exactly the same thing. The very first sentence of my amendment provides that the Cherokee training-school at Cherokee, N. C., shall be kept up, and that, if the Commissioner of Indian Affairs finds it necessary to establish other schools in that portion of the country, the rest of the money shall be appropriated for that purpose.

The gentleman from Illinois says there are about forty pupils taken care of at this school, and that it can accommodate about eighty. I understand that to be the state of the case; and I am very much in favor, so far as I am concerned, of enlarging the attendance at that school to its full capacity. But I do think that the school ought not to be kept there for the purpose of educating only those children most conveniently located with regard to it, making no provision for the children of those people away over in the mountains, from whom I have had numberless complaints that they can not get the benefits of this school because their children, if instructed there, would have to be sent so far from home, entirely away from the supervision and control of their parents.

In offering my amendment I have two purposes in view. One is to have this school entirely under the control of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; the other is to leave it to his discretion to establish such other schools as in his judgment may be necessary to accommodate all the Indian children in that portion of the country. So far as I can see no harm can come either to the Cherokee training-school or to the Indians if my amendment be adopted; on the contrary, I think it will tend to bring about a great improvement in the management of the school. Some two or three hundred of these people, among whom there are about forty or fifty children who ought to be pupils of the school, live across the mountains 50 or 60 miles distant from the school. Now, it may be said—and this possibly will be the reply of the gentleman from Illinois—that these children can be sent over to be boarded and educated at the school already established. That is very true; but if there were a training-school in the neighborhood of these people the children could be educated while remaining at home contributing to the comfort and aid of the families to which they belong. Thus the benefit of this appropriation would be enlarged rather than curtailed.

So far as concerns the dwindling of the educational fund, it did dwindle a long time under the serious mismanagement of affairs down there by the different people who had control of this fund. My purpose is to benefit the entire Indian population there, so that all the Indian children needing education may get the advantage of the appropriation which the Government sees fit to make.

Not only that; there is very serious and just complaint by the religious denominations which have heretofore tried their best to elevate these people in morals and education—the denominations (and I will mention especially the Baptists and Methodists) who, long before the Government undertook to educate these people, established, at their own expense, a school right in the midst of this Indian population, and sent teachers and preachers there, who have educated these people to a degree of morality which probably no other Indian tribe on this continent can exhibit. These religious denominations complain very seriously, and I think justly, that now, after they have spent long years in trying to educate these people, not only morally, but in a literary point of view, as soon as the Government begins to appropriate money for the education of these children persons from other sections come in and in the name of "sweet charity" propose to take charge of these schools for the sake of the Government appropriation of $125 a head.

Now, I wish to leave the matter in the power of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, so that he can say what particular class of individuals shall take charge of these schools, that he may select those best qualified to train and educate not only the children but the adults, as was done for fifty years before the Society of Friends sent their educators down there. This is the only purpose I have in view. I want it distinctly understood that I am in favor of the amount which the gentleman from Illinois proposes shall be expended, and I would be in favor of increasing the amount. Of course I am not opposing the continuance of the school; but what I wish is to get the management in the proper hands and to enlarge the educational facilities.

Mr. CANNON. Is not the management now in the hands of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs? Has not the Commissioner of Indian Affairs full authority to contract for this schooling now wherever he pleases?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. That is it; he has full authority to contract, but the price is limited to $150 for each pupil. You say in effect to my people, who are unable to take these Indian scholars at that price, that they shall have no hand in their teaching and in their training. That is the object I have in view; it is to break down the barrier so that these men who have known these Indians all their lives, who have been with them all their lives, may be able to come in and teach them.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to understand the exact position of the gentleman from North Carolina if I can do so. The cost of the education and training of these scholars is to be $150 each per year. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the law, has full and complete power to do whatever he pleases in reference to where and by whom these Indian scholars shall be taught and trained. Whether North Carolinians or anybody else will run the school for that price of $150 for each pupil, what possible objection can there be to it?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Why, sir, just the very objection I have been urging; and that is that the North Carolinians, who will not be able to do it for that price, will have no share in this work; and the Society of Friends, coming from a distance, and who are backed up by their church, and who can do it under the circumstances at the price indicated, will take charge of the whole work.

Mr. CANNON. If the Society of Friends will do this work for $150 for each pupil—and there is no other society which will do the same work for a price as low under the circumstances, and especially as the Society of Friends have done their work heretofore well and efficiently—I do not see any good reason why, if they will continue to do their duty to these Indian scholars, they ought to have their teaching and training under the law. At least the Commissioner of Indian Affairs ought to be permitted to say whether they shall have this duty intrusted to them or not. It is for the benefit of the Indians that we are now legislating and not for the benefit of the Society of Friends nor for the benefit of any other society whether in North Carolina or elsewhere.

The CHAIRMAN. Discussion is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and merely wish to say a word or two, and then hope the debate will be brought to a close and we will proceed with the bill.

It is very true, Mr. Chairman, that there never was much good growing out of this work of teaching and training until it fell into the hands of the Society of Friends. I have not myself any partiality for any particular religious denomination. My object is to obtain the very best work and the very best result for the Government, as well as for these Indian scholars, and to obtain it on the payment of the least money.

If the school is not now, under the law, within the discretion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to say who shall have the control of it—that is, the price per scholar of $150—then I am much mistaken. He has the right to direct where these scholars shall be educated and trained, and I do not see why my friend from North Carolina desires further to amend it. I am perfectly willing to do anything which will not take out of the hands of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs the control of this matter. I believe the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is all that can be asked, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I wish to ask the gentleman from North Carolina whether, if we adopt his idea, we do not in effect say to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that somebody in North Carolina is to be employed to run this school, regardless altogether of the interests of those who are to be taught and trained? Is he not in effect looking more to the interest of the white man than of the Indian in the action which he proposes to take in reference to this school? In other words, let me inquire whether it is not the duty of the Government, if the Society of Friends or any other society will do this work well and efficiently, to allow them to do it, rather than to give it to North Carolinians or anybody else, simply because they desire to take charge of the school?

I ask if the money so appropriated is not set apart for the benefit of the Indians themselves, and not in any sense for the benefit of the whites?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I take it for granted, Mr. Chairman, that if this matter is left, as it is now, under the control of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, he will do as well under my amendment as under the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. It should be under his control.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. And I provide for the school as the other amendment does, but add to the amendment that he shall not be confined to any one particular class of persons from which to select his teachers.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. He is not now confined to any one class.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment, and also the substitute proposed by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The amendments were again read.

The question being taken on the adoption of the substitute, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 61.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. All right; I shall not demand a further count.

So the substitute was rejected.

The amendment of Mr. CANNON was adopted.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I now want to ask permission of the gentleman in charge of this bill to offer an amendment after line 962, which I hope will be adopted, thinking it will be after it is read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert at the end of line 962: "For the payment of W. B. Ferguson and Fred C. Fisher for services as attorneys for the Eastern band of Cherokee Indians under contract from October, 1883, to November, 1887, $600 each; in all $1,200."

Mr. PEEL. I will have to reserve the point of order upon that until I hear what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment, the Chair thinks, could only be entertained now by unanimous consent, the committee having passed from the consideration of that part of the bill.

Mr. PEEL. I do not raise the point of order for that reason; but simply to obtain an explanation of the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, there is a mistake in regard to the condition of this bill; we are considering the bill now at the head of line 1025. This amendment was offered the other day out of its time, at the request of the gentleman from Indiana, and we had not reached the part of the bill to which it then belonged.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Then my amendment will come in hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is correct. The Clerk will report that portion of the bill which is now properly before the committee.

There is still, however, a pending amendment which the Chair will direct the Clerk to read before the gentleman from North Carolina proceeds. This amendment was offered by the gentleman from Arkansas, chairman of the committee, when the bill was under consideration on Saturday last, and a point of order was made upon it.

The Clerk read as follows:

For this amount, to pay Nimrod Jarrett Smith, chief and delegate of the Eastern band of Cherokee Indians in North Carolina, for services rendered to such band from January 15, 1882, to April 16, 1887, as delegate to Washington, D. C., $3,571.66; the same to be paid out of any funds belonging to said Indians in the Treasury, to be immediately available.

Mr. PEEL. That is the amendment which was pending on Saturday.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the pending amendment. This amendment was submitted by the gentleman from Arkansas at the last sitting of the committee, and the point of order was made upon it by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT]. The point of order was pending and not decided when the committee rose.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I only desire to say in regard to this amendment that these Indians are citizens of the United States, and as such have a right to control their own affairs. This fund is held by the Government as a trust fund; and as their general council has audited the account and ordered it to be paid, our committee thought it proper to go upon this bill; hence the amendment was offered. I think the point of order is not well taken. I have changed my mind somewhat as regards it since the last meeting upon a further examination of the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment seems to be for the purpose of paying an agent or attorney employed by this band of Indians to attend to some business for them in the city of Washington, he being at the time the chief of the tribe. The money out of which the sum is to be paid seems to be a trust fund in the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of the Indians, and, if so, it seems to the Chair that the United States, being the trustee for the benefit of the Indians, can exercise its discretion as to the manner in which the fund shall be disposed of. This is the proper bill upon which that discretion may be exercised, and the Chair is therefore of the opinion that the amendment is a proper one and overrules the point of order.

It is a matter resting in the legislative body having charge of that fund for the benefit of the Indians.

The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I will be glad to know something as to the merits of this proposition before the vote is taken. The gentleman from Arkansas has said that this fund is under the control of these Indians; and if I got his expression correctly that this Indian council, or some other Indian body having charge of these affairs, had requested this payment out of the particular fund in question.

Mr. PEEL. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. Has the gentleman a copy of the act of the council authorizing it?

Mr. PEEL. The chief has the papers. I do not know whether they are now in the committee or not. The committee, however, had access to them.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say right in that line that this money out of which it is proposed to pay this $3,000—possibly under the lead of the gentleman from Georgia, but I am not sure as to that—was in 1876 set aside as a trust fund for the education of the Indians. But it has been whittled down to about $31,000, out of which the schools for the Eastern Cherokees are wholly and totally supported on the interest of this fund at 5 per cent. Now, when you whittle it down by $3,000 more you get it down to $28,000, and so on until it is all exhausted.

A MEMBER. Does the law provide how it shall be distributed?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes. We examined the law of 1875 and 1876, setting it aside as an educational fund.

Mr. BLOUNT. There is no dispute about that, I reckon.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know anything about this claim. I have no doubt the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] thinks it is just as he states. But as to whether it is too much or too little or a wise expenditure, or how it was audited, or anything about it, I simply do not know, and have said all I want to say about it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to say that I did not know the question of order was pending on this proposition, or I should have desired to say something about it myself. I do not wish to be understood, by not appealing from the decision of the Chair, as acquiescing in the ruling on this question. The question is likely to occur later on in the bill, and I will not make any appeal at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will withdraw his ruling if the gentleman from Georgia desires to be heard on it.

Mr. BLOUNT. The matter will come up again, when I may argue the question of order.

Mr. PEEL. It may all be true that this fund was set aside for educational purposes. But I want to know if all Indian funds are not a trust fund just as sacred for one purpose as for another? The Cherokee council have examined this matter thoroughly. They have found the services of the chief have been rendered, allowed the claim, and passed a resolution ordering it to be paid. This fund, as I have said, is not more sacred for one purpose than another. The account on its face shows the services were rendered by this chief running through several Congresses. It is impossible that it can be an extortionate charge. His services were rendered in three Congresses; and I do not see how a man can come to Washington and look after the interests of his people for three successive Congresses for less money, and pay expenses.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman state what his services were during the sessions of Congress?

Mr. PEEL. I can not enumerate all of them. He was the Cherokee agent.

Mr. RYAN. I know something of the services rendered by the claimant. This man, Mr. Smith, is chief of the Eastern Cherokee tribes. There was a controversy extending over a number of years between the Eastern Cherokees and the Cherokees in the Indian Territory. It was claimed by the Eastern Cherokees that they were entitled to a certain proportion of the proceeds of lands sold for the Cherokee Nation; and they also claimed a share of certain appropriations that were made by the Government for the Cherokee Nation. They were appealing to Congress for legislation to set apart from the fund of the Cherokee Nation their share for themselves. Congress did not see fit to agree to that, but finally did submit the questions in controversy to the Court of Claims with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court.

I think there were something like three or four millions of dollars involved in that controversy. Congress passed a law, as I have stated, authorizing these Eastern Cherokees and the Cherokee Nation proper to go into the Court of Claims and have these questions adjusted there, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court. In pursuance of that act proceedings were instituted in the Court of Claims, and the Eastern Cherokees were defeated. It was finally appealed to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the inferior Court of Claims. That is one important matter that this Indian chief was looking after here, to my personal knowledge, for several years.

Mr. PEEL. What has been stated by my friend from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] is all correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Let it be read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Arkansas whether this claim has ever been adjudicated by the Court of Claims or otherwise?

Mr. PEEL. It has been adjudicated by the Cherokee council itself. The claimant was employed by that council to look after the interests of the Eastern band of Cherokees.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that the point at which the committee was considering the bill at the last sitting of the committee was at the line where the amendment comes in that has just been adopted.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. What line is that?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that at the last sitting, when the committee reached line 1023, unanimous consent was given to advance to line 1090 for the purpose of considering an amendment then offered. That amendment having been considered and disposed of, the committee has returned to line 1023 and has taken up the amendment there pending and disposed of that. It is now in order for the Clerk to read line 1024.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I think my amendment would be germane at that point.

The Clerk read the amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, as follows:

Insert after the amendment just adopted the following:

"For the payment of W. B. Ferguson and Fred C. Fisher for services as attorneys for the Eastern band of Cherokee Indians under contract from October, 1883, to November, 1887, $600 each; in all $1,200."

Mr. PEEL. I reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I do not know upon what grounds the gentleman bases his point of order, but if the amendment which has just been adopted was proper it seems to me that the one which I now offer is eminently proper. This is to pay two gentlemen in my district for services as attorneys rendered for a number of years under a contract with these same Indians. That contract I have now in my hand. At the beginning of this session I introduced a bill to pay these gentlemen. The matter was referred to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to ascertain his views on the subject. Affidavits of the attorneys were submitted, setting forth the services they had rendered and the contract under which they had rendered them, and the only trouble that the Commissioner found about the matter was this: Under the Revised Statutes contracts with Indians are required to be made in a certain way prescribed therein, to be reduced to writing and attested by witnesses, and all that; while this contract was made directly with the chief of the Cherokees, and made at a time when the Indians were in great trouble about the lands which they held there. The litigation went on for a number of years.

These gentlemen filed their written contract, made with the chief (which is not denied), and with another gentleman who represented the Indians as agent, all of which is set forth in these papers which I hold in my hand; but the question was as to whether or no they came within the purview of the statute. In regard to the value of the services rendered, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs addressed a letter to the agent at that place. He has failed so far to receive any reply, but here is what the Commissioner says in reply to the call made upon him by the committee in regard to this claim:

The delay in submitting the views of the office on said bill has arisen from the call upon the agent to be furnished with a sworn statement and itemized account of the actual service rendered, etc.

I respectfully submit herewith the accounts of Messrs. Ferguson & Fisher for $1,200, duly sworn to, to which is attached an original agreement executed September 30, 1887, and signed by N. J. Smith as principal chief, and James Blythe, both as agents of the Eastern band of Cherokee Indians, to carry out and make perfect a former agreement executed October —, 1883, a copy of which is attached, to pay said parties as attorneys for said Indians the sum of $600 each, for four years' service from the date of said contract, October, 1883; also the original affidavits of Ferguson & Fisher, herein referred to and called for through Agent Leatherwood in connection with their claim for services rendered the North Carolina Cherokees as said attorneys.

From the communication of Agent Leatherwood there can be no doubt that the service was duly and properly rendered, or that the service resulted in a very great advantage to the Indians.

And, Mr. Chairman, I know of my own knowledge that there was a considerable amount of litigation about that time and about those lands.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will confine himself to the point of order. The merits of the claim are not in question at this time.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Well, I come to the point of order. I have stated that here is a contract made by these gentlemen with the chief of the Cherokee tribe, whom you have just recognized as the chief—a contract to pay these gentlemen for services rendered. Now, you have just agreed to pay the chief for services which he has rendered, and therefore why not pay these attorneys also? If the one claim is good the other is certainly good.

Mr. RYAN. Is the claim approved by the tribe?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. The contract is made with the chief.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Is it not true that the claim which was allowed a few minutes ago was authorized by the council of the Cherokee Indians, while the claim which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] now seeks to attach to this bill never has been authorized by the Indian council at all?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I do not know that I can answer that question.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I can. I can say that the one has been allowed, while the other has not.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Well, I think the gentleman speaks too fast, because here is the chief who made this contract and who got his authority, I presume, from the council.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. The council of the Indians of North Carolina fully acquiesce in the claim of the chief; but they have never acquiesced in this claim at all. And not only that, but this amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] does not propose to pay this money from the funds of the Cherokees, but from the Treasury of the United States. In the amendment for the benefit of the chief it was provided that the money should be paid from funds belonging to the Cherokee Indians. The council of the Indians had agreed to that, and had voted for it, and the Committee on Indian Affairs reported the item upon that basis; but this amendment does not propose anything of the kind. It does not specify where the money is to come from, and obviously, if appropriated at all, it will come out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I think I can make a suggestion which will settle this matter. The statement which my friend from North Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] has just made takes him out of court because he admits that the Indian Office can not pay these gentlemen for the reason that the contract was not made in strict accordance with law. Therefore an act of Congress would be necessary in order to authorize the payment of this claim, and we are now upon the Indian appropriation bill, where we can not enact any new legislation, but are simply to provide for the fulfillment of treaty stipulations and the payment of sums authorized by existing law.

This is a case where regular attorneys at law have been employed. It is not like the cases where the chief or a member of an Indian tribe acts for the tribe in matters of this kind. It is provided by the statute that where the Indians undertake to employ an attorney to prosecute a claim against the Government the contract must be reduced to writing before the services are performed, and must be approved by the Department. If these forms are complied with, the Department has authority to make payment for the services. It will be remembered that in a case which came before us during the present Congress Mr. Ellis had entered into a contract with the Pottawatomies. His contract was oral until a part of the work had been executed. Afterward a written contract was made in accordance with law; but, under the opinion of the Attorney-General, the Department could not pay for the services under the contract, because when the contract was reduced to writing a part of the services had been performed. Hence a special act of Congress was necessary to authorize the payment of that claim, and the House passed a bill for that purpose, which has gone to the Senate. So in the present case, there was a failure to comply with the law in regard to the making of the contract; hence the Department can not pay the claim without authority of an act of Congress, and such a provision of law is not under our rules proper legislation upon a general appropriation bill.

Mr. PERKINS. In addition to what has been said by the chairman of the committee [Mr. PEEL], I wish to state to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], so that he may understand we are not discriminating against the claim which he brings to the attention of the Committee of the Whole, that it has been the policy of the Committee on Indian Affairs to exclude from these appropriation bills all claims for the services of attorneys. In declining to make provision of that kind in this case we are not making an exception, but simply following what we believe to be the proper and settled policy of the committee, to allow attorneys to look to the Department or to the Indians that employ them for their compensation, rather than to Congress. For this reason we are disposed to insist on the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I understand all that. I recognize, in point of strict compliance with the rules, the force of the reasons urged in support of the point of order. But I wish to call attention to the fact that these gentlemen have acted by authority of a council of Indians. Here is the contract duly constituting these men the attorneys of the Indians. They have been so constituted by a resolution adopted by the council of the Eastern band of Cherokees. These attorneys were employed under that resolution of the council for the purpose of protecting the Indians from encroachment made upon their lands by trespassers. I think the point of order ought to be waived in this instance, because these gentlemen went on and discharged their duties to these Indians thinking they had authority under this resolution of the council, and they rendered very valuable service, as the Commissioner himself has said.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Indian Affairs never had before them the contract which the gentleman speaks of as having been acquiesced in by the council. I can readily understand how the council might have given permission that Congress appropriate out of the Treasury of the United States money to pay their attorneys; but I think it more proper that these gentlemen should be paid out of moneys belonging to the Indians.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide the point of order. This amendment proposes to authorize the payment of this sum of money out of the Treasury of the United States. It therefore takes the form of a claim against the Government, and on that ground the Chair rules the point of order well taken.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The following was read:

FOR SUPPORT OF SCHOOLS.

Support of Indian day and industrial schools, and for other educational purposes not hereinafter provided for, for construction and repair of school buildings, and for purchase of horses, cattle, sheep, goats, swine, etc., for schools, $725,000.

Mr. RYAN. I will ask whether there is any objection to an understanding that this clause be returned to after the consideration of the other portions of the bill has been concluded. I may desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. PEEL. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] asks unanimous consent that the clause just read may be passed over for the present, with leave to return to it at a subsequent stage of the proceedings. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of two hundred Indian pupils at Lincoln Institution, Philadelphia, Pa., at a rate not to exceed $167 per annum for each pupil, $33,400.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to offer at this point an amendment on behalf of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE], who has been called home. I send the amendment to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support of sixty Indian pupils at White's Manual Labor Institute of Wabash, Ind., including transportation, $10,020.

Mr. PERKINS. In explanation of this amendment, I wish to say that this school is now provided for out of the general fund appropriated by this bill; and until quite recently the amount specified in the amendment was given to this school for the care and education of Indian pupils. But, in consequence of the growth of the Indian educational system during the last two years, the Commissioner has found it necessary to reduce the appropriation for this school, and to reduce the amount allowed per capita. The object of this amendment is to fix the amount and place this school upon the same footing with the Lincoln Institution at Philadelphia.

Now, this school has been in progress for thirty-five years. It was endowed by Mr. White, for whom it was named. He not only contributed the house and grounds, but also gave 720 acres in addition for the purpose of carrying on this school. It has been in operation ever since, doing all the time most excellent work.

I have here many letters and other evidences of the efficiency and able manner in which this useful work is and has been conducted at this White Manual Labor Institute, at Wabash, Ind. These recommendations demonstrate the progress in civilization which has been made by these Indian pupils since they left the institute, after their training had been finished. The evidence also demonstrates the fact that it is one of the best institutions in the country and is deserving of the favor of the Government.

I think the amendment is a reasonable one, and I hope it will be adopted. As suggested, it fixes the amount at that which has been allowed at the Lincoln Institute, of Philadelphia. It is not so much, however, as is given for pupils at schools conducted exclusively by the Government. Take the Carlisle school, where the Government has bought land and erected buildings and where the school is run at the expense of the Government, and at a cost of $186 for each pupil. Take the school also at Lawrence, Kans., where it pays the same amount. Here is a school at Wabash, Ind., which is carried on by private parties, where the buildings and grounds are not provided at the expense of the Government of the United States, and I believe the amount fixed in my amendment is only reasonable to pay for the education of these pupils. It is far less than the education of these scholars cost the Government at its own schools, while the education is just as efficiently rendered. In other words, Mr. Chairman, this school will educate and train these Indian scholars at an expense below that now incurred by the Government in schools exclusively under its own control. I trust there will be no objection to the amendment, but that it will be adopted at once.

In addition let me state that the whole number of pupils educated and taken care of at this White Manual Labor Institute at Wabash, Ind., is seventy-three. They only ask to be compensated for sixty, taking care of the remaining thirteen pupils at their own expense.

Mr. PEEL. My attention was engaged at the time the gentleman from Kansas submitted his amendment, and I do not know whether I have fully caught just exactly what it provides for. I understand the amendment proposes to give $167 to this White Manual Labor Institute at Wabash, Ind., for the education of these Indian pupils.

Mr. PERKINS. It provides for paying $167 each for sixty pupils, but there are seventy-three pupils in all, and the remaining thirteen they propose to take care of and educate at their own expense.

Mr. PEEL. When we come to the general appropriation, if this amendment be inserted in this place, and deduct the amount of the amendments which have been offered from that amount—not only to take out the amount provided in this amendment, if it be adopted, but also the amount provided for in the other amendment.

I think, however, Mr. Chairman, that instead of appropriating $167 for each pupil at this institute, the amendment should be reduced to $150. If the Lincoln Institute, in Philadelphia, where the expenses necessarily are heavier, can teach these pupils for this amount, I do not see why it can not be done as cheaply in Indiana or any other of the Western States. It seems to me $150 would be a fair estimate for the education of these pupils.

Mr. PERKINS. If the gentleman will take into consideration that the amount of $167 for each pupil is only for sixty pupils, while there are seventy-three pupils altogether, the remaining thirteen being taken care of and educated without payment from the Government. In other words, this institute is carrying more pupils than the Government pays for, and they do not really get $167 for each pupil. Besides, even if they did, it is much less than is paid by the Government for the education of pupils at Carlisle or Hampton.

Mr. PEEL. I move to reduce the amount to $150 each.

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. PERKINS's amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For care, support, and education of Indian pupils at industrial, agricultural, mechanical, or other schools, other than those herein provided for, in any of the States or Territories of the United States, at a rate not to exceed $167 for each pupil, $85,200.

Mr. PEEL. As I have already given notice, I now move to reduce this amount from $85,200 to $63,180, which is the result after deduction of the amount covered by the amendments which have already been adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I offer the following amendment, to go in at the close of the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the support and education of Indian pupils of both sexes at day and industrial schools in Alaska, $20,000. This is to be expended under the supervision and control of the Bureau of Education.

Mr. PEEL. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment, suggested by the gentleman from Kansas, is offered with the consent of the committee.

Mr. PERKINS. Our committee, I was about to state, had agreed upon the amendment, and if there be any one who desires further information upon the subject I will have read a letter from the Bureau of Education upon the subject. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Let the letter be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF EDUCATION,
Washington, D. C., January 28, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to state that on the 29th of October, 1887, I was informed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that he had come to the conclusion that it would be much better that all the educational work of the Government in Alaska should be managed under the supervision of the Bureau of Education, and that his office should withdraw entirely from any attempt to support or manage Indian schools in that country; and that he had accordingly dropped from his estimates the usual item of $20,000 for Indian schools in Alaska heretofore under the control of his office.

His letter was referred to the Secretary of the Interior on November 1, 1887.

I beg to call your attention to so much of the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as relates to this matter, to be found on pages 19 and 20 of his annual report for the year 1887; and, also, to so much of the annual report of the Secretary of the Interior for the year 1887 as refers to this subject, in the following language:

"EDUCATION OF INDIANS IN ALASKA.

"I concur in the suggestions of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the consolidation of the usual appropriation heretofore made for the support of education of Indian pupils of both sexes at industrial schools in Alaska with the general appropriation for the educational interests of the Territory, and that the whole be placed under the management of the Bureau of Education in developing the public school system which that bureau has undertaken to establish there for the benefit of all the people of Alaska."—Report of Secretary of Interior, page 30, 1887.

I am informed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that he omitted from his estimates the usual item of $20,000 for the Indian schools in Alaska, and as I made no estimates for these schools, it would seem that this fact should be brought to your attention in order that the appropriation of $20,000 "for the support of education of Indian pupils of both sexes at industrial schools in Alaska" should be continued, and not lost. The appropriation of $50,000 recommended in the estimates of the Secretary of the Interior for education in Alaska for the fiscal year 1888-'89 does not include "support of education of Indian pupils of both sexes at industrial schools." For this purpose the sum of $20,000 was appropriated in 1887-'88, and placed under the management of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and it is necessary to be continued for the year 1888-'89 for the support of the industrial schools which have been under his charge.

This letter was written after full conference with Hon. A. P. Swineford, governor of Alaska, who joins me in the recommendation that the sum of $20,000 is necessary for this purpose, in addition to the sum of $50,000 recommended by the Secretary of the Interior in his estimates for the support of education in Alaska during the next fiscal year.

Very respectfully,

N. H. R. DAWSON, Commissioner.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.

The amendment of Mr. PERKINS was adopted.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the first section of the bill.

Mr. PEEL. My colleague from Minnesota desires to offer an amendment at this point, relating to a portion of the first section of the bill.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent to offer the amendment now which was read the other day in the House.

Mr. PEEL. A part of this relates back to the earlier part of the first section of the bill; and the other is a proposed section 8 to the bill to come in hereafter.

Mr. NELSON. The object is to establish the office of Indian school superintendent. This has been recommended by the Secretary of the Interior.

I ask unanimous consent to consider both the amendments together as one is improper without the other.

Mr. CANNON. Let us know what they are, first.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendments will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 126, page 6, of the bill, to read:

"Pay of one superintendent of Indian schools, $3,000."

Strike out the remainder of lines 127, 128, 129, and 130.

Amend lines 131 and 132 to read as follows:

"Traveling expenses of one superintendent of Indian schools, including incidental expenses of inspection and investigation, $1,500."

Add also a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 8. That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a person of knowledge and experience in the management, training, and education of Indian children, to be superintendent of Indian schools.

"That it shall be the duty of the superintendent of Indian schools to visit, from time to time, and as often as the nature of his duties will permit, the schools where Indians are taught in whole or in part, by appropriations from the United States Treasury, and, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to report annually to Congress the condition and progress of said schools; what, in his judgment, are the defects, if any, in any of them in system, in administration, or in means for the most effective advancement of the children in them toward civilization and self-support; and what changes are needed to remedy such defects as may exist.

"It shall be the duty of said superintendent, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to employ and discharge superintendents, teachers, and any other person connected with such schools, and to make such rules and regulations for the conduct of the schools as in his judgment the good of such schools may require. He shall embody in detail his doings under this section, with the reasons for his action in each case, in his annual report to Congress.

"The said superintendent shall be allowed and paid a salary of $3,000 per annum, and, in addition thereto, his actual and necessary traveling expenses incurred while in the discharge of the duties prescribed by this act, such expenses to be allowed and paid on vouchers approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

"The Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be detailed from the employés of his Department such assistants and shall furnish such facilities as shall be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the request of the gentleman from Minnesota, which is that we now return to page 6 of the bill, and strike out all from line 126 to and including line 136, on page 7, and insert the first portion of his proposed amendment.

Then an additional section (8) is proposed to come in at the proper point, on page 46 of the bill. Is there objection to considering the two amendments now?

Mr. CANNON. In the absence of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN], who made the point of order upon this proposition the other day, I think in all fairness to him, as well, perhaps, as for the benefit of the public service, that objection ought to be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. PEEL. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that objection. I do not think there is any objection whatever to the amendment proposed here.

Mr. NELSON. Perhaps the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his objection after he hears an explanation.

Mr. CANNON. I am not ready to create another great bureau in the Interior Department without a fuller discussion. I have no objection, of course, to unanimous consent being given the gentleman to explain the amendment.

Mr. NELSON. I am very thankful for the grace of the gentleman from Illinois.

I want to say to the gentleman and to the committee as the explanation for this request, that the proposed amendment here is the substance of a bill which passed the Senate at this session of Congress, and came over to the House. That bill was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and the committee have unanimously recommended its passage.

We are seeking simply to incorporate the idea which the Senate has passed in the shape of a bill for the conduct of Indian affairs, so far as the school management is concerned, and incorporate it upon the Indian appropriation bill, where it properly belongs. That is all there is in the amendment.

Now, under existing law there is no such office as superintendent of Indian schools. The only law upon the subject is that of 1882, to be found in volume 22 of the Statutes at Large, creating the office of inspector of Indian schools. In the bill, as we have reported it and brought it before the House, we have followed the phraseology of that law. We have got an officer known as the inspector of Indian schools, but whose duties are not clearly defined. It is the desire of the President as well as the Secretary of the Interior, and concurred in by the Senate, that this office should be established and made an independent office under the Secretary of the Interior, separate from the control of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The two great items that go to solve the problem of civilizing and improving the Indians are the allotment of their lands in severalty, and their education. Their educational system has, up to this time, made great progress; but unfortunately we have been for years, and we are still, lacking a proper head for carrying on the system. We have had an officer, as I have said, sometimes called an inspector of Indian schools, and sometimes a superintendent of Indian schools in the Indian appropriation bills, who has had a sort of advisory authority, authority to examine and report to Congress or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as to the condition of these schools. But he has had no authority to appoint or remove teachers, or to exercise any of the functions which such an officer or head of the schools ought to have. At present the service is in such a bad condition that we have none at all; and the President, as I understand—I am not speaking by his authority—but the President I understand is hoping that some legislation will be given by which he can appoint a suitable man to take charge of the service, because under existing laws it is impossible otherwise to have the schools properly attended to.

For this reason, among others, the committee believe it to be proper that this amendment should be incorporated upon the bill so that the officer in charge of these schools should have the appointment and removal, if necessary, of the teachers, and general charge of the schools.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him this question: Do you propose to put the whole matter of Indian education under the superintendent of Indian schools?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly; subject to the authority of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CANNON. That practically makes an additional bureau.

Mr. NELSON. The gentleman from Illinois dwells, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] did the other day, on this being the making of an independent bureau. I say the justification for it is this: We are spending upwards of $2,000,000 a year in educating all the Indian tribes of America, and we have no head of our system of Indian school education. By this bill, which has passed the Senate, we propose to give it a head. That is the very idea I seek to incorporate in this bill, and if we create a bureau and if that bureau is essential to the discharge and care of this important function of the Government, why not have the bureau?

Mr. CANNON. I have so much confidence in the judgment of the gentleman from Minnesota, as well as in the judgment of the committee who have investigated this matter, that notwithstanding my judgment is against legislating in this way, yet the gentleman is so earnest about it and I have so much respect for his judgment that I will not interpose my objection against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his objection.

Mr. PEEL. There is no increase of appropriation by reason of this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read sections 2 to 7 of the bill.

Mr. RYAN. All the bill has been read now except section 8, relating to what is commonly called the Choctaw judgments. Therefore, with the permission of the gentleman in charge of the bill, I will go back to page 43, and in line 1029 move to amend by striking out "$725,000" and inserting "$900,000."

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

In line 1029 strike out "$725,000" and insert "$900 000;" so that it will read.

"Support of Indian day and industrial schools, and for other educational purposes not hereinafter provided for, for construction and repair of school buildings, and for purchase of horses, cattle, sheep, goats, swine, and so forth, for schools, $900,000."

Mr. RYAN. This clause in the bill provides $725,000 as a general fund for the education of the Indians upon their reservations. This is about the sum that was appropriated for this purpose for the current year. In other words, this bill carries no increase for this purpose over the law for the current year.

If we are to apply education as a civilizing agency we ought to apply it intelligently. The difficulty has been with our system of Indian education, that we practically waste the money expended to a considerable extent by inadequate appropriations, by providing inadequate educational facilities. In other words, we educate a few Indian children, we turn them out of the schools, they go back to their savage parents and savage surroundings, and it will be but a short period before they degenerate into the condition of their parents and their surroundings. And until we shall increase these educational facilities so that the children we turn out of these schools shall constitute a nucleus sufficiently strong to maintain their advanced condition we shall make very poor progress in civilizing the Indian through educational processes.

Therefore, if I had my way, instead of appropriating the amount provided for in this bill, I would appropriate at once $3,000,000, and I would plant an industrial school wherever there were Indian children to fill it, so as to have at one time in process of education every Indian child that could possibly be got into the schools. As it is now we are providing for the education of only about 25 per cent. of the Indian children of school age. There are about 40,000 of them that might to-day, if we had pursued a wise course in this matter, be in our schoolhouses receiving suitable education, and then when they shall be turned out they will be able to maintain their advanced position, and the Indian problem will be practically solved. I regard it as wise that we should at least extend the system year by year instead of merely maintaining the existing plant. Therefore, I have offered this amendment, which increases the sum proposed to be appropriated in this bill $175,000. I know that the Secretary of the Interior is in hearty accord with the views which I entertain upon this subject, and I have confidence that, if Congress would do its duty in the matter, under his administration we should not be long in solving the Indian problem through the influence of the school-house.

Mr. Chairman, before I conclude I want to call attention to the observations of the superintendent of Indian schools in his report on this subject. He says:

It is true that owing to the lack of funds the Indian Bureau has been able to do but little toward establishing schools as required by the treaties, but a beginning has been made, and with some of the tribes considerable educational work has been done, and it would seem to be better now to extend the work under the system already in operation or a modification of that system.

Further on he says:

Their children can only be reached through a boarding-school where the various industries required in the establishment of a home may be taught them. The Indian Bureau has, because of the insufficient appropriations, been unable to provide schools for but a small proportion of the children of the larger tribes. For example, the treaty with the Navajoes would, if carried out, call for the establishment of two hundred schools, whereas but one school, having accommodations for about eighty children, has been furnished.

Mr. Chairman, I submit this amendment with confidence that the House will adopt it.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, while I agree with my friend from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] upon the general theory of Indian education, I am not ready to support the amendment offered by him. I am apprised that it is now well understood—and it is an opinion that I have long since come to myself—that the best way out of this Indian difficulty is to educate the children upon the reservations, to give them an industrial, mechanical, domestic education, to teach them how to take care of themselves, so that the Government may get rid of the burden, and that they may be placed upon an independent footing like the other people of this country.

I am aware of the fact, and I am proud to say to the House and to the country, that we have a Secretary of the Interior who is wide awake upon this question, who understands it thoroughly, and who, if supported by proper legislation, will within a few years have this matter so far advanced that the Indian difficulty will have practically disappeared. But, sir, while that is true, we are not yet ready to increase this item of appropriation to the extent to which this amendment would go. The estimate made by the Indian Bureau was $815,000. While we cut that down to $725,000 we increased another item from $61,000 to $85,000, out of which money can be applied for Indian education. So that the deduction from the estimate is really very little, and, all taken together, there is a slight increase over the appropriation for the preceding year.

Mr. RYAN. Only $10.000.

Mr. PEEL. You have increased it $900. The decreased appropriation for subsistence is accompanied by increased facilities for putting the Indian upon a self-supporting basis.

Now, if my friend will remember, it takes something besides money to employ teachers and establish schools. You must have school-houses enough to accommodate more children than are now accommodated under the present system. Heretofore we have been laboring under the embarrassment of having no real head to this educational bureau. An amendment was adopted awhile ago which, if it becomes a law, will give us a superintendent, and then the business will be in proper shape, so that in the future this item can be properly, legitimately, and economically increased according to the view presented by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN]. Of course, it is a self-evident fact that until we educate a majority of the Indian children so that they may be able to overcome the influence of the minority, we can not hope to succeed. When we educate a small per cent. of them and turn them loose they are overshadowed and swallowed up by the others that still remain uneducated, and we really lose what has been spent in educating the few. The time is near at hand when this appropriation can be properly increased and the desired end obtained, but I do not think that time has yet come. Therefore I hope the House will vote down the amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to amend by striking out the last word. Mr. Chairman, for myself I have never been converted to the theory that the best system of Indian education is the reservation industrial school. It is known to all who have given any considerable attention to this question that day schools on the Indian reservations and at the Indian agencies are, as a rule, failures; that they accomplish but little good; that it is almost impossible to keep the children in attendance; that they run off and secrete themselves, keep away from their schoolmasters. Such is my observation in connection with the industrial schools on reservations or in the Indian Territory.

Take the school at Chilocco, in the Indian Territory. It is the report, so far as I know, of all who have given attention to the matter that this school comes nearer being a failure than any industrial school in the country. And why? Because it is removed from those restraining and controlling influences which give success to the industrial schools in the States and Territories. The Indians go there and run their horses about, have their tournaments, foot races, ball-plays, etc., which distract the attention of the scholars; so that but little good is being accomplished. I am sorry to make this acknowledgment, but such is the fact; and we must conform ourselves to that which we know to be the history of these schools.

So it is with day schools at the agencies and on Indian reservations. Take the school at the Osage agency, in the Indian Territory. As much progress has been made there as at almost any day school. The appropriations have been liberal, because that tribe of Indians is rich from the sale of lands in the State of Kansas, and has large funds to be drawn upon for the support of schools. Yet to-day those schools are not nearly so efficient as they were when first organized. To-day the school-houses, I am sorry to say, are almost vacant—are being used in many cases for other than school purposes. Hence, as I have said, I have never yet been converted to the theory that the best school for the education of the Indian is the industrial reservation school. I think the best results are secured at the schools in the States and in the Territories near to the reservation and near to the Indians. If the proposition were before the House as an original one, I do not know that I should favor the school at Carlisle, Pa., the school at Hampton, Va., or the Lincoln Institute in Philadelphia; but the truth is, these schools are accomplishing good for the Indians, and are making successes; and why? Because the pupils are hired out to the farmers, to the good women as well as the good men of Pennsylvania, and of the cities surrounding the schools. Thus the Indian children learn to farm, to keep house, to do the domestic duties of the family, to do the work incident to civilization. Through these organizations and instrumentalities progress is secured; but on the reservation these advantages are not enjoyed.

If the amendment offered by my friend and colleague from Kansas is to prevail, I prefer that it be offered to the section authorizing the expenditure of money for the industrial schools in the States and Territories, rather than applied to the schools on the reservations. But, as has been suggested by the chairman of the committee, we are appropriating in this bill almost all that the Department has asked. In fact, the Department said to us a year ago that it would not do to make the appropriations for this purpose too large, because in such case the Department might not be able to care well for the work, might not be able to organize the necessary machinery for expending the money judiciously. In this bill we appropriate about as much as can be advantageously expended for these purposes with the machinery already organized. For this reason I oppose the amendment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PERKINS. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I renew the amendment. From observation, and some considerable observation, which I have had concerning the operations of these schools, I can not agree with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS]. I grant you that industrial schools east of the Alleghanies—or west either—away from the tribe, are better for the children while they are there; they make better progress than they would if attending schools upon the reservation. But the object of the education of an Indian child or a white child is a practical one—to fit him or her to do his or her part most efficiently in the struggle of life.

Mr. PERKINS. Is it not the gentleman's observation—and I know he has had the opportunity of observing quite closely the system of Indian education—is it not his observation that the day schools on Indian reservations are failures?

Mr. CANNON. They are comparative failures, if the standard of comparison be the day schools for white children where we have the best grade of civilization upon the continent.

Mr. RYAN. But there is no comparison between those and the industrial schools at all.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Kansas on my left [Mr. RYAN] says there is no comparison between the day schools and the industrial schools on the reservation. Now, I undertake to say—and I think I speak within bounds—that nine out of ten of all the Indian children who are educated at the industrial schools off the reservation are, when they leave those schools, away ahead of members of the tribe from which they came, so that when they go back to the tribe they are persecuted on account of the peculiar position which their education has given them; they are not in harmony with other members of the tribe, and in an almost incredibly short time they drop back into barbarism. And I repeat what I once before said, that in a great majority of cases they are in a worse condition than they would have been if they had never left the tribe.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would rather teach an Indian child to do one honest day's work out of the twenty-four. I would rather teach him to read the simplest sentences and to write the simplest sentences, and then to reside with his tribe just as much as he could, to give him just as much education as he can use for his benefit, rather than furnish him with a finished education, which he can not utilize when he goes back to barbarism. As I stated once before I state now, it is my belief it is the highest order of cruelty, as a general proposition, to train these Indian pupils in schools off the reservations, and then, when their education has been finished at these schools, to send them back upon the reservation and into barbarism. Sound policy and humanity would, it seems to me, demand on our part that if you take them away from their tribes and educate them, then from that time they should be taught to find their homes amongst civilized people. In that way, to a certain extent, they would be able to utilize the education which they had received, and be able to the same extent to better their condition and advance their positions.

I am in sympathy with the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN]. I do not know whether the amendment covers too much money or not. But it is true that the education of these Indians should always be accompanied by an industrial feature, and they should not be educated to any greater extent than they can maintain after they have gone away from the schools. When they go out of school the very best place to which they can go is the reservation, amongst the members of their own tribes; and the education they receive should be of a character which they can utilize, and which will not only be a benefit to themselves, but to those with whom they associate.

Mr. PEEL. I hope we will now have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

The question recurred on Mr. RYAN'S amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 29, noes 54.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That for payment to the Choctaw Nation, $2,858,798.62, the said sum being the amount of the judgment rendered in favor of said nation, by the Court of Claims, on the 15th day of December, A. D. 1886, on a mandate issued by the Supreme Court, at the October term of said court, together with such further sum as may be necessary to pay the interest on said judgment, at 5 per cent. per annum, from the date of the presentation of the transcript of said judgment to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment, as provided in section 1090 of the Revised Statutes, to the date of this act. The appropriation hereby made shall be a permanent and continuing appropriation, not subject to lapse, or to be covered into the Treasury; and said sum, together with the interest thereon, shall be paid from time to time, and in such sums as requisition therefor shall be made, to the national treasurer of the Choctaw Nation, or to such agent, or other person, as shall be named in the requisition or requisitions therefor, made by the proper authorities of the said Choctaw Nation, as required by article 12 of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, concluded June 22, 1855: Provided, That no interest shall be paid on this appropriation after the passage of this act, but the amount herein appropriated to be immediately available.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of making a point of order on the section of the bill which has just been read by the Clerk. It will be observed that it is not a part of the annual appropriation to carry out the treaties with the Indian tribes, nor for the general purpose of an Indian appropriation bill, but is, on the contrary, to pay a judgment against the United States, appropriating a given sum of money to that end.

The rules of the House have divided all the appropriation work amongst several committees. At one time all the appropriation bills belonged to the Committee on Appropriations. Subsequently certain bills were taken from that committee and given to other committees. The bill for the support of the Indian service was given to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The bill for the support of the Post-Office Department was given to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. The annual appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service were taken from that committee and given to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The residue of the appropriation bills were left with the Committee on Appropriations.

I beg pardon. My friend has suggested the naval appropriations were given to the Committee on Naval Affairs. That is true, and I omitted to state it, that the appropriations for the annual support of the Navy were likewise taken from the Committee on Appropriations and given to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The residue of the thirteen general appropriation bills were left to the Committee on Appropriations.

Under Rule XI we find the following:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule as follows, namely: Subjects relating,

1. To the election of members: to the Committee on Elections;
2. To the revenue and the bonded debt of the United States: to the Committee on Ways and Means;
3. To appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government as herein provided, namely: for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; for sundry civil expenses; for fortifications; for the District of Columbia; for expenses; and for all deficiencies: to the Committee on Appropriations.

Then coming on down, omitting many of the paragraphs of this rule, we find this language:

To the post-office and post-roads, including appropriations for their support: to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

* * * * * * *

To the relations of the United States with the Indians and the Indian tribes, including appropriations therefor: to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Now, sir, so far as these bills are concerned—their preparation and office—the practice of the House has determined what was intended, and this is expressed by that practice in a clearer manner than by any form of speech which I could employ. Almost any definition would be confusing, but in the light of the practice of the House, the general practice—I do not mean that there are not and have not been exceptional cases—but in the general practice of the House, there can be no difficulty whatever in understanding to which one of these several bills this appropriation belongs.

Prior to the distribution of these bills amongst the several committees of the House there were two bills which might be designated for convenience the "debt-paying" bills. Taking it year after year, and as a general rule, you will find that the judgments against the Government, and all obligations, have been placed in the sundry civil bill. Sometimes a variation has taken place, and these have been inserted in the deficiency bills, but during the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations over the whole subject of appropriations I believe the House invariably conceded, when the question was raised, that a judgment was not in order for payment except on the sundry civil or the general deficiency bill, and most generally the sundry civil. I never knew it to be held at that time, when the question was distinctly raised, that a judgment of any kind was in order on the Indian appropriation bill.

It may be said, sir, that this judgment relates to treaty stipulations with the Indian tribes, and by reason of that language of the rule, notwithstanding what I have already stated in reference to the character of these bills, that it is in order on this Indian bill, because the language of the rule is:

To the relations of the United States with the Indians and the Indian tribes, including appropriations therefor.

But just above this clause of the rule, as I have already stated, you will find that appropriations with regard to postal affairs are embraced in these words:

To the post-office and post- roads, including appropriations or their support: to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Now, if the language in relation to the Indian appropriations justifies the conclusion that because this is a judgment relating to a treaty stipulation, that therefore it goes properly on the Indian appropriation bill, then there is just as much force, I think, in the assertion that every appropriation relating to payment for the postal service, all deficiencies for post-offices and post-roads, go at once to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to be placed properly on the post-office appropriation bill.

But never, so far as I know, has there been any direction by the Speaker, whenever there was a deficiency in that Department for any previous year in the postal service, to send such matters to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. Always and invariably they are sent to the Committee on Appropriations, to be recommended in a general deficiency bill.

Already, sir, during this session of Congress we have passed in a general deficiency bill an item for compensation of clerks in post-offices, for mail-bags, mail-catchers, and various other items connected with the mail service, simply because that was a deficiency bill; and the fact that the language used in conferring jurisdiction upon the Postal Committee—to the post-office and post-roads, including appropriations for their support—has never been considered as authorizing the transfer of these deficiencies from the Committee on Appropriations to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. And so, sir, it may be said in reference to other appropriations, and especially to the matter that is now under discussion, that there is nothing in the rule which authorizes its transfer from the Committee on Appropriations to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I have never known it to be distinctly affirmed that deficiencies for the Indian service went on the Indian appropriation bill. On the contrary, in this very instance the Speaker of the House, in the early part of the session, in conformity to this understanding, referred this very matter to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ROGERS. I think the gentleman is in error there, if he will permit me to say so.

Mr. BLOUNT. In what respect?

Mr. ROGERS. That the Speaker of the House referred this to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, that is a question of fact, and I do not know how we are going to settle it.

Mr. ROGERS. The record shows it.

Mr. PEEL. And that will settle it.

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend from Missouri, sitting near me [Mr. BURNES], has also his record, which shows just the other way.

But under any circumstances, Mr. Chairman, that would not conclude it. I suppose that if the reference was made, as suggested by the gentleman from Arkansas, there was no issue raised in the House at the time as to whether it belonged to the one or the other of these committees.

The question is: Was there a distinct purpose on the part of the House that, in reference to the naval appropriation bill, where they related to expenditures other than for the annual appropriation, where there were deficiencies, these deficiencies should go to the Committee on Appropriations? Was there a distinct purpose that, where there was a deficiency in the postal service, that deficiency should go to the Committee on Appropriations? Was there a purpose on the part of the House, when there were deficiencies in the consular and diplomatic service, that those deficiencies should go to the Committee on Appropriations; and was there at the same time a purpose to make an exception in reference to the Committee on Indian Affairs and give them jurisdiction in reference to every matter relating to the expenditures under the head of the Indian service?

I can not believe it. I can not see any reason why the House should have made this distinction in reference to the Committee on Indian Affairs as against all of the other committees having charge of appropriation bills. I can not see any reason, Mr. Chairman, at all for an impression that this judgment goes on the Indian appropriation bill, except under that language of the rule—

All legislation relating to the relations of the United States with the Indians and the Indian tribes, including appropriations therefor—gives it, which has not been, as I have already stated, regarded as covering such matters in reference to any other appropriations.

Now concede that this judgment goes on the Indian appropriation bill. It goes there in the nature of a deficiency for some service that has not been appropriated for, some failure to comply many years back with some Indian treaty. Concede that it goes there; shall the Committee on Appropriations hereafter take jurisdiction of any deficiency that relates to Indian matters? Concede that it properly goes there; will the Committee on Appropriations hereafter take jurisdiction of any deficiencies in reference to the postal service, the naval service, or the consular and diplomatic service? And if not, what becomes of the language of clause 3 of the rule?

For all deficiencies: to the Committee on Appropriations.

That was intended to be exhaustive. Why should this judgment go upon this bill when all other judgments in reference to all other branches of the service must go into the sundry civil and deficiency bills? What reason can there be for it?

I have never known, Mr. Chairman, any question of order touching an Indian appropriation where the rule did not apply as distinctly and emphatically to the matter of getting money out of the Treasury, whether it was a trust fund or whether it was the absolute property of the United States. There is every reason why this fund should be guarded with the same strictness as any other fund should be guarded. You, sir, would not hesitate one moment, if presiding over this House and there was an appropriation involving an expenditure out of an Indian trust fund, to declare that it was subject to the point of order that it must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole because it took money out of the Treasury of the United States.

It seems to me, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that it is clearly not in order to place deficiencies on any one of the regular appropriation bills other than the sundry civil and the deficiency bills.

What I have said does not indicate at all my own inclinations as to whether or not this judgment shall be paid. The rules are designed for the regulation of the business of the House. It is by their observance that we have accuracy and order. It is through them that the proceedings of this House are governed. They are law to us, which we must recognize in our proceedings, and which should regulate the consideration of questions by the House. Each committee knows its own jurisdiction regulated by that law. Each member can well understand when a bill comes up what it contains, and there is not likely to be any surprise. It is only in this view that I feel anxiety to maintain the observance of our rules, the rules especially which relate to the appropriations of money out of the Treasury of the United States, which have grown to such enormous proportions, and which involve the idea of keeping up the burdens upon the people in the form of taxation. In the consideration of those questions especially there is exacted of us the most scrupulous regard for our rules.

I trust, therefore, that the Chair and the committee will see fit—whether this judgment shall be approved in the individual mind or not—shall see fit to declare that this appropriation shall not find its place, contrary to the rules of the House, in an appropriation bill to which it does not pertain.

But lest there might be some misunderstanding as to the purpose I have in raising this question of order, I wish to say now that I recognize the binding effect of the judgments of the courts of the country. I deny the authority of any committee of this House to review the judgments of the courts of the country. I insist that it is the duty of a committee of the House, when judgments shall have been sent to it, to insert appropriations for them in their proper place in the proper bills, and report them to this House for action. Put this judgment in a bill which I regarded as proper, and I can see no reason why I should not give it my cordial support.

I can not see why the appropriation should not be omitted from this bill and the subject referred to the Committee on Appropriations to be reported in the sundry civil or deficiency bill, whichever may be deemed most appropriate. And if the Committee on Appropriations shall see fit to exercise a power that does not belong to them and to withhold this judgment, it is competent for any member of this House, it is in order under the rules to move an amendment, and for one I shall take pleasure in giving my support to such an amendment or any one for a similar purpose.

Mr. PEEL. The concluding remark of the gentleman from Georgia confesses before the House and the country that this is merely a technical objection. The whole objection rests in technicality and nothing else, even conceding he is correct. But, sir, it is a question of law for the Chair to determine, which I am satisfied will be done, under the rules, from a proper and true construction of them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, originally the House as a whole has jurisdiction over all matters delegated to it under the Constitution. For convenience this body is divided into committees. For further convenience a system of rules has been adopted, and the jurisdiction of certain subject-matters conferred upon the respective committees of the House. Up to the Forty-ninth Congress the Committee on Appropriations had jurisdiction of all appropriations for the Indian tribes; not only appropriations growing out of treaty stipulations, but those for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Bureau.

It is perhaps profitable to stop for a moment and consider what would have been the attitude of this case if it had come here on an appropriation bill when all such bills were controlled by the Committee on Appropriations. I presume it will not be contended for a moment that before the rules were changed so as to give to the Committee on Indian Affairs jurisdiction over Indian appropriations, the Committee on Appropriations having the original control of all these bills, would not have had authority to incorporate this item in the appropriation bill. If that is true, then let us look back to the rule changing the jurisdiction and see just what the House then did. By that change the House took from the Committee on Appropriations this whole subject and placed it with the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. PEEL. I would prefer not to be interrupted. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is a question of jurisdiction merely. On the 3d of March, I believe, my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] introduced the memorial of the Choctaw Nation, indorsed by him as a member of Congress, signed by the delegates accredited by the Choctaw Nation, in which the memorialists recite the history of this claim. If my friend will examine that history he will find that the claim is embodied and imbedded in a treaty made between the Government of the United States and these Indians as far back as 1830, and, pursuing it further, he will find that in 1855 another treaty was made by the Government with them, in which this disputed claim was recognized, and was referred to the Senate of the United States as an arbitrator. The Senate in 1859 passed upon the question and found due to this Choctaw Nation two million nine hundred and some odd thousand dollars, without computing a cent of interest for the long delay.

After that award was made, the Indians were still unable to force Congress to come up and pay the obligation, and in 1881 the matter was sent to the Court of Claims for adjudication, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. Under that law the Indians went to the Court of Claims, and from there to the Supreme Court; the litigation continued for five long years. The Court of Claims awarded them two million eight hundred and odd thousand dollars, the amount appropriated in this bill. Now, when the matter went to the Supreme Court what was the jurisdiction of that court? It had jurisdiction, not, as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] has argued, over a claim the subject-matter of which was unknown and unliquidated, and in which when judgment was rendered the evidence upon which it was based would merge in the judgment. That was not the case at all. There is where my friend has been misled with reference to this point of order. He terms this a judgment of the court, and he says that the Committee on Indian Affairs has no right to appropriate for judgments. If he will go back and examine the elementary principles of this question he will find that what he calls a judgment is simply declaratory of what the treaty was between these people and the Government of the United States. This liability existed in 1830 as perfectly as it does now, and it exists no more now than it did then.

That treaty, including this item, has as much life to-day as it had in 1830, when it was completed between the Government and these Indians. Congress did not undertake to change the treaty, but referred the matter to the Court of Claims for examination of the treaty, and the court gave it a construction. It did not give it new life; it simply construed the treaty; it merely spoke and interpreted what already existed. When an appeal was taken by these people and also by the Government to the Supreme Court of the United States they could not do anything less. The great underlying distinction is this: If it had been a claim of an individual, or of an Indian, or of an Indian tribe which was unliquidated, which grew out of a trespass or out of some unliquidated cause of action, which had been merged, in the judgment of the Supreme Court, it would have been a very different proposition.

But, sir, this is simply declaratory of the treaty itself. The Supreme Court did nothing but affirm the decision of the Court of Claims, and then the nation, through their delegates, took the transcript of the judgment and the mandate and went to the Treasury of the United States some fifteen or twenty months ago and presented it and demanded payment, and, under the statute, it has been drawing 5 per cent. interest from that time. And, Mr. Chairman, while I am not upon this floor to criticise the action of any committee or of any gentleman, yet, if the jurisdiction of the matter belonged to the Committee on Appropriations, I ask my friend why that committee did not provide for it in the last session of the Forty-ninth Congress? This affirmation by the Supreme Court of the United States of the finding of the Court of Claims was rendered in October, 1886. The next day the mandate was presented to the Treasurer of the United States, and from that moment, under the statute, the judgment began drawing interest at the rate of 5 per cent., and we have already thrown away over $150,000 by keeping these people out of their money which they have been seeking to obtain for over fifty years.

Now, after the Indians have waited over eighteen months for the payment of this money since the court of last resort decided their rights, we are met with the technicality that the Committee on Indian Affairs had not jurisdiction of this question, but that it belonged to another committee of the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does the gentleman state that this judgment is now, and from the time of its rendition has been, drawing interest? If so, at what rate?

Mr. PEEL. Five per cent.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And how much has it amounted to?

Mr. PEEL. Over $150,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And the interest is still running?

Mr. PEEL. The interest is running every day.

Now, Mr. Chairman, turning to the rules of the House, we find that the jurisdiction of each committee is defined. I will refer first to the jurisdiction conferred on the Committee on Appropriations, because it is contended that this appropriation is properly a deficiency, and therefore comes within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. I will ask the gentleman who is to answer me in this argument to tell me where under the rules this can come in as a deficiency for any of the expenses of the Federal Government? By Rule IX it is provided that—

> All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rules as follows, namely: Subjects relating—
> To appropriations of the revenue for the support of the Government as herein provided, namely, for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; for sundry civil expenses; for fortifications; for the District of Columbia; for pensions; and for all deficiencies: to the Committee on Appropriations.

Deficiencies of what kind? Deficiencies in the appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Indians? It is not common sense to give the rule that construction. The meaning plainly is deficiencies in the appropriations for the support of the Government. This clause has no reference whatever to deficiencies in appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations. Since the finding of the Court of Claims, or since the award of the Senate in 1855, there has not been a dollar paid upon this account. The item has not even been included among current expenses appropriated for in the Indian bill. If this were an annual appropriation for the Indian service which Congress had failed to make, and which therefore came over from a previous year, it might be urged that it is a deficiency. But this is an independent item. It has nothing to do with the current expenses either of the Government or of the Indian Bureau itself. It is a provision for fulfilling the solemn promises that we made to these people fifty years ago.

I now turn to the sixteenth clause of the same rule:

> To the relations of the United States with the Indians and the Indian tribes, including appropriations therefor: to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if this appropriation does not relate to Indians or Indian tribes, I do not understand the English language. By the very caption of our bill it is a bill providing "for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes." This is an appropriation to fulfill a treaty stipulation—a part of the law of the land—between the Indians and the Government. The highest law operating between the United States and an Indian tribe is a treaty. This appropriation does not propose, as the gentleman from Georgia has been pleased to assert, to pay a judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States. It is to pay a debt that we owe these people under a treaty made with them in 1830. In this bill we fix amounts for fulfilling treaty stipulations; this is an item of that kind. The Committee on Indian Affairs had as much jurisdiction over this question as over a dozen or twenty items in this bill for paying annuities to various Indian tribes under treaty stipulations.

The finding of the Supreme Court of the United States has not changed the legal status of this matter. It was impossible for the Supreme Court, under the reference of this question as made by Congress, to change its legal status. The court has but declared the indebtedness of the United States to this Indian nation under the treaty. The Court of Claims, under the reference made, found this amount due, and the Supreme Court on appeal affirmed the decision. The finding of the court simply placed beyond all further question the construction of this treaty, which had been in dispute for fifty years. The court of last resort has given this construction, and there is, in my judgment, no way to get around it. Mr. Justice Matthews, in rendering the decision of the Supreme Court, said, humanely and justly, that in construing treaties between these helpless people and the Government, the court, wherever the language was susceptible of more than one construction, would give it that construction which would protect these helpless wards of the country. In the same spirit, the Chair, I trust, if he has any technical doubts upon this question, will feel the propriety of deciding the matter according to the claims of justice, and will also see that it is economical for the Government to pay this claim, because its payment will stop the interest. I have nothing further to say.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I desire briefly to supplement the position taken by my friend from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL], and in order that there may be, if possible, no question as to the powers of this committee and the construction to be given to this section, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to its history.

As the Chair is aware, Congress, by an act of March 3, 1881, conferred upon the Court of Claims the right to hear and determine the claim of the Choctaw Indians arising under treaty stipulations. For the information of members, and possibly to refresh the recollection of the Chair, I will read from the language of that act:

> That the Court of Claims is hereby authorized to take jurisdiction of and try all questions of difference arising out of treaty stipulations with the Choctaw Nation, and to render judgment thereon. Power is hereby granted the said court to review the entire question of differences de novo, and it shall not be estopped by any action had or award made by the Senate of the United States in pursuance of the treaty of 1855; and the Attorney-General is hereby directed to appear in behalf of the Government.

So it was understood from the language of this statute the Court of Claims was authorized to investigate and determine the question of treaty obligation and treaty stipulations with these Choctaw Indians.

Under this act of Congress the court investigated the claim which was presented by these Indians, and found there was a large sum of money due them under treaty stipulations. In consequence of the direction given to the Attorney-General of the United States by this act, an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States in the name of the Government. Not only was the judgment of the Court of Claims affirmed, but the amount of the judgment of the Court of Claims was increased by the Supreme Court. This statement is found in the opinion of that court:

> In pursuance of this act the Choctaw Nation filed its original petition on the 12th of June, 1881, which was subsequently amended by new pleadings filed February 25, 1884. The question of difference between the United States and the petitioner, it was alleged, resulted from the non-performance and non-fulfillment by the United States of the obligations assumed by it under various treaties between the United States and the Choctaw Nation, including those of the following dates, to wit: the 18th day of October, 1820; the 20th day of January, 1825; the 27th day of September, 1830; the 22d day of June, 1855; and the 28th day of April, 1866.

Then comes a statement which I wish to call particularly to the attention of the Chair, that the question of difference between the United States and the petitioner resulted, as claimed by these Choctaw Indians, from the non-performance by the Government of the obligations assumed by it under various treaties with the Choctaw Nation, including those of the dates which I have given, namely, of the 18th day of October, 1820; the 20th day of January, 1825; the 27th day of September, 1830; the 22d day of June, 1855; and the 28th day of April, 1866.

Those were the treaties which had been made between these Indians and the Government of the United States, under which it was claimed by these Indians there was something due them by the Government.

It was not, as has been suggested by the chairman of the committee, an unliquidated claim, but a claim simply that went to that tribunal for adjudication arising from and growing out of treaty obligations.

And the syllabus of the court is in support of the position we are taking.

But for the purpose of emphasizing my position, let me suggest to the Chair that if the phraseology of the bill were changed could there be any question as to the jurisdiction and power of this committee? If instead of saying we appropriate $2,858,000 for the satisfaction of this judgment of the Court of Claims, we should say we appropriate $2,858,798.62, the said sum being due the Choctaw Indians under treaty obligations; if, I say, such had been the language of the provision, would the point of order have been made against it? Would the point of order have been made if we had said that we make payment of this amount due under treaty obligations with these Indians, instead of saying that we appropriate the amount in obedience to a judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States, that amount being found due by the Supreme Court under treaty obligations? Would it be said under the circumstances the committee did not have jurisdiction of this matter? It is the very subject given to the Committee on Indian Affairs for its consideration.

If that was the language of the bill and the point of order could be made effectually against it, then the same point of order could be made effectually against every other provision contained in the bill.

It seems to me that it is only necessary to call to the Chair's attention this simple proposition to satisfy the Chair that the point of order is not well taken. This is no less an appropriation to fulfill obligations and treaty stipulations because the Supreme Court of the United States has found this amount to be due. It is no less an amount due under treaty obligations than if the Supreme Court had made no adjudication on the subject at all. It is no less an appropriation to carry out treaty obligations because the Supreme Court has found the amount due than it would be if the Supreme Court had made no decision on the subject, or if the matter had never been brought to the attention of the Supreme Court.

This bill is full of like paragraphs, full of items, appropriating money to carry out treaty obligations and treaty stipulations. It seems to me, therefore, under all the circumstances, the point of order is not well taken.

I am not now to discuss the merits of the section. My friend from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] did that well and completely, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] who raised the point of order stated that if the committee had jurisdiction of the subject, then the committee had the right to make the appropriation.

So, Mr. Chairman, when we remember that this item is inserted here but for the purpose of carrying out, as I have just stated, our obligations to these Indians resulting from treaty stipulations, it seems to me it must be apparent to every member of the committee that it is unquestionably in order on this bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I only want to say a word upon this question, and in the commencement I will say that I would like very much to see this judgment paid. I wanted it paid a year ago, and thought it ought to have been paid and appropriated for. But that is not the question we are now discussing.

I am inclined to think it is subject to the point of order. It is necessary in scrutinizing these rules to have some regard to the business of the House, some regard to its convenience. The gentleman claims, to sustain the jurisdiction of his committee from his standpoint, that we must go back of the judgment of the Court of Claims and of the Supreme Court and inquire upon what it is founded; and if in fact it was founded upon matters touching treaties, or other matters concerning treaties with the Indians, that then his committee is, under the grant of powers conferred by the rule, authorized to take jurisdiction of the subject and report the judgment of the Court of Claims for appropriation.

I do not think, sir, that would be found to be a convenient rule. I do not believe it is a reasonable construction to be given to the rule. If it were true, the same thing could be said with equal propriety of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, the Committee on Military Affairs, or the Committee on Naval Affairs. Wherever the court gives jurisdiction sounding in contract or otherwise under a general or under a special law, the business of the House and its time would be taken up in going behind the judgment and inquiring as to the question of jurisdiction and the question it had adjudicated. It is not practicable to do that.

The time of the House would not be sufficient if you took all of the time of the House to hear all the allegations that may be made upon the one side or the other.

Now, the Committee on Appropriations is by this rule given jurisdiction of all deficiencies. This item is clearly a deficiency. What is a deficiency? A deficiency arises where in the annual appropriation bill or bills an appropriation has not been made for the service sufficient to carry it on or sufficient to pay the debts of the Government.

I grant you, in the first instance, that the Committee on Military Affairs, or Post-Office and Post-Roads, or Naval Affairs have jurisdiction under the rule to make or recommend appropriations to carry on the respective branches of the service committed to them; but if they fail, and the regular bill does not make the appropriation when it is enacted into law, then comes the estimate by way of deficiency or the additional estimate, and it becomes a deficiency of which the Committee on Appropriations is to take jurisdiction.

I think a due regard to the order of business here should control the ruling of the Chair, and that this item is subject to the point of order, however much sympathy I may have with it upon its merits, or however much I should like to see it go upon the appropriation bill.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois, who has just taken his seat, I hardly think has offered anything which tends to elucidate the proposition here presented to the Chair. I hope it would not be a gratifying thing to him to know that this judgment should go on unpaid for some time accumulating interest until it amounted to $300,000 instead of $150,000.

Mr. CANNON. I was not speaking of the merits of the case. I agree with you on that.

Mr. ROGERS. I know; but I hope the gentleman would not find any gratification in seeing this interest accumulating.

Mr. CANNON. Not the slightest. I tried to get this item on the deficiency bill in the last Congress, and was sorry it did not go on.

Mr. ROGERS. Now, having said that much, which I think is all that is necessary in reference to the observations of my friend from Illinois, I propose to try to discuss the legal propositions presented on this point of order.

What was the rule of the House when the present rules were adopted on this subject of appropriations? I hold in my hand the rules in force in the Forty-eighth Congress, and the Chair will remember that the present rules were adopted during the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress. The rule at that time applying to the Committee on Appropriations, the general rule in regard to the powers and duties of that committee, was in the following language:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, namely:

Subjects relating to appropriations of the revenue for the support of the Government: to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mark the language:

Appropriations of the revenue for the support of the Government.

Under this rule an appropriation when for the support of the Government went to the Committee on Appropriations. Then passing from that part of the rule, we come down to the other committees to which, under the new rule, are now assigned the appropriation bills, and we find:

To the relations of the United States with foreign nations other than appropriations therefor: to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Subjects relating to the naval establishment, other than appropriations for its support: to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Subjects relating to the relations of the United States with the Indians and the Indian tribes, other than appropriations therefor: to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Such was the old rule. Now let us look at the new rule:

All legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, namely:

Subjects relating to appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government as herein provided, namely: For legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; for sundry civil expenses; for fortifications; for the District of Columbia; for pensions; for all deficiencies: to the Committee on Appropriations.

I read now in connection with that the subsequent rules:

Subjects relating to the relations of the United States with foreign nations, including appropriations therefor: to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Subjects relating to the naval establishment, including appropriations for its support—

Mark the difference between the language of the rule and the one which applies to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The language in the one is "including appropriations therefor;" the language in the other is "for its support"—

And the same is true, if I may have the attention of my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], with reference to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Subjects relating to the Post-Office and post-roads, including appropriations—

Not "therefor," as first read by my friend, but—for their support: to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

And then comes the rule in reference to Indian affairs:

Subjects relating—

Mark the language—

to the relations of the United States with the Indians and the Indian tribes, including appropriations therefor.

Not merely for their support, not for support of the Government, but—

Subjects relating to the relations of the United States with the Indians and the Indian tribes, including appropriations therefor.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman from Arkansas will permit me, as he has called my attention to the language of the rule with reference to the Post-Office Department, that it says "appropriations for the support of the post-office and post-roads," I will state that in the deficiency bill just passed there was provided an appropriation of $100,000 to be used during the current fiscal year for the compensation of clerks in post-offices. I wish to know if my friend holds that that properly went to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads?

Mr. ROGERS. I understand that is a deficiency.

Mr. BLOUNT. Call it what you please.

Mr. ROGERS. It was to make up a deficit now existing in the Department for the current year.

Mr. BLOUNT. The appropriation was in consequence of a desire to enlarge the service; call it a deficiency if you see fit.

Mr. ROGERS. I repeat the question. It seems that an appropriation was made, as I understand it, of $100,000 to enable the Post-Office Department to go on with the current business of the present year in addition to what had been previously appropriated for the same service.

That is, properly speaking, I take it, a deficiency; and if it is a deficiency it might be argued with much force that the subject ought to go to the Committee on Appropriations. And that brings me to where I should have reached if the gentleman from Georgia had not interrupted me. Let us see for a moment. He would place this appropriation either on the sundry civil bill or the deficiency bill. I take issue with the gentleman in the first place on the point, and insist that this judgment is not a deficiency at all.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ROGERS. I should prefer going on.

Mr. OATES. What I have to suggest is right at that point.

Mr. ROGERS. Very well.

Mr. OATES. I ask the gentleman if it has not been the invariable practice of this House to make appropriations to pay judgments rendered against the United States either in the deficiency bill or the sundry civil bill?

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman from Alabama is asking me a question which I should have reached in due time. In the first place I say this is not a deficiency. What is a deficiency? It is an appropriation made because of the fact that the Government has exhausted the previous appropriation already made.

This appropriation here is not in the first place for the support of the Government. If it had been for the support of the Government and this sum now sought to be appropriated was to supply a deficit it would have been a deficiency. But it is not a deficiency within the meaning of the rule. Then the gentleman says it can go to the bill providing for the sundry civil expenses of the Government.

Why should it go to either one of these two bills? If you say it should go to the sundry civil bill, then you nullify the language of the rule, which says:

Subjects relating to appropriation of revenue for the support of the Government as herein provided, etc., shall go to the Committee on Appropriations.

"Shall go to the Committee on Appropriations." Who pretends that this sum sought to be appropriated to pay this judgment into which have merged the unliquidated claims of these Indians under a treaty—who claims that that is an appropriation for the support of the Government? And yet if you put it on either the sundry civil bill or the deficiency bill, you have either to hold it is for the support of the Government or you nullify the first line of the third clause of this rule regarding the jurisdiction of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question just there?

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman will pardon me a moment. I will give him a chance to interrupt me later. Now, Mr. Chairman, to go back for a moment to the question put to me by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], which comes in just here, touching the appropriation recently made to enable the Postal Department of the Government to go on with its work, he wants to know if that would properly belong to the Appropriations Committee. Now, mark in that connection the language of this rule touching the post-office and post-roads, and I think that when I call my friend's attention to it a large part of his uneasiness about this matter will be removed.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no uneasiness.

Mr. ROGERS. Oh, I had imagined from what had taken place in a former Congress that my friend did not want similar things loaded on to his committee. That is all that I referred to.

Mr. BLOUNT. I guess the gentleman does not mean exactly that. I think the record of the debate discloses that I was discussing the rule on a question of order. I do not think that anything in it indicates any feeling on my part about taking more labor upon our committee.

Mr. ROGERS. No; but I supposed you were influenced largely by that in your argument, unknowingly, of course.

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, possibly my friend does read me better than I read myself. That is very common with us all. Possibly my friend himself may be subject to the same rule now.

Mr. ROGERS. That may be. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia, if he will look at the rule, will find this:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows: Subjects relating to the post-office and post-roads, including appropriations for their support—

What support? Why, the support of the post-office and post-roads. Then, on the other hand, the language of the rule conferring jurisdiction on the Appropriations Committee is this:

Subjects relating to appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government, as herein provided, etc., and for all deficiencies—

Deficiencies for what?—

or the support of the Government.

If I were called, under the strict rules of law, to construe these two rules, which in their terms are somewhat conflicting, I should endeavor to do so in such a way as to permit both to stand; and it would be my judgment, in that aspect of it, that an appropriation of the kind which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] suggests would come under the head of "all deficiencies" for the support of the Government under this clause of Rule IX, which I am discussing, which would take it to the Committee on Appropriations. Construing them in that way, you allow both rules to stand; but if you take the converse of that rule, which would take it to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, you nullify that provision of the rule which says that all deficiencies for the support of the Government shall go to the Committee on Appropriations. So, under the strict rules of interpretation, I should say that in that case the subject suggested by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] would go to the Appropriations Committee; but, as I believe, under the intention of the committee which framed these rules, it might reasonably go to either the one or the other.

Mr. BLOUNT. Do I understand that my friend holds that the Indian appropriation bill is not a bill for the support of the Government?

Mr. ROGERS. Well, I should not call it a bill for the support of the Government. It is a bill carrying out treaty stipulations in the main; but, however that may be, it is clearly an irrelevant point in the controversy, because we have it that the rule itself says "subjects relating"—relating to what? "Relating to the relations, etc." What terms can you have broader than these? Here is an obligation that grows out of treaty stipulations, the highest form of relation that can obtain between two governments. If you exclude this and let the minor things in then you reverse the logical proposition and say that the greater does not include the less.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes. I ought to yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES], but I will yield now to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to know if the gentleman takes the position that the Indian appropriation bill, not being for the support of the Government, is not subject to the point of order that it must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. ROGERS. No, I do not take any such position as that; and the rule does not require that either. Anything that takes money out of the Treasury must, under the rule, go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. But, Mr. Speaker, my friend from Georgia and myself need not have any controversy about that question, unless he can demonstrate that this is a deficiency. Now where did this come from? It grew up out of the treaties made by this Government with these Indians fifty years ago, and after a long prosecution of it before the two Houses of Congress it was finally determined that it should go to the Court of Claims. And that brings me to the correction of an error into which my friend from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] inadvertently fell, perhaps rather an error of words than of ideas, upon the subject of this judgment. I say that what the Supreme Court did was to affirm the judgment of the lower court, and what the lower court did was to liquidate an unliquidated claim by rendering a judgment against the United States for the sum due to these Indians under treaty stipulations.

Mr. PEEL. The point I desired to make was that the treaty did not lose its identity in consequence of this judgment; that it did not merge in the judgment so as to become extinguished as a treaty.

Mr. ROGERS. That is the precise point I was going to make. I knew my friend had inadvertently used the language which seemed to convey another view.

Now, this claim grew out of the treaty, and the treaty was not merged in the judgment. What supports this claim to-day? The same thing which has always supported it—the treaty, which is alive and must continue alive; otherwise this judgment falls. So that the unliquidated claim under the treaty is merged into the judgment, and the treaty supports it as the trunk supports the limb.

What was this act of Congress? I will ask the Clerk to read it.

The CHAIRMAN. The act of Congress has already been read.

Mr. ROGERS. Then I need not occupy time in having it read now. Let me come to another aspect of the case.

Mr. CANNON. I have listened with very great attention to the gentleman, and I would like to ask him which side of this point of order he is on. Does he hold that it is well taken or not well taken? I ask the question in good faith, for I have followed the gentleman's remarks with care. [Laughter].

Mr. ROGERS. There are some things which are within the range of human power, and some things which are not. That is my answer to my friend from Illinois.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman a question about this treaty. As I understand, this is a private claim, founded upon a treaty. Suppose a court should decide that we were bound under a treaty to pay for damages done to the subjects of China, Great Britain, or any other foreign country. Would that be a claim to be appropriated for by special law, or would it go into a general appropriation bill? In other words, is not this a private claim which has nothing at all to do with an appropriation bill? Notwithstanding it grows out of a treaty, there is no law authorizing its payment.

Mr. ROGERS. I think my friend is in absolute error all along the line. In the first place, this is not a private claim; it is a claim of this Indian nation. If that makes it a private claim, then it is such. But if I have not been able to demonstrate my point by the argument I have thus far made, I shall not be able to assist the gentleman.

Now, it is conceded on all sides that there has been no direct ruling either of the Speaker or of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole upon this question. In this connection I am reminded of another matter. It was said by my friend from Georgia that this claim had been referred by the Speaker to the Committee on Appropriations. I took issue with the gentleman on that point. It is possible I may be in error; but I meant to say this: Early in the session, I believe, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BUTLER] introduced a memorial upon this subject through the petition-box and sent it to the Committee on Appropriations. Later in the session my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] introduced a resolution on the same subject through the petition-box, and it went to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

It is probable—though that I do not know about—that it may also have been embraced in some report or book of estimates which may have gone to the Committee on Appropriations. But the Speaker can not divide such a book; he is compelled to send it to some one committee. He does not divide claims of this kind; so that this feature of the matter can have no sort of bearing in the determination of the question of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does my friend from Arkansas take the position that the reference which a member makes of a petition by placing it in the petition-box with his name indorsed on it gives jurisdiction of the subject to that committee?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir. I have just said—my friend evidently did not understand me—that that fact could have no sort of bearing upon the determination of this question. When a petition is put into the box and sent to the wrong committee, it ought to be returned to the House and sent to the proper committee.

Mr. BLOUNT. I supposed the gentleman mentioned those facts by way of showing that the committee had jurisdiction; otherwise I could not see why he mentioned them.

Mr. ROGERS. I was simply meeting the statement made by the gentleman and explaining what I understand to be the force and effect of the rule and the practice.

Mr. BLOUNT. But the gentleman mentioned the proposition I had made that this subject was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ROGERS. We will not consume time on that point; it is entirely irrelevant.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not wish to annoy my friend; I only interposed because I thought he had ample time. I shall not interrupt him further.

Mr. ROGERS. I am always willing to be interrupted on any matter which is relevant.

Mr. BLOUNT. I exercised my best judgment in endeavoring to make my inquiry relevant. I regret that I have not satisfied my friend from Arkansas.

Mr. ROGERS. There is one more point which I come to at once. There has been no ruling either by the Speaker or by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole touching this particular point. The matter, however, was up in discussion more than once during the Forty-ninth Congress; and by way of supporting the position I have assumed I desire to invite the attention of the Chair to what then transpired.

In the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress (I refer to pages 5927 and 5928 of the RECORD of that session) the Committee on Naval Affairs, in the naval appropriation bill, assumed jurisdiction of the construction of a Naval Observatory. That was the first instance of any assumption of jurisdiction of this character under the new rules by a committee standing on a footing with this one. No question of order was made at that time; but the discussion took place upon the merits of the question, the provision having been inserted in the bill by the committee, and not being offered as an amendment.

Later than that, on pages 6180 to 6183 inclusive, when the sundry civil bill was under discussion, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL], insisted that appropriations for the construction of the dry-dock at the Brooklyn navy-yard should go to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and not to the Committee on Appropriations. There the point of order was discussed, the question of jurisdiction was discussed, and discussed fully.

I invite the attention of the Chair to the language of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania on the subject:

Mr. RANDALL. When the Committee on Appropriations had the preparation of both the naval bill and the sundry civil bill, they had before them a view of the matters to be appropriated for in both; but when the transfer was made of the naval appropriation bill, the consideration of all matters relating to the support of the Navy went with it. That seems to me to be a common-sense construction of the rule.

Now, what is the difference between the rule we are now construing and that rule? Mark the language, Mr. Chairman:

Matters relating to the naval establishment, including the appropriation for its support, etc.

And yet under that rule the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations insisted that everything pertaining to the support of the Navy should go to the Naval Committee. Our rule is still wider than that, for it says:

Subjects relating to the relations of the United States with the Indians and the Indian tribes, including appropriations therefor—

Should go to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

I will read no more of what took place at that time on this subject. The full discussion is here.

Still later, in the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress, 1886, page 97, when the sundry civil appropriation bill was under consideration, Mr. RANDALL, by a letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, through his clerk, appearing in this RECORD, surrendered voluntarily everything relating to the navy-yards and stations and new Naval Observatory. I will turn to that for a moment, and will send to the Clerk's desk to have it read, so that it may be incorporated in my remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RANDALL. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT].

Mr. HERBERT. The bill we are discussing proposes to appropriate $19,183,911 for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888. The amount appropriated in the sundry civil bill for 1887 was $22,661,910, making an apparent saving in the present bill of $3,477,999. How that saving is proposed to be made will be explained in part at least by a letter which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
"Washington, D. C., December 6, 1886.

"DEAR SIR: Referring to the estimates submitted under the titles 'Navy-yards and stations' and 'New Naval Observatory,' on pages 163 and 164 of the Book of Estimates for 1888, and which aggregate $4,418,961.16, I am directed by Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to say that the subcommittee in charge of the sundry civil bill are of the opinion that said estimates belong to and should be considered as a part of the naval establishment, for which the Committee on Naval Affairs are charged under the rules of the House with reporting appropriations, and that no recommendation will therefore be made by the Committee on Appropriations touching these estimates.

"Very respectfully,

"JAMES C. COURTS,
"Clerk Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

"Hon. H. A. HERBERT,
"Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives."

Mr. ROGERS. If the Clerk will send me down that volume I will be obliged to him.

Here, then, Mr. Chairman, was a formal surrender of matters of this character by the Appropriations Committee to the Committee on Naval Affairs; and the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT], chairman of that committee, who prior to this time had been of the opinion this jurisdiction belonged to the Committee on Appropriations, subsequently agreed to the correctness of the interpretation of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and assumed jurisdiction of those things which under the rules went to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

On page 146, on the part of the distinguished gentleman from Alabama, it will be found at that time a considerable discussion took place on the floor of the House, in which my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] participated, when the gentleman from Alabama directly and absolutely reversed his conviction, as every man must when he finds himself in error, and affirmed the correctness of the position of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to which I have referred.

These, Mr. Chairman, are all that have been found, after a careful search, in the way of elucidating a correct interpretation of the language of the rule; and I insist that so far as the practice has been concerned in the House under the new rules the current of its action is with us. So far as the language of the new rule itself is concerned it is, in my judgment, humble though it be, absolutely and incontrovertibly with us.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is one of those items which, as sometimes happens, comes under either clause of the rule to which reference has been made. It is undoubtedly one of the sundry civil expenditures of the Government. As our habit is, it may be regarded as one of the judgments we now provide for and include in deficiency bills. But there is also no question whatever that it is providing for an appropriation which has reference to the general relations of the United States with one of the Indian tribes. It seems to me, therefore, that we are wasting time in discussing it to such an extent. It is perfectly apparent that it would be in order if upon the sundry civil appropriation bill; perfectly apparent that it would be in order upon the deficiency bill, and, in my judgment, perfectly apparent that it would be in order upon the Indian appropriation bill, because the rule, in just as broad and clear language as can be used, gives the Indian Committee jurisdiction over all subjects which have reference to the relations of the United States Government to the Indians and Indian tribes, including any appropriations therefor.

Mr. BURNES. I yield such time as he may desire to my colleague from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will request gentlemen to be as brief as possible on the point of order.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that one of two propositions is conclusive of this whole subject under the rule. The rule is:

No appropriation shall be reported in a general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriation for such public works and objects as are already in progress, etc.

Now, in the first place, it must be authorized by law. The rulings heretofore had and the practice and the authorities cited all indicate that an amendment in the nature of an appropriation for a private claim against the Government is not in order on a general appropriation bill. That is stated here in the Digest to be the universal practice.

Now, what is a general appropriation bill? That is also laid down in the Digest, on page 279.

The general appropriation bills under the practice of the House number thirteen, among them being the agricultural, Army, consular and diplomatic, general deficiency, District of Columbia, fortifications, and Indian.

This, then, is one of the general appropriation bills, and no appropriation not previously authorized by law, and no amendment to it, are in order, unless to carry on public works and objects already in progress. This is not one of those provisions. If it originates in a treaty that fact does not take it out of the category of private claims.

There are many things arising under treaty stipulations, damages occurring and matters of that sort; but the payment must be previously authorized by law. If it does not belong to an appropriation committee and simply because this is a claim on the part of an Indian tribe or belonging to particular Indians, that has been ascertained as a claim, no matter how it originates, whether under a treaty or under some act of Congress—some existing law—it is still nothing more nor less than a private claim the payment for which has not been authorized by law. It is not in continuation of any public work or measure already in progress. The rule is positive that no appropriation shall be in order on a general appropriation bill unless it is of that character; and this is declared by the practice of the House to be a general appropriation bill. So I repeat, that point is conclusive of the whole subject. There is no escaping the proposition that it is simply a claim, a private claim, and can not be appropriated for on a general appropriation bill where the question of order is raised.

Mr. BURNES. I now yield such time as the gentleman from Alabama may desire to occupy.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, all are agreed, I believe, that this judgment ought to be paid; and the question of order involves the consideration, first, as to what particular appropriation bill should include it. An observance of the rules of the House is necessary in order to facilitate the proper transaction of its business; and a reasonable construction of these rules and a rigid adherence besides I think is wholly essential.

Now it is claimed that this appropriation is properly in the Indian appropriation bill, as I understand the argument, only for the reason that the appropriation is for the benefit of an Indian tribe. Why, sir, the appropriation is simply to pay a judgment of the Court of Claims against the United States, and it is of no consequence that the plaintiffs or beneficiaries under the judgment are Indians.

The jurisdiction of this committee is well defined and relates only to two general subjects—to the relations of the United States with the Indians and Indian tribes. Is this particular appropriation to pay a judgment a matter relating to anything between the United States and the Indian tribes?

The second part of the rule confers upon this committee the right to make appropriations in matters touching relations between the United States and the Indian tribes.

Now, this is an appropriation, I repeat, to pay the judgment of a court, and the fact that the Indians are beneficiaries under that judgment can not in the least make it a matter of relation between this Indian tribe and the United States; because it is not an inquiry into any of the relations which do not in fact exist between that tribe and the United States. All that is concluded by the judgment of the court; and it is as much and no more a judgment, standing precisely on the same basis as any other judgment in the United States in favor of a party.

If this committee has jurisdiction to make this appropriation to pay this judgment it has equal jurisdiction to make an appropriation to pay a judgment to a white man, or to any corporation which has recovered a judgment against the Government.

According to my observation it has always been the province of the Committee on Appropriations to provide for the payment of judgments against the Government of the United States either in the deficiency or in the sundry civil bill, the latter being a bill of odds and ends. Now, sir, suppose that this committee can properly make this appropriation for the payment of a judgment, then why can not the jurisdiction over every judgment and every other matter which is included in the deficiency and in the sundry civil bills be assumed and provision made to cover everything embraced in them in some of the other appropriation bills? Why can not any other committee that has a right to report an appropriation bill take any other subject or any other judgment and include it in the bill, for instance, for the post-office and post-roads, or for military affairs, or for anything else? They can with the same propriety that this committee can assume the right to appropriate to pay this judgment. There is nothing in the fact that they are Indians to whom the court has adjudged this money to be due which ives this committee any right whatever to make an appropriation. They might make an appropriation as well to pay any other judgment rendered against the United States as this one. And it seems to me to be a blending and practically an obliteration of all distinction in the matter of jurisdiction between the committees which have charge of appropriations.

[Mr. BURNES withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. HOOKER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that he hopes gentlemen who are hereafter to discuss the point of order will be as brief as possible. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], who made the point of order, requests that he be allowed to close the debate on the point of order, and that for that purpose the Chair will recognize him. The Chair will now recognize gentlemen who are opposed to the point of order.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a brief appeal to the House in favor of this bill and in favor of the progress of the business of the House. This is the second day the House has been engaged on this bill, and the prospect on the point of order bids fair to consume the rest of the day and send the bill over for another day's consideration. In fact, the gentleman who makes the point of order on this bill seems to contemplate the bill and the point of order shall be kept open until some future occasion when the Speaker of the House shall be present to gratify him with a decision by the official head of the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman refers to the gentleman from Missouri, and not to myself.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Now, so far as this particular provision is concerned, as I understand it there is no difference of opinion in this House as to its merits. It seems to be agreed this amount of money should be appropriated owing to some obligation of treaty, which is the public law of the United States, which has been ascertained and determined to be a subsisting obligation of this Government by the highest court known to our law. Yet we are delaying an important bill day after day when business is pressing upon us in order to determine an old dispute in a new direction in this House, to wit, the dispute at a former session as to whether all or most appropriation bills shall go to the Committee on Appropriations or a portion of them shall be distributed amongst other committees of the House.

Practically it is of no present importance which way this question of order shall be decided. If it shall be decided in favor of the proposition we will take a vote on it no doubt, and agree to it, and the bill will then be passed with that as one of its provisions. If it should be stricken out of the bill the Committee on Appropriations will bring it in again in what is called the deficiency bill, which I understand is a sort of omnium gatherum, a gathering of odds and ends of legislation which other committees have not reported, or cases where former appropriations were insufficient in amount.

There would be nothing extraordinary or unusual for two committees to have, in succession, jurisdiction over a particular subject; that the Committee on Indian Affairs, for instance, should make a report on such a provision and have it acted upon by the House; and if that failed in the House, that the same subject-matter should pass into a general deficiency bill which gathers up all of the measures which are proper in the action of the House and which have not been otherwise provided for.

Now, if we are to construe this question upon the text of the rule which has been adopted, there can be no difficulty, I assume, to the mind of any member of the House as to the warrant for placing it upon this bill. That rule is that all subjects pertaining to the relations of the Government to Indian tribes and appropriations, therefore with reference to those relations, shall pertain to the Committee on Indian Affairs. Our relations with the Choctaw Indian Nation are under a treaty out of which this appropriation comes. The judgment in favor of the Indians is founded upon the treaty.

Our present relations with the tribe are still under that treaty. That is the foundation of our obligation and duty to that tribe, and under a decision of the Supreme Court another relation has succeeded, not supplanting the former, but in addition to it, to wit: the relation of debtor. The Government and this tribe now stand in the relation of debtor and creditor under this judgment.

The Government of the United States sustains the relation to the tribe of an ascertained debtor of a certain amount of money. If we are to take this new rule, which is a departure, I understand, within the last few years, if we are to take that language and pass upon it according to its plain import, this is a legitimate amendment or measure or proposition to be added to or taken in an appropriation bill coming from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

I see, therefore, no difficulty whatever in voting to retain this appropriation on this bill; for whatever may be the views of gentlemen, we have had, I submit to the Chair, upon this subject already sufficient debate; and if the Chair is prepared with a clear mind to rule upon it, for one I am in favor of his doing so and have the debate terminate, for it will perhaps make no great difference, I take it, whether the point of order is ruled one way or the other.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I take it that a case like this, arising upon an Indian treaty, and a judgment of the Supreme Court, both being involved, can never arise again for consideration in the House during the present session of Congress.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I beg to say a word on the point of order. While I may not be able to add anything new to what has been said, yet I think that the history of this particular matter, the legislative history of it, should be considered, and that the Chair will take it into consideration in the determination of the point of order. I desire therefore to say no word except such as shall have direct reference to the legal question presented.

I precede what I have to say by remarking, sir, that you are familiar with the fact that in former times it was true, as stated by the gentleman from Missouri, just in front of me [Mr. BURNES], that these subject-matters were embraced either in the deficiency bill or in the sundry civil bill; because at that time the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives possessed all power of appropriation. It will be well remembered by gentlemen who were here then, and you, sir, were among them, that the struggle to divide the power of the Appropriations Committee, which had engrossed to itself the whole right of making appropriations under the law, was a long and protracted one; and that committee surrendered the authority to deal with all questions of that character with great reluctance. But it has been determined by a former Congress that the power of the Committee on Appropriations should be divided, and that the respective committees who look into and consider and treat of the respective matters submitted to them should also possess the privilege of making appropriations therefor. They resisted in vain this distribution of their power. It was granted to a great many committees; and if my memory serves me right the first committee to which was granted the power not only of considering matters primarily relating to the subjects properly referred to the committee, but of making appropriations therefor, was the Committee on Agriculture. It was conceived that if that committee should be intrusted by the House with the consideration of all the important questions relating to that great fundamental interest of the country, it should also be conceded the power to make appropriations for it.

That was the first invasion of the claims of the Committee on Appropriations, which prior to that had been absorbing all powers of appropriating, and then possessed the power of framing the agricultural appropriation bills. It went on, Mr. Chairman, and there was a division of these powers among the various committees of the House, not only to consider the subject-matters referred to them under the rules, but to make appropriations, and among others the Committee on Indian Affairs was granted that power by the fifteenth section of the eleventh rule that has been referred to, and which gives them the power that to-day results in the present bill before us—to consider the relations of the United States with the Indians and the Indian tribes, including the appropriations therefor. That was adopted in the Forty-ninth Congress, and is not therefore subject to the objection of the gentleman from Missouri that the power of the Appropriations Committee dates back forty years, and hence that this provision ought to be included in the sundry civil bill.

When this division of the power of the Appropriations Committee was made that committee had become colossal in the subject-matters which were referred to it and in the power of its appropriations, and the House determined, and wisely, I think, to divide them and give to the various committees dealing with important subject-matters the right to make appropriations for them.

Now, sir, look at this particular measure and see if it belongs to the Committee on Indian Affairs to appropriate for this judgment. How did it originate? It found its existence in the law read by the gentleman himself, which I had the honor to introduce into this House from the Committee on Indian Affairs long years ago. It gave to the Court of Claims the power to adjudicate the disputed question under the treaty called the Dancing Rabbit treaty of 1855, by which the Choctaw Nation sold the immense empire included in my State of Mississippi, and received the territory on the western side of the river.

Under that treaty they were entitled to receive so much money for lands sold prior to a given date, and so much for lands sold after that date.

They came to this Government asking a consideration of the question, and with wonderful magnanimity they agreed to refer to the Senate of the United States as an arbitrator, a body in which they had no one to represent them, and in which they had no voice, the power to determine the question as to whether they were entitled to anything, and if so, what; whether they were to be paid in bulk what the United States owed them, or were to be given the net proceeds of the sale of their own lands.

The Senate of the United States made the arbitration, and decided that the Indians were entitled to the net proceeds of the land of a given amount to a certain date, and another amount afterwards. Under that decision the Secretary of the Interior made the computation and the claim was then referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the bill to which I have referred was reported by that committee and became a law. The claim then went to the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims decided against the rights and interests of the Indians. An appeal was taken under the provisions of the law to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Supreme Court rendered a judgment for the two million eight hundred and odd thousand dollars, the amount I had always insisted was indisputably due them, if not a larger amount.

Mr. PEEL. If the gentleman will allow me I will state that the Court of Claims did not find adversely but found a different amount.

Mr. HOOKER. They found a small and insignificant amount. When the appeal went to the Supreme Court of the United States they made this adjudication giving this right under the treaty, fixing it by a definite judgment, ascertaining it by a judical enactment that there was so much due to the Indians under the treaty by which these lands were conceded.

Does it deprive the Committee on Indian Affairs of jurisdiction because a court of the last resort, the highest judical tribunal of the land declared that that amount was due under a treaty? In the first clause of this memorial of the Choctaw Nation, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, they say:

Whereas the Court of Claims of the United States, pursuant to a mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States, did, on the 15th day of December, 1886, render a judgment in favor of the Choctaw Nation for $2,858,798.62.

Then they say that the treaty of 22d June, 1855, provides in the eleventh article as follows:

That on the 22d of June, 1855, the United States and the Choctaw Nation concluded a treaty, which, among other things, provides as follows:

ART. II. The Government of the United States not being prepared to assent to the claim set up under the treaty of September 27, 1830, and so earnestly contended for by the Choctaws as a rule of settlement, but justly appreciating the sacrifices, faithful services, and general good conduct of the Choctaw people, and being desirous that their rights and claims against the United States shall receive a just, fair, and liberal consideration, it is therefore stipulated that the following questions be submitted for adjudication to the Senate of the United States:

First. Whether the Choctaws are entitled to or shall be allowed the proceeds of the sale of the lands ceded by them to the United States by the treaty of September 27, 1830, deducting therefrom the cost of their survey and sale, and all just and proper expenditures and payments under the provisions of said treaty; and, if so, what price per acre shall be allowed to the Choctaws for the land remaining unsold in order that a final settlement with them may be promptly effected. Or,

Second. Whether the Choctaws shall be allowed a gross sum in further and full satisfaction of all their claims, national and individual, against the United States; and, if so, how much.

ART. 12. In case the Senate shall award to the Choctaws the net proceeds of the lands ceded as aforesaid, the same shall be received by them in full satisfaction of all their claims against the United States, whether national or individual, arising under any former treaty; and the Choctaws shall thereupon become liable and bound to pay all such individual claims as may be adjudged by the proper authorities of the tribe to be equitable and just, the settlement and payment to be made with the advice and under the direction of the United States agent for the tribe.

And so much of the fund awarded by the Senate to the Choctaws as the proper authorities thereof shall ascertain and determine to be necessary for the payment of the just liabilities of the tribe, shall on their requisition be paid over to them by the United States.

* * * * * * *

It being expressly understood that the adjudication and decision of the Senate shall be final.

That on the 9th day of March, 1859, the Senate did award to the Choctaws the net proceeds of the lands ceded by them to the United States by the treaty of September 27, 1830, and that thereupon, under article 12 of the treaty of 1855, the Choctaws became liable and bound to pay all such individual claims as the proper authorities of the Choctaw Nation might determine to be "equitable and just;" and the United States bound themselves that "so much of the fund awarded by the Senate to the Choctaws as the proper authorities thereof shall ascertain and determine to be necessary for the payment of the just liabilities of the tribe, shall on their requisition be paid over to them by the United States."

That on the 15th day of November, 1886, the Supreme Court of the United States affirmed the award of the Senate, and adjudged that there is due to the Choctaws under said award the sum of $2,981,247.30, subject to a deduction of $250,000, paid under the act of 1861.

Now, if there was such a treaty obligation on the part of the Government, because the court of last resort has intervened and settled what the treaty meant, and if it is undisputed that this amount is due, would the gentleman from Missouri say that the Committee on Indian Affairs had not the right to appropriate for it under the rules of the House? So far from robbing that committee of its power it ought to be a fortiori argued that it possesses the power because the court of last resort has said this was the undisputed obligation of the Government under the treaty. It does not rob the committee of the power because the court has intervened and fixed the sum due. On the contrary, it strengthens the argument of the chairman of the committee that this committee should report an appropriation to pay the judgment.

The gentleman from Missouri says the House had passed during this session two deficiency bills. Why did not the Appropriations Committee include this appropriation in one of those bills for the payment of a judgment of the court of last resort? No one will say it was not for a long time due. This judgment is a tardy act of justice on the part of the Supreme Court, and yet two deficiency bills reported from the Committee on Appropriations have been passed and nothing has been done.

The memorial referred to the Appropriations Committee is no argument against the jurisdiction of the Committee on Indian Affairs. These men, in desperation on account of the long-protracted postponement of this matter, were knocking at the doors of Congress and of every committee in it asking for justice and for an appropriation on their behalf. It does not, therefore, rob the Committee on Indian Affairs of the jurisdiction given under the rules and under the judgment of the court, but enforces the argument that the jurisdiction belongs to that committee.

Mr. OATES. I would like to know from my friend from Mississippi

[Mr. HOOKER] what is the difference between this and any other judgment?

Mr. HOOKER. The difference, so far as the jurisdictional question is concerned, is this, that, with reference to our Indian affairs, the Indian Committee, and the Indian Committee alone, has the power, and therefore if the judgment should be an Indian affair, I say to my honorable friend from Alabama [Mr. OATES] that this is not robbing the Committee on Appropriations of its jurisdiction, and no lawyer would say that it is.

Now, Mr. Chairman, upon the appeal made to you by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] I wish to say that I hope you will not avoid or evade, as I know you have no desire to do, the responsibility of judging and deciding upon this question. I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and with the gentleman from Pennsylvania who has spoken upon this question. It may be that the Committee on Appropriations might possibly have inserted this item in an appropriation bill, yet as they have not done it and as the jurisdictional power is unquestionably in the Indian Committee under the rule, I hope that the Chairman of this Committee of the Whole will promptly decide the question, and that, inasmuch as the new rule adopted early in the Forty-ninth Congress clothed this Indian Committee with power on this question, we shall not now seek to undo that which has been hitherto done, or by interpretration or construction, as the courts are said to do sometimes, deprive the Committee on Indian Affairs of its power and restore it again to this gigantic Committee on Appropriations, which once had so much power as to absorb almost every other committee in the House. I hope the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole will decide this question promptly, and will decide it as I believe the law and the jurisdictional question require him to decide.

Mr. PERKINS. Is this any less a claim arising under a treaty stipulation or any less a treaty obligation because it has been put in judgment?

Mr. HOOKER. I think not, sir.

Mr. PERKINS. It does not change the relation of the matter at all?

Mr. HOOKER. Not at all.

Mr. PEEL and Mr. BLOUNT both addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not desire to hear further argument, but will hear the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], who has expressed a desire to close the debate.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the gentleman from Georgia will not interrupt me. [Laughter.] My friend from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] saw proper to allude to a conversation which took place between him and me and which I do not think had anything to do with this argument. I know the gentleman did not intend to put me in a false attitude before this House, but he knows as a lawyer that he and I have no power to change the jurisdiction of any committee of the House. It would have been a beautiful agreement for me as chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and for him as a member of the House to have made, that the present occupant of the chair would not decide this point of order in a certain way, or that the Speaker of the House would not decide it.

Such a thing is too absurd to be talked about. It never entered my mind. I could not have done it. I would not have had the audacity to do it even if I had the power. Now, my friend did not tell it all. If the Speaker of the House, whose brain is as clear as a bell, and whose judgment of equity is as pure as snow, were in the chair, I would have no fear about the judgment upon this point of order, and the gentleman knows how he felt upon this subject. But it is not for us to attempt to trifle with the judgment of the Chair on a question of this importance. You, sir, have been selected under the rules of the House to preside over this committee, and if the decision is not in my favor I am not the man to complain. I never ask a change of venue after the trial is over.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, this question has been argued at some length, and I propose to occupy but very little of the time of the committee. It has been said that a great while has been given to the question, but I do not think that we have given it more time than it deserves. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] has alluded to the fact that in the past there has been a great struggle in this House over the jurisdiction of the appropriations. That was a question of vast consequence and it excited the House for years. Exactly what was accomplished as the result of that struggle is now for you in part to decide. The appropriations for the support of this Government are over $238,000,000 per annum, and it is well, sir, when such large expenditures are to be made, that each committee shall understand distinctly what it has in charge, and that the House shall leave no appropriation committee in doubt upon that question. It is because I believe it an important question that I have seen fit to raise this question of order. It has been stated that the language in the rule in reference to the Indian appropriation bill is different from that in relation to other appropriation bills. It reads: "to the relations of the United States with the Indians and the Indian tribes, including the appropriations therefor." The present bill reads: "A bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes." That identical language is the language used in the title of the appropriation bill before the separation, and the language used in reference to the assignment of the work of appropriation will be found to be in harmony in idea with the language in the rule.

Now, then, if the language of this appropriation bill is the same as it was before the separation of the bill, then it would seem that the House in adopting this language in the rule had no other purpose than to define that duty. Until these new rules were adopted, there never was any rule giving the Committee on Indian Affairs jurisdiction of appropriations for the support of the Indian service; their jurisdiction related solely in the past to the relations of the United States to the Indian tribes; and the bill was as I have stated. So in reference to postal appropriations, the language used was the language used in the bill to-day. If we are really seeking the purpose of the House, we need not take up this bill and play upon the language, when we have the history of the legislation of this House distinctly under this language carrying judgments even in relation to the Indian tribes to the sundry civil appropriation bill. There never was in the debates on this question a single expression showing a purpose to take judgments relating to the Indian tribes away from the Committee on Appropriations. Therefore it seems to me no inference can be drawn from this language taken by itself.

Mr. Chairman, you will not stop here. You will take the language of these several rules. You will go back to prior appropriation bills and see, when such language as this was used, what the House then meant. You will thus ascertain what the House intended when it took from the Committee on Appropriations these appropriations for the Indian service and gave them to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

My friend from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] has seen fit to allude to a discussion on this floor between the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] in relation to the question where an appropriation for yards and docks belonged.

It seemed that my friend from Pennsylvania was perfectly willing to unload a large amount of his bill upon my friend from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT], who was trying to push it back; but finally the gentleman from Alabama yielded and agreed to take it. That is about all there is in that discussion. The question of the construction of the rule was never passed upon by the Chair at all; those gentlemen settled the trouble amicably between themselves, and the matter has no place in a construction of this rule.

It is assumed, Mr. Chairman, that this bill by its very title is a bill providing "for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes;" that this claim is a judgment growing out of a treaty; and, therefore, the Committee on Indian Affairs had jurisdiction. This argument is not confined to judgments; and, by the same process of construction, these gentlemen hereafter need not wait for the judgment of a court, but may take up any treaty made with any Indian tribe and bring it into the House with their construction and propose any appropriation they see fit. I ask you, sir, whether it was ever the purpose of this House, which has been so careful to keep anything like legislative power or legislative construction from the Committees on Appropriations of this House, whether it was ever designed to give to the Committee on Indian Affairs a right to construe treaties and to put appropriations into the Indian bill in virtue of such construction? That is the logic of the position assumed. I do not believe that the present occupant of the chair is willing to go along with those gentlemen to the conclusion they have reached and give it the solemn sanction of a ruling by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole of the House of Representatives.

Mr. KERR. Does the gentleman think that the term "civil expenses," interpreted without reference to any former history, would properly cover this kind of a claim?

Mr. BLOUNT. I answer my friend with a great deal of pleasure. I think too much has been said in the line of arguing this as a deficiency. I regard it as an item of sundry civil expenses; and the term "sundry civil bill" means nothing more nor less than a miscellaneous bill. It contains one year a certain class of items which are omitted the next year. It is constantly shifting in its character. Ever since I have been in this House until now it has been considered that the sundry civil appropriation bill was the proper place for judgments, though sometimes, after that bill has been passed, a judgment has been inserted in a deficiency bill. That a judgment is one of the ordinary sundry civil items under the rules and practice of the House, I undertake to say no man who knows anything of the legislation of this House, and especially legislation on the sundry civil bill, will undertake to question.

Mr. HOOKER. My friend will allow me to ask him what he is going to do with all the provisions of this bill which appropriate money for the payment of sums due the Indians under treaty stipulations.

Mr. BLOUNT. What will I do? Why, sir, it is the easiest thing in the world to ascertain. Just what we have always done. Estimates for the Indian service for any fiscal year are provided for in the Indian appropriation bill; but if the proposition is to pay a judgment or a claim, I know nothing in the past history of the House to authorize its going in this bill.

Mr. COBB. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must appeal to gentlemen of the committee. If the gentleman from Georgia is to be interrupted in his argument by questions continually propounded to him, the residue of the day's sitting may be consumed without reaching a conclusion.

Mr. BLOUNT. I shall soon relieve the committee and the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes that the gentleman from Georgia desires to answer all questions propounded to him; but as this point is to be determined by the Chair, the Chair prefers that the argument be addressed to him. When the gentleman has concluded, the Chair will be ready to decide the point. The Chair does not desire, however, to limit the gentleman.

Mr. BLOUNT. Now, Mr. Chairman, this whole matter, as I understand it, is simply this: The House took away certain annual appropriation bills from the Committee on Appropriations and nothing more. They took away from the Committee on Appropriations appropriations for the current Indian service, leaving, however, to the Committee on Appropriations appropriations for deficiencies in that service. They took away from the Committee on Appropriations appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service, but the claims remaining in that service for previous years were left to the Committee on Appropriations. In every instance where there has been a withdrawal from the Committee on Appropriations the residue in its amplest form was left with the Committee on Appropriations.

My friend, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL], in charge of this bill complains that my argument was technical in this case, that while making the point of order I admitted the justice of the claim. But, sir, when you come to investigate the subject of technicality we know from the legislative history of this country, just so soon as the question of technicality is removed life and force are given to the provision which is sought to be carried into effect by my question of order.

But, sir, I am only standing here upon the rules of the House, as I understand them. No legislative body of any respectability undertakes to enact legislation without rules. When the Committee on Indian Affairs understands they have nothing to do with this class of judgments, nothing to do with any questions growing out of treaties for previous years, they will not undertake hereafter to do it, but give themselves up to their proper work. So when each committee understands precisely the duty assigned to it, they will all then proceed in an orderly way to do what the rules enjoin. I am making this question of order, sir, in order that we may exactly understand where we are, and so that hereafter we may act in accordance with the rules of the House.

I have said perhaps as much as I ought to say, but I wish to say in conclusion a word or two. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] doubtless inadvertently stated that the gentleman who raised the point of order also desired to have the question referred for decision to the Speaker of the House. He referred to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES], and not to myself. I do not take any part in that suggestion.

I have risen to discharge what I deem to be a public duty, and I take it for granted that the distinguished gentleman from Illinois in the chair [Mr. SPRINGER] feels the obligation of the duty imposed upon him equally with myself. He certainly would not question my purpose, and I will not question his. I will submit to his decision, whatever it may be. [Cries of "Rule!" "Rule!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia makes the point of order that under the rules of the House, and especially under Rule XI, clauses 3 and 16, the section now under consideration should be properly reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] makes the further point of order that under Rule XXI, clause 3, this section should be ruled out, because that clause provides—

> That no appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law.

The latter point of order, made by the gentleman from Missouri, could not be sustained, from the fact, it has been the universal custom for appropriations to pay judgments of the Court of Claims to be reported in general appropriation bills. There is a law which requires such judgments to be certified to Congress for that purpose. The question, therefore, recurs to the point made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], which is one purely of jurisdiction. The Chair desires to have read sections 1906 and 1907 of the Law and Practice of Legislative Bodies, by Mr. Cushing.

The Clerk read as follows:

1906. The rules, relating to the power of committees, in respect to the subject-matter referred to them, are two:

I. A committee is not at liberty to entertain any proposition, or go into any inquiry, which does not come within the direct purposes for which the committee is appointed, as expressed or clearly implied in the authority conferred upon it, or which is not grounded upon some paper which is referred to the consideration of the committee.

II. When a subject is referred to a committee, to consider the matter thereof, and to report its opinion thereupon to the House, the committee is authorized to recommend any measure connected with and growing out of the subject so referred.

1907. These rules are founded in the clear and indisputable principle of parliamentary law, that a committee is bounded by, and is not at liberty to depart from, the order of reference; a principle which is essential to the regular dispatch of business; for if it were admitted that what the House entertained in one instance, and referred to a committee, was so far controllable by that committee that it was at liberty to disobey the order of reference, all business would be at an end; and, as often as circumstances should afford a pretense, the proceedings of the House would be involved in endless confusion and contests with itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The subject-matter of this point of order is the provision incorporated in this bill providing payment to the Choctaw Nation of the sum of $2,858,798.62, which amount had been adjudged to be due that nation from the United States by a decision of the Supreme Court, and also by the Court of Claims acting in pursuance of a mandate of the Supreme Court.

It is true that this is a judgment of the court, but at the same time it does not prevent the House of Representatives, or a committee of the House, from looking into the decision of the court to determine the subject-matter of the decision; and if we refer to the legislation of Congress upon the subject it will be found that the act of Congress referring this claim to the Court of Claims provided that that court was authorized to take jurisdiction and try all questions of difference arising out of treaty stipulations with the Choctaw Nation and to render judgment thereon.

The matter, therefore, referred to the court was the matter of a treaty stipulation between the Choctaw Nation and the United States; and the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court of the United States have adjudged that under that treaty stipulation the United States was indebted to this Indian tribe, or Indian nation, in the amount set forth in this bill covering the judgment of the court, which sum of money is adjudged to be due them in pursuance of this treaty made between the Government and the Indians. Therefore, the subject-matter of this claim, as the present occupant of the chair understands and believes, comes within the very terms of clause 16 of Rule XI, which provides that—

> All subjects relating to the relations of the United States with the Indians and the Indian tribes, including appropriations therefor—shall be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

It has been stated in the discussion of this point of order that previous to the rule of the House which divided the powers of the Appropriation Committee judgments of the Court of Claims and of the Supreme Court of the United States were reported either in the sundry civil bill or in a deficiency bill. That may be true, but the present occupant of the chair is not aware of any ruling or any judgment of the Court of Claims or of the Supreme Court relating to Indian affairs or carrying out the stipulations of treaties with the Indian tribes which has been made since this new rule was established by the House of Representatives, and as this is the first time that the House or a Committee of the Whole House has been called on to interpret the powers of these committees, being the first claim arising out of treaty stipulations on a judgment since these powers of appropriations were divided among the committees, the Chair thinks that this committee may well infer that as this was a judgment based upon treaty stipulations, the subject-matter of that judgment is a proper one to be taken cognizance of by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Now the question recurs as to whether this matter has been so referred. The Chair is of opinion that it has been. Under the rule laid down in Cushing, to which the Chair has called attention and which the Clerk has just read, the powers of a committee are found to be, first, those included by its title and the power which it has, and second, such matters as it has referred to it by the House of Representatives. Under both of these heads this committee, it seems to the Chair, has jurisdiction of the subject-matter here referred to. It is a proposition within the general powers or jurisdiction which the committee has; and it has also been referred to it by a memorial of the Choctaw Nation, which, in due course of proceedings, under the rules of the House, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. That memorial, as appears by the indorsement upon the back of it, was sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs on the 3d day of March last; and by reference to the contents of the paper itself it will be seen that the memorial relates entirely to the subject-matter of these claims. The Choctaw Nation in this memorial requests Congress to make an appropriation for the payment of the sum of money found due under this award.

It seems, therefore, to the present occupant of the chair that on both grounds the Committee on Indian Affairs had jurisdiction of the claim. It also appears from various other papers cited that the Committee on Appropriations might have taken jurisdiction of this claim by the reference to it of the item in the Book of Estimates, or by reference to it also of those papers accompanying the case; and if the present occupant of the chair had been presiding in the House at the time, and the question had been raised as to the power of the Committee on Appropriations in the premises, or the committee had shown its right, by the papers cited, to take cognizance of it, the Chair would have held that it could take, and properly take, jurisdiction of the case. But as the Committee on Indian Affairs has reported this proposition, and it comes within the name and general scope of the powers of the committee, and as it has been placed in a bill the very title of which is in part "for the purpose of fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes," the Chair is of opinion that it is properly in the bill, and that the committee had rightful jurisdiction of the subject.

One word further and the Chair will submit the question. The Chair desires to state that he would be glad to be relieved of the responsibility of deciding this question, and to have the judgment of the House upon it. It is a very important question, and the present occupant of the chair has no pride of opinion whatever upon the subject, but would greatly prefer that an appeal should be taken to have the matter decided by the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish simply to ask for information, if the Chair will permit me——

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand the Chair to hold that under the present rule when a petition is referred through the box to a committee it gives the committee jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the petition?

The CHAIRMAN. Not necessarily. The attention of the Chair was called to clause 2 of Rule XXII, which is as follows:

Any petition or memorial or private bill excluded under this rule shall be returned to the member from whom it was received; and petitions and private bills which have been inappropriately referred may, by direction of the committee having possession of the same, be properly referred in the manner originally presented; and an erroneous reference of a petition or private bill under this clause shall not confer jurisdiction upon the committee to consider or report the same.

The Chair is of opinion that this was not an erroneous reference, but a proper reference. If it had been an erroneous reference it would have been the duty of the Committee on Indian Affairs to report it back and cause a proper reference to be made. But in the first instance the Chair held that the memorial was properly sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PEEL. I ask unanimous consent to correct the footings of the bill.

Mr. BAYNE. Those are not a part of the bill. I desire to offer an additional section.

Mr. OATES. I desire to offer an amendment to the pending section.

Mr. HOOKER. So do I.

Mr. OATES. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HOOKER. I will state that this amendment is offered with the assent of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the number of the section has been changed; it is now No. 9.

The amendment offered by Mr. HOOKER was read, as follows:

Add the following proviso to section 9:

"And provided further, That one-fourth of the amount hereby appropriated shall be retained in the Treasury until the amount due to the Choctaws in the State of Mississippi shall be fully satisfied and paid as provided in the treaty concluded with the Choctaws and Chickasaws on the 22d of June, 1855, and the amount due said Mississippi Choctaws shall be paid to them, or to their agents or attorneys authorized to receive the same.

"And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to ascertain the names and numbers of the Choctaws in Mississippi and their heirs who are entitled pro rata to a part of this judgment; and the expenses of making this enumeration and report to the Secretary of the Interior shall be paid out of the judgment rendered in favor of the Choctaw Nation against the United States."

Mr. PEEL. That amendment is perfectly proper. It has been agreed upon in consultation with the delegation from the Choctaw Nation, and is assented to by them.

Mr. HOOKER. By the terms of the treaty the Choctaw Nation is bound to pay the Choctaws in Mississippi. This amendment simply provides that one-fourth of the amount shall be retained in order to make that payment.

The question being taken on agreeing to Mr. HOOKER'S amendment, the Chairman stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HOOKER. I think if it were generally understood that the chairman of the committee makes no opposition to this amendment there would be no objection to it.

Mr. CANNON. Why not let the Secretary of the Treasury or the proper officers of the Government pay this money to those to whom it properly belongs?

Mr. HOOKER. It would go to the authorities of the Choctaw Nation. You will observe by this petition which the Choctaw Nation filed they themselves admit that they have agreed to pay a large proportion of the money out of the proceeds of this judgment to the Choctaws in Mississippi, who number two or three thousand. The object is to provide that a certain portion of this money shall be retained until the Choctaw Nation, which is entitled to the whole, shall pay the proper proportion to the Choctaws in Mississippi.

Mr. CANNON. But without full information we are asked to say in a few minutes' time what shall be done with this money. The Choctaw Nation has certain rights. They were plaintiffs in the action. Judgment was rendered. And if there is a conflict about to whom this money should go, it ought to be determined by proper authorities after full investigation. I have not the proper knowledge, for one, to enable me to say the Choctaws of Mississippi or anywhere else are entitled to this as against the Choctaws of the Indian Territory. For anything we know we may, by agreeing to this amendment, be giving a gratuity to these people, and Congress may hereafter be called upon to pay the full judgment to the parties in whose favor it was rendered. If these parties have legal rights let them be established, and let them receive what is due them under the law from the proper authorities.

Mr. HOOKER. In answer to what has fallen from the gentleman from Illinois, I will say there is no contest between these Choctaws and the Choctaw Nation, as a nation, in whose behalf this judgment is rendered by the Court of Claims. There is no doubt a certain amount is due to the Choctaws of Mississippi; and, as I have stated in this very petition, they mention that fact. What this amendment proposes is to reserve such portions of the judgment as shall satisfy that claim to be turned over to the Treasury, and that it shall remain there until the Choctaw Nation shall have paid the proportion due to the Choctaws in Mississippi.

Mr. CANNON. Did the Choctaws in Mississippi have any legal standing in court? Were they parties to the suit?

Mr. HOOKER. They had not. But this is done with the consent of the representatives of the Choctaw Nation. There will be no portion paid to the Choctaws of Mississippi if it is not shown under the terms of the treaty of 1830 that they are entitled to a part of it.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask the gentleman from Mississippi if he ever knew of an interpleader having been filed for a portion of a fund after a final judgment had been rendered?

Mr. HOOKER. I see no reason why, when you are appropriating money to pay this judgment, you should not provide for paying a portion of it to the parties who are entitled to it. The representatives of the Choctaw Nation asked you to make this provision, conceding that a certain amount is due to the Choctaws in Mississippi; and in order to accomplish that object it is proposed that one-fourth of the amount shall remain in the Treasury until that is paid.

Mr. ROGERS. I would like to have the attention of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] for a moment, and the attention of the House. The first proviso in this amendment I see no objection to, but the second one proceeds, I think, upon the wrong principle. By turning to the memorial of the Choctaw Nation it will be found that the ascertained amount of the claims due the Choctaws aggregates a sum in excess of this judgment, and at last there can only be a pro rata distribution of this fund among the different Choctaws in the Choctaw Nation and in the State of Mississippi. Now, as a safeguard designed to make the Mississippi Choctaws feel easy and quiet about the matter, there is no sort of objection to allowing one-fourth of this sum to remain in the Treasury until the Choctaw Nation, in pursuance of the terms of the treaty, shall have ascertained all these claims, so that the money may be distributed pro rata among the different claimants under the act. But the second proviso is that—

The Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to ascertain the names and the number of the Choctaws in Mississippi and their heirs who are entitled to their pro rata part of the judgment, and the expense of making the enumeration and reporting to the Secretary of the Interior shall be paid out of the judgment rendered in favor of the Choctaw Nation.

Now, suppose this is not sufficient to pay the Choctaws in Mississippi and in the Indian nation all their claims?

Mr. HOOKER. The expression "pro rata" is used—"who are entitled to their pro rata part of the judgment."

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman is correct. I see I am wrong about that. But this additional point remains: By the terms of the treaty the distribution of this money is left to the Choctaw Nation to settle it in their own way; but by this amendment you propose, instead, that the money shall be turned over to the Secretary of the Interior, there to remain, God only knows how long, if we are to wait until we get the decision of the Choctaw Nation as to all these claims.

Mr. HOOKER. Well, come to something practical. What do you want struck out?

Mr. ROGERS. Simply the second proviso. The other is all right.

Mr. HOOKER. You admit that the second proviso is right down to where it speaks of their pro rata share?

Mr. ROGERS. No, I do not admit that. I do not think that the Secretary of the Interior should be called upon to do this work. He has no machinery for ascertaining the names and numbers of these people, or anything of that sort.

Mr. HOOKER. It would be very easy to appoint an agent for that purpose.

Mr. ROGERS. But that has got to be paid for out of the money of these people. Now, why not let them control their own matters in their own way, and not require the Secretary of the Interior to incur additional expense? If you carry out this proposition, you will have the Choctaw commission or court undertaking to settle these claims down in the Indian country, while the Secretary of the Interior will be trying to settle them in Mississippi; you will have two courts undertaking to do the same work at the same time.

Mr. HOOKER. You make no objection to the first proviso, which proposes to retain one-quarter of the amount?

Mr. ROGERS. There is no objection to that.

Mr. HOOKER. Very well; let the other be struck out.

Mr. ROGERS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the second proviso, leaving the first to stand.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] can modify his amendment in any way he pleases.

Mr. HOOKER. I accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], to strike out the second proviso, leaving the first to stand.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read as it is proposed to be modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That one-fourth of the amount hereby appropriated shall be retained in the Treasury until the amount due to the Choctaws in the State of Mississippi shall be fully satisfied and paid, as provided in the treaty concluded with the Choctaws and Chickasaws on the 22d of June, 1855, and the amount due said Mississippi Choctaws shall be paid to them or to their agents or attorneys authorized to receive the same.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I see two objections to that amendment. The first is that it proposes to disturb the purpose of this judgment as provided by the bill, and the second is that this payment is provided to be made to these Indians or "their agents or attorneys." A week or two ago a great howl went up from this Hall against attorneys receiving any portion of any money paid out from the United States Treasury, and allegations were made, extravagant in a great many instances and untrue in others, as to the amount thus to be paid. A week or two ago a committee with which I am connected had a bill here for the repayment to workingmen in this country of a certain amount of money which they claim belongs to them under the eight-hour law, and in that case the objection was made that the money should not be paid to the attorneys of those workingmen.

Now, sir, I fail to see wherein a Mississippi Choctaw is any better than a sovereign State of this Union, or than a workingman of this country. [Laughter.] And I fail to see wherein an attorney or agent living in the State of Mississippi is any more entitled to share in this money than any other agent is entitled to share in any other money paid out of the Treasury. I object to the amendment for that reason also.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing to change the phraseology to which the gentleman objects. I do not know a single one of the attorneys of these Indians. The Indians are few in number and scattered over the State. They have never been congregated together; they have no agent; they have nobody to take their enumeration.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Neither did we know of any attorneys for the workingmen; but they were conjured up by the vivid imaginations of members upon this floor. My further objection to this amendment is that it provides only for the payment to the Choctaws in Mississippi.

Now, I am informed that there are Choctaws in other States as well as in Mississippi, and unless there is to be a fair divide all round, let us follow up the judgment of the court and pay those who were parties in the court.

Mr. HOOKER. The judgment of the court is in favor of the Choctaw Nation. A portion of the Choctaw Nation was left in Mississippi when the tribe moved West. These Choctaws of Mississippi are interested in that judgment, and the object of the proviso is simply to secure to them the pro rata portion to which they are entitled. It may be much or it may be little. These Choctaws of Mississippi are few in number in comparison with the great aggregate of the nation on the other side of the Mississippi.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, this seems to me an extraordinary proceeding. A judgment has been obtained, and the parties who obtained that judgment are entitled to this money. If Congress makes an appropriation the duty devolves upon the Treasury Department to pay the money to the proper parties, the plaintiffs in this judgment. The judgment has been obtained; and because judgment was obtained this appropriation is to be made. But now by a proviso to the appropriation it is proposed to divert a part of the judgment away from the plaintiffs probably——

Mr. HOOKER. Oh, no.

Mr. BAYNE. Well, we can not tell. If these parties are the plaintiffs in the case, they will get the money; if not, they should not have it. The record must be kept straight and clear, and it will not be kept straight and clear unless this money is paid to the plaintiffs. If there is any difficulty in the way, the auditing officers of the Treasury Department can attend to this whole matter; that is a part of their official duty. They will see that this money goes to the proper plaintiffs, and that is what we want done.

Mr. RYAN. If a part of this money should be paid to somebody else would not the Government be still liable to the Choctaws for the balance?

Mr. BAYNE. Certainly. If we pay a portion of this money to the Choctaws of Mississippi, or any other particular State, we may make a misappropriation; for technically they may not be entitled to it, and thus we may be obliged to reappropriate in order to meet the judgment of the legitimate plaintiffs. This mode of proceeding is not the way to do business; it is irregular all the way through.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I rise to a parliamentary question. Although now too late in point of time, would not a point of order have been good against this proposition of the gentleman from Mississippi upon the ground that it is new legislation?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order not having been made in proper time, the Chair will not entertain it now. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HOOKER. I wish to say, in answer to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN], that the section making provision for this payment to the Choctaw Nation would be subject to the same objection which he makes to my proviso. I read from the section:

And said sum, together with the interest thereon, shall be paid from time to time, and in such sums as requisition therefor shall be made, to the national treasurer of the Choctaw Nation, or to such agent, or other person, as shall be named in the requisition or requisitions therefor.

I repeat that the objection of the gentleman from New Jersey would be just as tenable to the whole section as to my amendment. This money is to be paid on regular requisition of the duly authorized agent of the Choctaw Nation.

Mr. RYAN. But the Choctaw Nation itself is the plaintiff.

Mr. HOOKER. I know it. But it is simply proposed that, inasmuch as the Choctaws of Mississippi are a part of the Choctaw Nation, provision be made that they receive their pro rata share. This proviso is offered now without objection on the part of the committee or on the part of the Choctaws. They have themselves provided that this fund be retained in the Treasury, and only be paid out as they order. They agree that it be dedicated in the first place to the payment of all individual debts which they owe. I can not see any reason why the proviso should not be adopted.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand my friend from Mississippi to say that the money to pay this judgment goes into the Treasury, and is paid out under orders of the Choctaw Nation. I wish to know whether, under this provision, the Secretary of the Interior will exercise the power usually exercised by him in the adjustment of claims against Indian funds, especially for attorneys' fees.

Mr. HOOKER. I do not know anything about the attorneys or the amount of their fees.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am not raising any question as to the amount at all.

Mr. PEEL. I think I can answer the question of the gentleman from Georgia. The money is to be paid out of the Treasury by order of the Choctaw Nation.

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend from Arkansas says that the money may be taken out of the Treasury by order of the Choctaw Nation. If that be true, all supervisory power by the Secretary of the Interior is negatived. This is contrary to the policy which has heretofore obtained in reference to such matters. It has been the custom to endow the Secretary of the Interior with authority to guard against the payment of Indian funds upon improper contracts. I trust that my friend from Mississippi will see fit to modify his proposition so as to subject the payment of this fund to the usual rules providing for supervision by the Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. HOOKER's amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to have a vote on section 9 of the bill, covering a payment of this Choctaw claim.

The CHAIRMAN. That can only be done by moving to strike out the section. Does the gentleman make that motion?

Mr. RANDALL. I do.

Mr. OATES. I move an amendment to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. That will take precedence of the motion to strike out, and the gentleman will send his amendment up to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. OATES. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the money so appropriated shall be paid out upon the requisition of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall first ascertain what sums, if any, are due from said Choctaw Nation for services of its attorneys and agents engaged in the prosecution of said claim, and for that purpose the said Secretary shall hear, determine, award, and pay the sum out of said money so appropriated: Provided also, That in making such awards said Secretary shall consider the actual services rendered and expenses actually and necessarily incurred in and about the prosecution of said claim at any period or phase of its prosecution and the value of such services, and he shall also consider any and all contracts or agreements made in relation to such services by said Choctaw Nation or under its authority. But no award shall be made except for services actually rendered and expenses incurred by authority of said Choctaw Nation or its delegate or delegates duly authorized.

Mr. PEEL. I make the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. PEEL. I make the point of order that this is an attempt to legislate in regard to parties who are not parties to the suit which was decided by the Supreme Court. It is an attempt to allow those parties to litigate their claims for alleged services. We do not know who these parties are. We do not know just exactly what claims they propose to make. The section appropriates a sum sufficient to carry out the judgment of the Supreme Court. That is all we have to consider in this matter, and I make the point of order that these private claims are not in order as an amendment to this bill.

I desire to say further, Mr. Chairman, that this matter has been in litigation for a long time. Most of the contracts to which reference has been made were with Colonel Pitchlyn, who has been dead for many years. I make the point against this amendment, and believe it should not be allowed to be submitted on this bill.

Mr. LONG. I make the point of order against the amendment, Mr. Chairman, that it is not germane to the bill and ought to be ruled out.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] desire to be heard on his point of order?

Mr. OATES. I do.

Mr. PEEL. I have a letter from the Choctaw delegates in this city in reference to this matter, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No. 516 THIRTEENTH STREET, NORTHWEST,
Washington, D. C., March 20, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Since you reported in the Indian appropriation bill a provision for the payment of the Choctaw judgment we have been threatened with the defeat of that provision unless we agree to pay exorbitant demands for services, or pretended services, to the Choctaws which were never rendered by the persons making such threats.

Similar threats were made immediately after the rendition of the judgment in November, 1886. The Senate Committee on Indian Affairs of the Forty-ninth Congress investigated such claims last winter, and the result of that investigation was that the Senate put into the deficiency bill which failed to pass at the last session of Congress a provision requiring the money due on said judgment to be paid directly to the treasury of the Choctaw Nation. Since that time the general council of the Choctaw Nation has requested that the money be held in the Treasury subject to its requisition, in accordance with the treaty of 1855.

For many years past the Choctaws have had in this matter the services of able and distinguished attorneys, whose services they recognize as valuable, and for which they propose to pay a just and reasonable compensation.

We take the liberty of writing you on this subject, in order that you may be apprised of the source and motive which may inspire any attacks that may be made on the above provision of the Indian appropriation bill.

We have the honor to be, respectfully,

C. LEFLORE,
E. McCURTAIN,
Choctaw Delegates.

Hon. S. W. PEEL,
House of Representatives, United States Capitol.

Mr. PEEL. I do not want to be put in the attitude, Mr. Chairman, of making any reflection against the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES], who submitted the amendment. I have no doubt his purpose in offering the amendment was perfectly lawful and proper. I wish to say further that I do not know a single attorney in this case. I knew nothing of this matter until recently. I do think the judgment ought to be paid to the Choctaw Nation as the treaty requires it should be. If they do not pay a cent to a single lawyer it is none of our business.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question just here for information. With many of the tribes I know the Interior Department has exercised a revisory power, but I have understood that this did not apply to the Choctaws and Cherokees with reference to contracts.

Mr. PEEL. I will yield to my colleague to answer the question.

Mr. ROGERS. I think possibly I may be able to answer the question better than my colleague, for the reason that I have given to this matter some careful investigation.

By the act of 1871 it will be found, if the gentleman examines it, that supervisory control is given to the Secretary of the Interior over contracts subsequently made either by an individual Indian or by an Indian tribe with reference to the prosecution of claims or suits here before Congress. This contract of the attorneys made by the delegates in pursuance of acts of the legislative council of the Choctaw Indians being prior to 1871 is not covered by it, and the statute does not apply.

But there is, however, a matter applying to it, which will be found in volume 18 of the Statutes at Large——

Mr. BLOUNT. Before the gentleman passes away from this provision I wish to ask him a question. Does he refer now to the act of 1872?

Mr. ROGERS. No; to the act of 1871.

Mr. BLOUNT. And prior to that act there was no supervision?

Mr. ROGERS. So far as I know all of the attorneys, indeed, I think I may speak authoritatively when I say all of the attorneys in this case, were employed prior to the date of that act, and hence it does not apply to them.

Mr. BLOUNT. Do I understand the gentleman to say that prior to that act these Indians were allowed to make contracts as they pleased?

Mr. ROGERS. Oh, yes; without any limitation, as far as I have been able to discover. I know of none, and have been able to find none, after a careful examination of the matter, and particularly did this apply to the five tribes.

Now I wish to call the attention of the gentleman and of the committee to the action taken on this subject in the Forty-third Congress, in which a provision was made and placed upon an Indian appropriation bill, requiring the money which was appropriated for educational purposes to be kept in the Treasury for the benefit of certain of these Indians in St. Louis. That act provided:

And the United States assistant treasurer at St. Louis, Mo., be, and he is hereby, authorized to open and keep accounts with the duly constituted authorities of the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, and Chickasaw Nations of Indians, the same as with the Government agents and disbursing officers.

This was done to allow the people to avoid being fleeced by such claims. I say that was the object. I do not know it to be so, but that is the inference.

Now, in the Senate last year, while the Indian appropriation bill was under consideration, the subcommittee, consisting of Mr. DAWES, Mr. INGALLS, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas, made a complete and thorough investigation into this whole subject; and notice was given to everybody of this class who had or claimed to have demands of this character upon the Cherokee funds, to come forward and present them. I have now on my desk a pamphlet containing the testimony, and a thorough examination of it, and after all were heard, they incorporated a provision in the appropriation bill in the following terms:

For the payment to the Choctaw Nation, $2,858,798.62, the same being the amount of the judgment in favor of the said Choctaw Nation, rendered on appeal by the Supreme Court of the United States at the October term of said court in the year 1886; and that said sum shall be paid over directly to the treasurer of the Choctaw Nation.

Now, I am authoritatively informed that those members of the bar who presented the claim of the Choctaws in this case were men of reputation, legitimate attorneys, long connected with the case, and every single, solitary one of them consents to deal now as they did in the beginning, with the Choctaw people themselves.

There is no disposition at all to make any other claim. Their names are Shellabarger & Wilson, no doubt well known to the most of the members on the floor; McKee & Luce, Denver & Pike; Judge Cuppy, no doubt some of you gentlemen know him well, I only know him by reputation; Mr. Weed, whom I do not know either; the heirs of Peter Pytchlyn, and the Choctaw delegates, and Matt Carpenter. These names, it will be seen, Mr. Chairman, are, with one or two exceptions, mostly men of prominence and national reputation in their professions; and these are the men who contracted with the Choctaw Nation, when they had the right to contract, before 1871, to carry on their claim against the Government, and the Choctaw people, trusting to their integrity in the settlement of their claims with them.

The Choctaws committed their case entirely to their hands, and this provision was put upon the Indian appropriation bill by the Senate last year, after a thorough, full, and complete investigation of the entire case, the Choctaw council in their memorial, and I think wisely, acting upon the advice of Messrs. Shellabarger & Wilson, saw fit to ask Congress not to put the money in St. Louis, because they did not want to have people who might possibly allege claims against the fund to follow it there and to get them into litigation and have their money tied up; but they came and asked Congress to put the money directly into the Treasury of the United States, and hold it there in trust for them, subject to their order. I have in my hand the petition which they have made in respect to this fund, and I ask gentlemen to notice the action of the council of the Choctaw Nation in this regard. This is their enactment:

Be it further enacted——

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. What section are you reading?

Mr. ROGERS. This is the act of the Choctaw Council in which it requested the United States to appropriate the full amount of the judgment in this case, to be paid over on requisition of the Council of the nation.

Second. Be it further enacted, That the Congress of the United States is hereby requested to appropriate the full amount of the said judgment, and interest thereon from the date of the rendition thereof, as and for a permanent and continuing appropriation, not subject to lapse or to be covered into the Treasury of the United States; the same to be paid over, from time to time, and in such sums and at such places as may be required, directly to the national treasurer of the Choctaw Nation, or to such agent or other person as shall be named in the requisition of the proper authorities of the Choctaw Nation; and the proper authorities of the Choctaw Nation, for the purpose of making such requisition or requisitions, is hereby declared to be the General Council of the Choctaw Nation, or such officer or other person as shall be designated and authorized by an act or resolution of the said General Council for that purpose; and such requisition or requisitions, when made, shall be taken and accepted as, and is, and are, hereby declared to be, the requisition of the proper authorities of the tribe, provided for by Article XII of the treaty of 1855.

Now, there are reasons for paying this to other persons than the Council or treasurer. The Choctaw Nation have to settle with all these people in Mississippi. They can come here by an authorized agent, who can by a Treasury draft or otherwise transmit these funds to them. Then the Choctaw treasurer only gives a bond of $20,000, and under those circumstances it would not be right to place this large sum, amounting to over $2,000,000, in the hands of the treasurer. So they say the Choctaw Council must draw the money itself through some person they have authorized by act of Council.

Now, after these persons have had adjudicated the amount under the treaty which provided it should be paid to them, I say we should pay it to them, and not let it be, as a gentleman said in language more expressive than elegant, a "licklog" for those who may choose to fleece these people.

Mr. OATES. I think I may as well claim judgment by waiver on the two gentlemen from Arkansas. The chairman of the committee made the point of order and proceeded to argue the amendment on its merits. His colleague followed suit. I think there should be some such thing as a waiver of a point of order when gentlemen proceed to discuss the amendment on its merits. If the amendment is to be disposed of on the point of order, it is not necessary to go into the merits.

With reference to the point of order, I think it is not well taken, because the amendment relates only to the distribution of an appropriation which the bill has made. Therefore it is certainly relevant to it and in order; and if it is in order, the amendment offered by my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] was in order.

I will not proceed to argue the merits till the Chair decides the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide. If the amendment simply directed the manner in which the appropriation should be paid, and to whom, that would be a limitation which would be in order under the rule. But it includes a new tribunal to whom shall be referred the claims of some persons not named; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to hear, determine, award, and pay the sums found due to such persons. It seems to the Chair that this is new legislation, and that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to strike out section 9.

The question being taken on the motion to strike out, the Chairman stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 75.

Mr. RANDALL. That is not a quorum, and this is a large sum of money. I do not wish to retard this bill. If the gentleman from Arkansas will allow a vote on the same proposition in the House by a yea-and-nay vote, I will not insist on the point of no quorum.

Mr. PERKINS. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] has an amendment which he desires to offer.

Mr. REED. I think we had better rise.

Mr. PEEL. I have no objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

The CHAIRMAN. It is competent for the gentleman from Arkansas, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, when the bill is in the House, to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania or any other gentleman to move an amendment.

Mr. PEEL. I understand the proposition is, that a vote is to be taken in the House on a motion to strike out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. And the Chair understands the gentleman from Arkansas will yield for that amendment to be offered.

Mr. RANDALL. And to be voted upon by a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. RYAN. You will be entitled to it, if the House lets you have it.

The CHAIRMAN. If one-fifth of those present order the yeas and nays. The point of no quorum having been withdrawn, the noes have it, and the motion to strike out is disagreed to.

Mr. BAYNE. I offer the following amendment as a new section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That day or industrial schools sustained wholly or in part by appropriations contained in this act, and at which schools church organizations are assisting in the educational work, the Christian Bible may be taught in the native language of the Indians if, in the judgment of the persons in charge of the schools, it shall be deemed conducive to the moral welfare and instruction of the pupils in such schools.

Mr. PEEL. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. PEEL. That it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BAYNE. I do for a moment. I can not see that this is new legislation in any sense of the word. It is simply a limitation on the appropriation. It vests discretion in the persons in charge of the schools to permit the Bible to be taught in the native language of the Indians, if in the judgment of those persons it shall be considered conducive to the moral welfare and instruction of the Indians.

It is not new legislation in any sense. It does not change existing law in any sense. It simply gives permission to those in charge to have this thing done if in their judgment it is advantageous to have it done.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that it is competent for the House to determine in this bill what branches of instruction shall be taught in the school the support of which is provided. The bill provides for teaching agriculture, and might provide that those in charge may teach the Bible. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. BAYNE. I want to say only a word. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania which edition of the Bible is meant, whether the King James version or the Douay version?

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. The Christian Bible.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, this House and the Christian people of the country will get into trouble about this matter unless it is clearly defined whether we mean the version of the Roman Catholics, who have many schools and missionaries among the Indians, or the King James version.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. There will be no trouble about that. The Catholics in their schools will read their Bible, because they believe it to be the Christian Bible. That is all right. The Protestants read the version that we use, because they believe it to be the Christian Bible. That is all right. The word "Christian" is comprehensive. To the Catholic the Christian Bible is his Bible. To the Protestant the Christian Bible is the Protestant Bible. What we want permitted is the reading of the Bible by the Indians in their vernacular, which has been forbidden by the Government of the United States.

A MEMBER. Not by the Government.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Well, by one of its officers.

Mr. DORSEY. By the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. We simply want to let the Indian hear the Bible read, or read it if he can, in a tongue that he can understand.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I submit a statement of the amount appropriated in this bill compared with that of last year:

There was appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, $5,334,397.66, and there is appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, $5,489,253.74. This is exclusive of the amount required to pay the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States in favor of the Choctaw Nation, amounting to $2,858,798.62.

On motion of Mr. PEEL, by unanimous consent, the Clerk was instructed to correct the footings of the bill in accordance with the action of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PEEL. I move that the committee now rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that they had had under consideration the Indian appropriation bill, and had instructed him to report it back with sundry amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote desired upon any of the amendments?

Mr. RANDALL. I want to make a motion to strike out the ninth section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Chair will submit the question upon agreeing to all the amendments agreed to in Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move to strike out the last section of the bill.

Mr. PEEL. A great many members were not present, and they will not understand what the motion proposes to strike out.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want to go on to-night. I only want to have the motion pending.

Mr. SPRINGER. I suggest that the gentleman can test the sense of the House on a motion to recommit with instructions to strike out this section. That motion can be made after the previous question is ordered on the passage of the bill, and if the previous question is ordered on the passage, it will be the first thing in order in the morning.

Mr. RANDALL. Either way is satisfactory to me.

Mr. RYAN. I prefer the course suggested in Committee of the Whole, that the gentleman in charge of the bill now call the previous question on the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (interposing). The Chair will suggest that the purpose in view can be accomplished by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] submitting his motion to strike out, and then the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] demanding the previous question upon the amendments and upon the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the suggestion I made a few moments ago.

Mr. DUNN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the previous question is now ordered on the pending amendment and the bill, will there be any opportunity for debate in the House before the vote is taken?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the previous question is ordered there will be no debate.

Mr. DUNN. As I understand, the chairman of the committee desires that there shall be a reservation of twenty or thirty minutes for debate, so that the proposition to strike out this provision may be explained to the House and the objections to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is well understood.

Mr. RANDALL. Everybody understands that to strike out means not to pay that judgment to the Choctaw Nation.

Mr. DUNN. I ask unanimous consent that fifteen minutes be allowed for debate in the House upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. My object is to let those gentlemen who do understand the question and who are opposed to the payment have an opportunity to record themselves.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

The CLERK. The amendment is to strike out section 9 of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] demands the previous question upon the amendment and upon the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the previous question is ordered and the House adjourns, would that bring this up the first thing to-morrow?

Mr. CANNON. Not unless it is ordered on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understands, if the previous question is ordered on the passage of the bill.

By unanimous consent the previous question was ordered upon the engrossment and third reading and upon the passage of the bill.

OMAHA INDIANS IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. DORSEY. I ask unanimous consent that the House take up and put on its passage the bill (S. 2267) for the relief of the Omaha tribe of Indians in Nebraska, to extend time of payment to purchasers of land of said Indians, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, this is too important a bill to be passed in this way.

Mr. DORSEY. If the gentleman will withhold his objection a moment until the bill is read, I can explain the measure to the satisfaction of the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think the bill is of too much importance to be passed under the present circumstances.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

Mr. OATES. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. MCRAE. I would like to have that bill considered now, if there is no objection.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, the right to object being reserved.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. CRISP (interrupting the Clerk). I desire to suggest that this bill is entirely free from objection; it contains all the provisions that the Committee on Commerce place in bills of this character. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There being no objection, the further reading was dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana, called for the regular order, but subsequently withdrew the call, when, there being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCRAE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BAKER, of New York, for three days, on account of important business;

To Mr. RUSK, until the 24th instant, on account of important business.

To Mr. BOWEN, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. JOHN R. BROWN, for ten days, on account of important business.

NAVIGATION OF ILLINOIS RIVER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 2085) to provide for protecting the navigation of the Illinois River, by extending the system of beacon-lights to said river; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill.

The bill was read.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EDWARD FITZGERALD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 316) for the relief of Edward Fitzgerald; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill just laid before the House be at once taken up for consideration. I will state that a bill of precisely the same character and identical in language has been favorably reported from the House committee.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the report had better be read.

Mr. ROGERS. I send up and ask to have read the report accompanying the House bill.

The report (by Mr. STONE, of Kentucky) was read, as follows:

This claim is for the value of a large quantity of wood and timber alleged to have been taken by the Federal troops at different times between the years 1863 and 1865 from the land of the Catholic Church near Fort Smith, Ark., and used for the construction of fortifications, building quarters for the soldiers, and for fire-wood.

The claimant is bishop of Little Rock, trustee of the Catholic Church in Arkansas, and as such is trustee of the property, and it is as such trustee that this claim is made.

The claim was presented in due time to the Southern Claims Commission, and under the rules of that commission proof was taken, which has been examined by the committee, who find it clearly established that a large quantity of timber and wood was taken and used by the Army, as claimed.

The Southern Claims Commission rejected this claim without any examination or hearing on the merits, because the commission held that it had no jurisdiction of corporations.

Your committee think that the claimant should be heard.

They therefore report a substitute for the bill, and recommend that it pass.

Mr. KERR. I demand the regular order.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest that this only proposes to send this bill to the auditing officers of the Government for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of the claim, and does not propose to make an appropriation? After the matter has been determined and audited by the officers of the Department it is to be reported back to Congress, when it will come up for consideration on its merits. It only asks that this claimant shall have a right to be heard.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. What disposition is proposed to be made of the bill?

Mr. ROGERS. I ask unanimous consent to consider the Senate bill now which proposes to send this claim to the Quartermaster's Department to be audited, after a finding of the facts. It then comes back to Congress for consideration upon its merits.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I demand the regular order on this class of bills.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1044) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to state and settle the account of James L. Wilbur with the United States, and to pay said Wilbur such sum of money as may be due him thereon; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back the bill H. R. 6894, the Military Academy appropriation bill, with the Senate amendments, and to move concurrence in the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The amendments of the Senate will be read.

The amendments were read at length.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. These amendments are merely of a clerical nature; they neither reduce nor increase the amount of the appropriation, and the committee unanimously recommend concurrence in them.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Smith; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, when I demanded the regular order my objection was simply to the consideration of the bill called up by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS], because it had an adverse report from the Southern Claims Commission. I did not insist upon the regular order for any other reason.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa withdraws his demand for the regular order, but objects to the consideration of the bill called up by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ROGERS. What is the statement of the gentleman from Iowa?

The SPEAKER. That he withdraws the demand for the regular order, but objects to the consideration of the bill called up by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ROGERS. I think we had better have the regular order.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. This being Friday the regular order is the call of committees for reports on bills of a private nature. But before that is done the Chair is advised that the previous question was ordered on the Indian appropriation bill on yesterday afternoon, and under the practice of the House the vote will be first taken upon that.

The first question is on agreeing to the amendment to strike out the ninth section.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, it was agreed in the House on yesterday that pending the consideration of this bill in the House, fifteen minutes should be allowed on each side to discuss that amendment. In order that all may understand what the amendment is, and in order that the House may be able to act intelligently upon the question presented, I ask for the reading of so much of the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which reported the bill, as I have marked, and which relates exclusively to this branch of the subject. Before that is read I shall be glad to have the amendment stated so that the House may understand it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to strike out section 9 of the bill providing for the payment of the award by the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court to the Choctaw Nation of Indians.

The Clerk had better read the section again which is proposed to be stricken out.

The section was again read.

Mr. PEEL. I ask for the reading of that part of the report accompanying the bill which I have marked. It explains the whole matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

The eighth section of the bill appropriates $2,858,798.62, with the interest due thereon, to pay the judgment rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States in favor of the Choctaw Nation of Indians. This large sum draws interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum until paid, and therefore increases the liability of the Government more than $140,000 per annum.

Congress has no power under the Constitution to review or revise the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States; neither can its decisions be rendered nugatory by the action or non-action of any other department of the Government. To attempt to do so would be revolutionory; to do so would be an end to government. Duty to the Constitution as well as to sound economic principles of public policy requires that the interest on this judgment be stopped by paying the principal. Therefore your committee report the eighth section, providing for its payment.

Mr. PEEL. What is spoken of there as the eighth section is now the ninth section of the bill. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. BLOUNT. I simply desire to state, Mr. Speaker, that the section having been ruled by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole as in order in this bill, and as the object of the section is to pay a judgment, I have felt it my duty to oppose the motion to strike out.

Mr. PEEL. I have no other statement to make, and call for a vote, unless any gentleman desires to make a statement on the other side. I believe no one wants to discuss the question further. Every one understands it.

Mr. HOOKER. Let the question be stated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has caused to be read the section which it is proposed to strike out. It is that part of the bill which provides for the payment of a judgment to the Choctaw Indians. The question is on striking out the ninth section.

The motion to strike out was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to know if the amendment I offered yesterday is correctly reported in the RECORD. If it is, there is an error in it.

The Clerk read the amendment offered by Mr. PERKINS, as follows:

After line 1101, add the following: "For the support of education of Indian pupils of both sexes at day and industrial schools in Alaska, $20,000. This to be expended under the supervision and control of the Bureau of Education."

Mr. PERKINS. That is correct. As published in the RECORD, the words "in Alaska" are omitted. I did not know but that in drawing the amendment the omission occurred.

The SPEAKER. Is the word "of" correct? Instead of "support of education," should it not be "support and education?"

Mr. PERKINS. That would be better. I ask unanimous consent to have that change made.

There was no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PEEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees for reports.

Mr. ROGERS. A moment ago I objected to the consideration of a bill called up by my friend from Nebraska [Mr. DORSEY]. I withdraw my objection that that bill may be considered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 2267) for the relief of the Omaha tribe of Indians in Nebraska, to extend the time of payment to purchasers of land of said Indians, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object to the consideration of the bill at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] moves to dispense with the call of committees for reports. That requires a two-thirds vote.

The motion was agreed to (two-thirds voting therefor).

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports to present, authorized by committees, have leave to file them at the Clerk's desk.

There was no objection.

EVENING SESSIONS FOR PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, before making the usual motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business upon the Private Calendar, I desire to ask unanimous consent of the House for the present consideration of a resolution which I will send to the Clerk's desk, the object of which is to set apart three evening sessions for the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar. The situation is this: There are one hundred and forty-two bills reported from the Committee on Claims upon the Private Calendar. Most of them are in my judgment meritorious and ought to be passed, and I think there are very few of them that will provoke any serious antagonism. As gentlemen of the House well know, heretofore the time set apart for the consideration of private business has been in the main absorbed by the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on War Claims involving reports from the Court of Claims, and unless some arrangement like that contemplated in this resolution can be made, I see no prospect of obtaining consideration of the bills reported from the Committee on Claims. At the evening sessions we are usually able to accomplish much more in the way of the dispatch of business than at the regular Friday sessions. I now send the resolution to the Clerk's desk and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have a right to object after the resolution is read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on Wednesday, the 25th of April, and on the first and second Wednesdays in May following, the House will take a recess at 5 o'clock p. m. until 7.30 o'clock p. m.; the evening sessions not to hold later than 11 o'clock p. m., and to be devoted exclusively to the consideration of private bills reported from the Committee on Claims, in such order as the said committee may designate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that we are very far behind with the appropriation bills and that we have an important tariff measure under consideration, I must insist that that resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. LANHAM. The appropriation bills will not be considered at evening sessions.

Mr. McMILLIN. There are a number of them that ought to be considered at evening sessions.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] willing to say that in case this order which he proposes is made by the House he will be willing to give up the Friday sessions?

Mr. LANHAM. There are other committees than the Committee on Claims interested in the Friday sessions for private business, and, of course, I can not undertake to make any agreement of that sort.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman ought to include in his resolution business from the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, in view of the objections made, I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. KELLEY, by unanimous consent, obtained indefinite leave of absence on account of sickness.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7844) to fix the salary and fees of the clerk of the circuit and district courts at Paducah, Ky., and it was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] is voted down, will it be permissible to go on with the general business of the House?

The SPEAKER. The rule provides that in case the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on Friday for the consideration of private business is not agreed to by the House, public business shall proceed as on other days.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Then would it be permissible for me to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, announcing my purpose to be to move to take up the river and harbor bill?

The SPEAKER. That motion would be in order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the House shall decide to go into Committee of the Whole, will not the regular order be to take up the regular appropriation bills in their order on the Calendar?

The SPEAKER. Bills will be taken up in the order in which they stand, general appropriation bills, of course, having the preference.

Mr. FORAN. Mr. Speaker, I give notice that if the motion is made which the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] indicates, I will move to take up the pension appropriation bill. It can be disposed of in an hour.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, in the midst of this controversy among gentlemen who represent such important bills, I think it would be well for the House to give this day to the consideration of private bills.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. LANHAM that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, and the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 66, nays 90.

Mr. LANHAM. The House having refused to give us evening sessions for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Claims, I wish to test this question further by asking for a yea-and-nay vote.

On ordering the yeas and nays there were—ayes 34, noes 114.

So (one-fifth of those present having voted in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as there is so large a majority against my motion, I will, if there be no objection, withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I object.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered?

The SPEAKER. That can be done.

Mr. LONG. I make that motion.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Unless the demand for the yeas and nays is renewed, the noes have it; and the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar is not agreed to.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, announcing it as my purpose to call up the river and harbor bill.

The motion of Mr. BLANCHARD was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5445) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

Mr. FORAN. Mr. Chairman, we are ready to proceed with the consideration of that bill.

Mr. BLANCHARD. How long will this bill probably take?

Mr. FORAN. I think not more than an hour.

Mr. BLANCHARD. In view of that statement I will not object to the consideration of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. FORAN. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. FORAN. Mr. Chairman, I can, in a very few moments, make all the explanation I think necessary in regard to this bill. The pension appropriation bill of last year appropriated $76,276,500, excluding the appropriation of $6,900,000 which was made for pensions arising out of the Mexican war. The Commissioner of Pensions estimates that of this sum of $6,900,000, $4,395,000 will remain unexpended at the end of the fiscal year; so that the amount expended for pensions during this fiscal year will be $78,772,500.

The present bill appropriates $80,286,500, being an increase of $1,514,000 over the appropriations of last year. This increase is made necessary by the increase in the number of pensioners. The net increase during the year 1887 was 40,224 pensioners; and it is fair to presume that the increase during the year 1888 will be equally large. The Commissioner of Pensions estimates that there will be placed upon the pension-roll during the coming year at least 10,000 pensioners of the Mexican war in addition to those of the late war.

In other respects this bill is substantially the same as the bill of last year. It appropriates for invalid pensions on account of the late war $75,000,000. Some gentlemen may think that the estimate embraced in the Book of Estimates, which simply estimated $75,000,000 for pensions, was somewhat of a mistake or blunder; but I think the trouble arose from the fact that the officers in the Treasury Department did not seem to understand that the balance of the appropriation for pensions of the Mexican war would revert to the Treasury, or be covered into he Trea sury at the end of the fiscal year.

The amount appropriated for clerk-hire last year was $162,000; the estimate this year was $198,000; the amount appropriated is $178,000.

According to the explanation of the Commissioner of Pensions, this large increase is necessary by reason of the large increase in the number of pensioners.

For stationery and other expenses the amount appropriated last year was $12,000; the estimate for the coming year is $20,000; the amount appropriated in this bill is $15,000.

The appropriation for rent remains the same. In the paragraph with respect to rents it is proposed, by amendments made by the committee since the printing of the bill, that the words "where possible," referring to the provision that the Secretary of the Treasury set apart in the public buildings under his control suitable rooms for the pension agencies, be stricken out. It has been reported by the Commissioner of Pensions that the Secretary of the Treasury does not manifest any great desire to provide the pension agencies in the various cities with rooms in the public buildings. Therefore the committee believed it would be wise to strike out these words, thus making it mandatory upon the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish to the pension agencies rooms in the public buildings, thereby doing away with this expenditure of $20,000 for rent.

The Commissioner of Pensions in his report asked for additional agencies. The committee did not think fit to grant that request, and no provision of that kind appears in the bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I know of nothing further which is necessary to be stated in explanation of the bill. How much of my time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to reserve the residue of his time?

Mr. FORAN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has fifty-two minutes remaining.

Mr. FORAN. I yield forty minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I prefer to take the floor in my own right.

Mr. FORAN. All right; then I reserve my time.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a few observations in connection with this bill. One point I think the Administration ought to be informed upon has come to my notice, suggested by the action of this House quite recently; that is, the resolutions and action which took place in regard to the act of March 3, 1881, in reference to

THE PURCHASE OF BONDS.

It will be remembered by the House that this Administration found difficulty in buying bonds and relieving the Treasury of its surplus because the power conferred upon him was found in an appropriation bill. Now I discover in examining the arrears act which passed January 25, 1879, that there was no limitation in that act whatever as to the time when claims should be filed or considered in order to come within its provisions. The only limitation which was ever placed on the arrearages act is found in an appropriation bill which passed on March 3, 1879. It was the act which appropriated the money to meet the requirements of arrearages of pensions amounting to $25,000,000.

Hence we have no law to interfere with the allowance of arrearages of pensions except that which is found in an appropriation bill. And I feel it to be my duty to call the attention of the Administration to this fact, because if he had trouble in buying bonds with the surplus in the Treasury he should have equal difficulty to-day in denying arrearages of pensions. If he could not without expression from the House go into the markets and buy the bonds with the surplus he has no right, this Administration has no right, if it is to be logical and consistent, to withhold arrearages of pensions which are claimed under the act of January 25, 1879. And I appeal to this Administration to be consistent and to come up "like a little man" and allow arrearages of pensions to the boys who filed their claims within the provisions of the act. That certainly should be done, if he is to be consistent, until a declaratory act is passed saying that he may be governed by the provisions of the appropriation bill. The rule that the Administration applied for the benefit of the money-lender should have the same consideration in behalf of the soldiers.

I beg to call attention to another matter. I find that there is a great anxiety on the part of my Democratic brethren not only throughout the country, or I should say in the North, but among our good brethren here in this House, in which they claim to be the special champions of the soldiers. I hate to get into this kind of controversy, but they have forced it upon us. I think my eloquent and great-hearted friend from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY]—I do not see his heart-warming countenance before me just now—made some generous claims on behalf of the Democracy on this floor. Yes, I see him now, and I feel better.

I call his attention, as well as the attention of the House, to a few facts. The claim is being made that the soldier is getting much better recognition from our Democratic friends than they did from the Republicans, and the fact is referred to that so many more claims are allowed under a Democratic administration. Now, let us look at the facts.

It is proper to be considered in this connection, and I am not going to detract from what is being done by the Democratic administration, so far as they do it; but I do not want these wholesale claims to go to the country without an analysis of them. I want to contrast some of the increases and allowances from year to year on the pension-roll.

Let us look at the annual increases in the issuing of certificates of pensions under the two administrations. Here are several of them:

1866	$126,722		1882	$285,697
1865	85,986		1881	268,830
		$40,736			$16,867
1867	153,183		1883	303,658
1866	126,722		1882	285,697
		26,461			17,961
1868	169,643		1884	322,756
1867	153,183		1883	303,658
		16,460			19,098
1869	187,963		1885	345,125
1868	169,643		1884	322,756
		18,320			22,369
1872	232,229		1886	365,783
1871	207,495		1885	345,125
		24,734			20,658
1879	242,755		1887	406,007
1878	223,998		1886	365,783
		18,757			40,224

From 1884 to 1885, the last year under Republican administration, and after the arrearages act went into operation, there was an increase of 22,369, and from 1885 to 1886, the first whole year under a Democratic administration, there were 20,658. The last year, from 1886 to 1887, there were 40,224, which, according to the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, includes 8,455 certificates granted under the Mexican pension act, passed January 29, 1887, leaving 31,769 allowed to other pension claimants. It will be seen that 40,736 was the largest increase in any one year, and that was by the Republicans.

Now, in this connection let me invite the attention of the House to the last report of the Commissioner of Pensions, to be found on page 35. In order to judge of what is being done under this head attention must be given to the claims which have been filed, and this report, on the page I have cited, shows that the claims filed annually, running up until the arrearages act was passed, ran along at 20,000, 26,000, once 43,000, 18,000, 16,000, 18,000, 22,000, and so on until we reached the year 1880, after the passage of the arrearages act.

That year, Mr. Chairman, there were filed 141,000 claims, which were suddenly dumped into the Pension Office for consideration. From that time on a large number of claims were filed. The next year it reached 48,000; then 41,000, 40,000, 49,000, and the last fiscal year, ending June 30, 1887, it reached 72,000, the increase evidently being made in that case by the filing of Mexican pension claims.

Now, what I desire to invite the attention of the House and of the country to specially is the fact that, when you consider the claims filed in the Pension Office in connection with the certificates allowed, the record of the Republican party and its administrations stand unchallenged for faithfulness to the interests of the soldier, and I defy the Democracy to make a comparison unfavorable to the Republicans.

Let me now call your attention to still another fact in this connection. In the Forty-seventh Congress it was found that the arrearages act brought in so many claims that it was necessary to make a new provision for their consideration. What was done to meet that increase? And by whom was it done?

A little army of extra clerks was created for the purpose of strengthening the force of the Pension Office and enabling it to meet the increased demand upon the office. Not only that, but a new system was inaugurated, that of special examiners, to go out through the country and examine the claims filed, so that those reaching away back into the past years could be carefully scrutinized, and so that the Government would not be injured, and at the same time no injustice be done to the soldiers themselves. Now listen: The Forty-sixth Congress commenced by giving an extra force of 141 additional clerks at a cost of $203,602, to meet the increased labor devolving upon the office. The Forty-seventh Congress, which was a Republican Congress, gave to the Pension Office proper—and all those that I now refer to were given because of the necessities growing out of the arrearages act—as follows:

Increase of clerical force for the fiscal year 1883, on account of the arrears-of-pensions act.

Forty-seventh Congress.	Number.	Amount.
Pension Office	977	$1,162,520
Surgeon-General's Office	166	224,290
Adjutant-General's Office	167	200,660
Secretary of War's Office	12	15,080
Second Comptroller's Office	8	13,600
Second Auditor's Office	20	24,000
Third Auditor's Office	20	27,400
Total	1,370	1,667,550

For the fiscal year 1882 an additional force was given in the Pension Office as follows: 141 persons, at a cost of $203,620; being in all in that Congress a force of 1,370 extra clerks, at a cost of $1,667,550.

Now it will be seen, Mr. Chairman, that the Congress of the United States, a Republican Congress, provided, owing to the necessities of the arrearages act, and with generous regard to old soldiers, an army of 1,370 men, costing $1,677,550, in addition to the regular force. The special examiners' bureau was organized and set at work. The claims were coming in rapidly after 1880, under the influence of the arrears act. The special examiners were out in the field. Their proofs were being filed, and their reports were being given to the office and undergoing examination. In 1885, when you gentlemen came into power, you found the fruits of this work almost ripe for your hands, with claims ready to be adjudicated and allowed; and now, when those legitimate and logical results, coming from Republican legislation, are being realized, I submit to the fair-minded judgment of this House and the country whether in justice the claim can be made, which is being made in behalf of my brethren who are now running the Government, that they are doing more for the old soldiers than the Republicans did? All the facts are against you.

These, sir, are a few of the facts to which I desire to call attention, because I want you gentlemen on the Democratic side to take them home with you to your districts and get them straighter in the coming fall campaign than you have in the past.

But there is a third matter to which I wish to call the attention of the House; and I desire particularly the attention of my Democratic friends.

THE MEXICAN PENSION BILL

was enacted and put into operation, and we have the statement here from the Commissioner of Pensions showing that on January 1, 1888, certificates had been issued to 13,412 Mexican pension claimants. He estimated that there would be allowed up to June 30, 1888, 5,000 more, and from June 30, 1888, to June 30, 1889, 10,000 more, and the Commissioner estimates that 28,412 will be the total number of certificates allowed to the Mexican soldiers, and, also, that after June 30, 1889, no new claims will be filed. There has been a wonderful amount of activity in connection with this Mexican pension bill, the benefits of which go mostly to the South. And I want to make this declaration here and now, for the consideration of my friends across the aisle, that so rapid was the Pension Bureau in recognizing this class of claims that pensions were allowed before the claimants even had put in their claims in some cases; and certificates were issued to claimants where they did not know that they were applicants for them. Do you doubt that, my friends?

A VOICE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Who does?

Mr. TRACEY. Will the gentleman cite a case?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Do you want an illustration?

Mr. TRACEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I will accommodate the gentleman and give an illustration to my Democratic brother. I like inquiring minds and always enjoy satisfying them when I can.

Mr. Chairman, before I give the illustration I desire to call attention to a provision of the Mexican pension act. I will read from section 3. Before I do so I want to invite the attention of the House to the point I am going to make; that is, that the law requires that claims shall be filed and the proof made before allowances are granted. I will read from section 3:

SEC. 3. That before the name of any person shall be placed on the pension-roll under this act proof shall be made, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, of the right of the applicant to a pension; and any person who shall falsely and corruptly take any oath required under this act shall be deemed guilty of perjury.

It will be observed that by the law an application under oath is required before a certificate can be granted. Now I will ask the Clerk, whose voice rivals mine in power and clearness, to read the article I send up, from a Chicago paper.

Mr. WASHINGTON. A Chicago paper! Oh, Lord!

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. You are taking that name in vain. Hear this.

The Clerk read as follows:

COLONEL MORRISON'S PENSION.

Some weeks ago Commissioner of Pensions Black instructed one of his clerks to issue a pension certificate to Hon. William R. Morrison. The clerk looked over the list of applicants and informed General Black that the name of Mr. Morrison did not appear thereon.

"That makes no difference," said the Commissioner. "Mr. Morrison served over sixty days in the Mexican war, and, being over sixty-two years of age, is entitled to a pension of $8 a month under the act of last January. Make out his certificate."

The clerk did as instructed, and the document entitling the Interstate Commerce Commissioner to draw $96 per annum was made out in due and approved legal form and transmitted to the beneficiary. Colonel Morrison perused the document, and, quietly folding it up, placed it in an Interstate Commerce envelope of official size and returned it to the Pension Office, accompanied by a terse little note, which stated that he had never applied for a pension and did not desire one, expressing at the same time his thanks for the unsolicited favor. As Colonel Morrison is without means, so to speak, outside of his salary, his action is highly commended by old-time patriots. Ninety-six dollars per year will buy shoes, flavored with a slight modicum of hats.

Mr. BLAND. That, I presume, is the first ever returned.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It is not a Democratic fault to return donations of that kind.

Mr. BLAND. I never heard before of one being returned.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I never did. I now ask the Clerk to read this communication also, which I send to the desk.

Mr. MACDONALD. I ask the gentleman from Iowa, do you suppose he would have refused it if he had been a Republican?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I do not know; but this I do know, that Colonel Morrison never asked for the certificate, and if my friend was as sensitive about the administration of the Pension Office as he is eager to be smart this morning he would be giving his attention to what I am submitting to the House.

Mr. MACDONALD. Your friend is smart enough to say, I do not believe that newspaper article states what is true.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I do believe it; and now I will have read a letter from Colonel Morrison:

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 22, 1887.

DEAR MADAM: The inclosed certificate of $8 per month pension from September 14, 1887, to me for services as private soldier in the Mexican war, sent by you to my home at Waterloo, Ill., was received here yesterday. I am at a loss to know how it came to be issued. I have never applied for a pension nor taken any of the steps prescribed by law for obtaining one, and do not contemplate doing so under present circumstances. I therefore return the certificate to you.

Respectfully yours,

W. R. MORRISON.

Mrs. MARIAN A. MULLIGAN,
United States Pension Agent, Chicago, Ill.

Mr. MACDONALD. After hearing that read I have nothing more to say.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. There is a man that comes from the honest West. Now, Mr. Chairman, if there is any gentleman here who denies that, I will be glad to have him speak.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Yes, sir.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. You said that pension certificates, using the plural number, were issued. Will you prove another one now?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Aha! My friend is anxious for more evidence. Dispose of the one nut you have got to crack before you ask for a bushel of them.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I am anxious you should be kept to the truth.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. You are anxious for truth? I want truth to come from your pious Commissioner, who started out in his administration of that office by charging against a faithful and untiring officer and brother soldier, who had left a part of his body on the battle-field, General Dudley, that in the administration of the Pension Office, from turret to foundation-stone, "it was used for political purposes."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. And did he not prove it to the satisfaction of the country?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. No, sir; never! That same gentleman stands convicted on Democratic authority of violating the terms of the law and unlawfully issuing a certificate to a Democratic chief who was too high and clean to become a party to the transaction. How many more of these have been issued is only known to those who are running this kind of a machine. And I hear no Democrat in this Chamber rising and condemning that sort of thing; but cutting, petty little questions are sought to be interjected.

Gentlemen, if you are against such things rise up and condemn them. This man who entered upon the discharge of his duties with a heaven-erected face is caught in a Democratic trap as one who has got lower down in struggling for political influence than any bureau officer I have ever known. Am I outside the record? If so, fight it out among yourselves, boys. It is a Democratic witness testifying against a Democratic Commissioner, and "the devil take the hindmost." One thing is sure, no one ever heard of a pension being given unasked to any soldier of the late war, and 414,252 remain undisposed of.

I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOVEY].

Mr. HOVEY. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration provides for two classes of expenditures:

1. Making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889.

2. For examining surgeons, pension agents, clerk-hire, fuel, lights, stationery, etc., and rents, $1,275,500.

I have no hesitation in supporting the first provision, and would vote for it if it had been much greater, but I must confess that I sustain the second class, under our present pension laws, with great reluctance.

If the simple and just rule of permitting a soldier's honorable discharge to be his pension certificate had been adopted, more than $1,000,000 of useless expenses would have been annually saved, and could have been more justly applied for the relief of our soldiers and sailors.

Mr. Chairman, the petitions of many thousands of ex-soldiers have called upon this House for justice, for relief, and legislation. We have been over four months in session with hundreds of bills referred to the committees, but both the committees and the House seem deaf to the call of the men "who preserved us a nation." I need not ask you, sir, what is the cause of this "masterly inactivity." Every intelligent man on this floor now knows that from those committees and this House legislation in favor of ex-soldiers is not to be expected this session. No bills will be allowed to be discussed before this House that will give our soldiers even the shadow of justice. Over two hundred general bills have been smothered, and not even laid upon the table, until now, like Desdemona, they are dead, dead, dead. Nor can they be resurrected or allowed to be discussed or voted on this session. It will look to intelligent men outside this Chamber that they have been withheld and purposely crowded out. The cunningly-devised rules of this House have been so framed that the voice of the people in the mouths of a minority is suppressed and silent. No difference what the outside world may feel or think, the majority here can deny them all legislation and discussion.

On the 4th of January last I offered a service-pension bill, No. 1320, granting a pension of $8 per month for life to every honorably-discharged officer, soldier, or sailor who had served in the Army of the United States not less than sixty days between March 4, 1861, and July 1, 1865. This bill was the same day referred to the Invalid Pensions Committee. On the same day I offered bill No. 1319, granting a bounty of 160 acres of land to every officer, soldier, and sailor engaged in the military or naval services of the United States during the late rebellion of the so-called confederate States. On the 16th of January last I offered a bill, No. 5052, "to equalize the payment and do justice to the officers, soldiers, and sailors of the United States in the late rebellion who were paid in currency commonly called 'greenbacks,'" which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

I had hoped that at least one of these bills might possibly meet with the favor of one of those omnipotent committees, and be reported to this House for fair discussion, so that a vote on the ayes and noes might be taken; but, like many other bills which have been introduced for the relief of the ex-soldiers of the late rebellion, neither of them has been reported; and they, too, have been smothered or filed in the unremembered pigeon-holes of the committee-rooms. Our ex-soldiers and sailors seem to be forgotten. Even the President in his message made no allusion to them, their services, or their sufferings, and his henchmen and partisans are following silently and closely in his footsteps.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions is composed of nine Democrats and six Republicans, the Committee on Public Lands nine Democrats and five Republicans, and the Committee on Military Affairs eight Democrats and six Republicans, so that the Democrats of those committees have the power to report to this House any bill referred to them, or they can crush, by refusing to report, every bill offered in favor of the ex-soldier. The responsibility is theirs; and I assure them they will be well remembered hereafter by the men whose rights they have so unfeelingly ignored.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the committees to whom those important bills have been referred dare not bring one of them before this House for fair discussion and action. The people who do not understand the gag rules of this House are watching with wonder and blaming their Representatives for not forcing a vote on the most important questions of the day.

Let us have a full hearing and a fair vote on the bills I have offered, and the "Boys in Blue" next autumn will bury more Congressmen politically who vote against them than ever fell upon any field of battle. The people do not understand the meshes with which the majority of this House have entangled legislation. Sir, we may talk about the power of the veto, the power of the President, the power of the crowned heads of Europe, but I greatly doubt if either has as much power in directing and molding legislation as the Speaker of this House under the parliamentary rules which have been adopted. He forms and selects the committees at his pleasure, and can so compose and arrange them as to favor or defeat the most important legislation. No member can be heard without his consent, and he can refuse for a whole session to recognize or hear the ablest orators on this floor.

But we are asked, What have the ex-soldiers and sailors done that they now so imperatively demand legislation? The great ship called the "South" had lost her bearings and was drifting without compass or pilot, in storms and tempests, in the midst of rocks and shoals, near the great maelstrom of certain destruction. Her great danger was seen by thousands, who rushed to her rescue. Many perished in their gallant effort to save her, whilst thousands returned from that terrible storm wounded, maimed, and with broken and shattered constitutions. But they saved the old ship from destruction. They brought her safely out to navigable waters and into the open and placid seas of sunshine and prosperity. And now the salvors of that old vessel come into this great court and ask that their services may be recognized by our Government, and for a small salvage that will keep many of the maimed and wounded from the chilling blasts of hunger and adversity. They are not asking alms, nor begging to be placed upon the lists of pensioners for charity; but they demand that all shall be treated alike for their gallant services.

Would it be unjust to demand salvage from the owners of that old ship alone? No one asks it; but all should willingly join in doing justice, and in conferring that honor upon them which their daring, teirh gallantry, their sufferings, and their sacrifices have so richly deserved.

But now let us drop the metaphor and come down to realities. What would the North be to-day, and what would be the condition of the South had a separation of the States been consummated? Does any reasonable man suppose that the great Mississippi River, with its 20,000 miles of tributary navigable waters, could be severed at Cairo and have peace in our land? Is the history of the settlement of the great West forgotten? Is it forgotten how Spain forbade the commerce of the West from passing down that river to the Gulf of Mexico, and how nearly our country at that early day came to being torn asunder?

Let us cast a retrospective glance at the condition of our country at that time. One hundred years ago the Kingdom of Spain was the owner of the Louisiana territory, embracing New Orleans, the mouth of the Mississippi River, and a vast wilderness now covered by several States, and containing more than one-fourth of the whole territory of the present limits of the United States. Immigration was rapidly filling the rich lands bordering on the Ohio, the Cumberland, the Tennessee, and the Wabash Rivers, and the first settlers were producing a large surplus annually of beef, corn, and pork, which could only find an outlet and market at New Orleans.

Spain in 1784 had prohibited the navigation of the Mississippi River, and before that date had levied taxes upon the produce sent to New Orleans to the amount of 21 per cent. The people of Tennessee, Kentucky, and the territory northwest of the Ohio River, rose in arms against this unnatural outrage, and demanded free navigation to the Gulf of Mexico, which was refused, and a large amount in value of the cargoes of our flat-boats was seized and confiscated by the Spanish authorities. General George Rogers Clark then raised a small number of armed men, and made reprisals from Spanish subjects, at Vincennes and other localities. At that time war with Spain seemed imminent. Some of the older States sided with Spain, and desired if possible to force the commerce of the West into the Eastern cities. In this condition a separation of the West from the Eastern States was warmly discussed, and many able letters were printed and scattered, threatening secession and the aid of our old enemy, Great Britain, if the East did not join in shaking the Spanish shackles off of our Western commerce.

In 1800 Spain, by a secret treaty made at San Ildefonso, ceded the whole of the Louisiana territory to France. When Jefferson, who was then President, discovered this secret treaty, he became alarmed and was fearful that trouble with France would ensue. He immediately wrote to Livingston, our minister at Paris. "There was," he said, "one spot on the face of the earth so important to the United States that whoever held it was, for that very reason, naturally and forever our enemy; and that spot was New Orleans. The day France took possession of that city the ancient friendship between her and the United States ended. Alliance with Great Britain became necessary, and the sentence that was to keep France below low-water mark became fixed." (Jefferson to Livingston, April 18, 1802.)

Jefferson then caused negotiations to be opened with France for the purchase of a small spot or territory near the mouth of our great river, to be used as a place of outlet and deposit for the increasing surplus commerce of the West. James Monroe was sent as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the courts of Spain and France to aid our ministers, Livingston and Pickering, in negotiating the purchase. After much dallying with the artful Talleyrand, the whole of the Louisiana territory in 1803 was purchased for $15,000,000 from Napoleon Bonaparte, then First Consul of France. This produced great excitement in the Eastern States, and bitter partisan assaults were made upon Jefferson by the ablest orators and journals of that day.

Among all the great statesmen of the past Jefferson was regarded as the strictest of the strict constructionists of our Constitution. He knew that under that instrument he had no expressed power to make the purchase, but the necessity for the commerce of the West and the peace of our country was so great that he dared to rise above the letter of that sacred instrument which the master minds of the world had made. He relied upon the good sense of the people to ratify the purchase, and it was done, and done to save the secession of the West from the Eastern States. He clearly foresaw that the commerce which floated on more than 20,000 miles of navigable rivers must pass unobstructed and unmolested to the sea.

The wisest and most skillful surgeons in the world could not preserve life in the severed parts of the human body. The attempt to tie the arteries would be useless and ridiculous, and to cut the Mississippi in two parts or divide it between contiguous nations would be just as absurd and ridiculous. Blood would never cease to flow from such a surgical operation. Besides our great inland lakes and rivers that annually transmit billions of dollars' worth of produce through the throat of that great Father of Waters, over 153,000 miles of railroad now, like hoops of steel, bind every part of this great country together. To hinder the navigation of these streams and tear apart the steel ligaments that cover the land like network would be as fatal to our nation as it would be to life to tear the strings, fibers, and arteries from the human heart.

I have often wondered how intelligent men could even dream of dividing the Mississippi River, and how they could think it would be possible to rub the discordant institution of slavery along the rugged, solid, puritanical edges of the Northern States and even hope for peace.

No, Mr. Chairman, the United States can never separate in peace. Separation would inevitably entail continual war. And now, as these great arteries and lines of commerce carry the productions of over sixty-three millions of people to and from the seas, from the North to the South, from the East to the West, let it be forever understood and remembered, let it be shouted from the house-tops, from the lakes to the gulf, and from ocean to ocean, that we must not and can not separate the States of our great and glorious nation. The North could not separate from the South with less injury than the South would suffer by sep aration from the North.

But let us return from this brief digression to the consideration of the rights of our soldiers and sailors who prevented the suicide of our nation. What can pay them for their sufferings and sacrifices? There are men on this floor who in the late war have stood nearly one hundred days in battle, in the rattle of musketry and the roar of cannon. What amount in money would induce them to pass again under such fiery ordeals? If this magnificent Capitol were solid gold, the poorest veteran would scorn the offer.

We are flippantly told that our pension laws are ample and the most beneficent in the world, and that no ex-soldier has the right to find the least fault with the generosity and paternal care of our Government.

Yes, we have pension laws where the red-tape appendages, employés and machinery alone, not including any pensions, cost our Government over $1,000,000 annually to dole out a pittance that would starve a dog to thousands of helpless men, widows, and orphans.

Sir, we ought to be ashamed of our niggardly legislation, for our nation is too great for such pitiful parsimony. The one hundred and fifty-one rounds in the Jacob's ladder which leads the veteran to the Pension Department are simply ridiculous.

I have read where the noble Brutus proposed to "coin his heart and drop his blood for drachmas," but it was reserved for our Solons, who framed our pension laws, to measure the value of our veterans' blood by the fraction of one copper cent!

Only think of the blood and wounds of our soldiers being valued at $2.12½ per month; at $2.66⅔ per month; $4.66⅔ per month. The fraction of one copper cent by halves and thirds being set apart in fifteen of the one hundred and fifty-one grades to our maimed, broken-down, and wounded soldiers! These wise men must have had Shylock's famous "balance" to weigh their brother's blood, and after they had weighed the blood they must have examined every wound with a strong political miscroscope before they could figure pensions down to the fraction of one copper cent!

I may say that the Commissioner of Pensions (General Black) was my comrade, as we were at one time in the same army, and I have always regarded him as a gallant soldier and entertained for him great respect. I blame him not in his official capacity, for I believe he has been only acting in obedience to the command of his superiors in office. By his last report, in June, 1887, he shows that there were then on the pension-rolls 1,131 persons who received $1 per month, 30,823 who received $2 per month, and 65,946 who received $4 per month, and on the pension-rolls to-day there are over 100,000 persons who are now receiving 3½ to 13 cents per day! What magnificent generosity from a Government that has been saved and preserved by their valor, their sufferings, and their blood. These are some of the pensions about which we hear such loud and bombastic boastings.

We are tauntingly told that our ex-soldiers should be more than thankful, and that no nation in the world can show such a grand total of pensioners. Admitted, and why? What wars in history can compare with our terrible rebellion? Many of the dark-haired boys of to-day can not realize, like their gray-haired fathers, that our war lasted four years with an army of 2,300,000 men in the field. They have never learned that in that war more battles were fought and more men slain and wounded than in any war recorded in the pages of reliable history. These verdant orators and scribblers only need a little more loyalty to the Stars and Stripes and a little more humanity to bring them to their senses.

Again, it is dogmatically alleged that our Government is not able to pay the large sums of money that a service pension, either per diem or $8 a month, would require. There are about 1,000,000 surviving soldiers, and no doubt the amount would seem large to the great mass of our people, when compared with the ordinary transactions of private life, but it is by no means alarming when we consider the vast resources and income of our Government.

Our income now exceeds $402,000,000 per annum, or more than $1,100,000 for every day in the year. For the purpose of more fully understanding the resources and ability of our Government to pay large sums of money I will refer to our expenditures during the war period, from 1861 to 1865, both inclusive:

1861	$85,387,313.05
1862	565,667,563.74
1863	899,815,911.25
1864	1,295,541,114.80
1865	1,906,433,331.37
Total	4,752,845,234.27

Being not far from one billion or one thousand millions a year. Of the foregoing amount the War and the Navy were as follows:

	War.	Navy.
1861	$23,001,530.67	$12,387,156.52
1862	389,173,562.29	42,640,353.09
1863	603,314,411.82	63,261,255.31
1864	690,391,048.66	85,704,963.74
1865	1,030,690,400.06	122,617,434.07
Total	2,736,570,953.50	326,611,142.73

RECAPITULATION.

War	$2,736,570,953.50
Navy	326,611,142.73
Total	3 063 182 096.23

Our daily expenditures, including 1861 and 1865, for 1,825 days, amounted to $2,604,298.75.

At the close of the war, in September, 1865, our national debt amounted to nearly $3,000,000,000 or more accurately speaking, $2,757,689,751, and we are now informed by the Secretary of the Treasury that that vast sum has been reduced within twenty-three years, and he now reports: "Debt less cash in the Treasury April 1, 1888, $1,190,868,155.14." We are further informed that there is now "total cash by Treasury statement, $678,293,954.53" in the Treasury of the United States. In other words, over $678,000,000 now lying in the vaults of the Treasury Department of the United States. Sir, I am one who can not clearly understand that "a national debt is a national blessing," but I am fully convinced that an overflowing surplus in our Treasury is a national curse. It begets wanton extravagance, corruption, and frauds, and stagnates the very life-blood of commerce. It is the stimulating cause of the wildest kind of legislation. All kinds of bills are presented to this House. One wants the rivers in his district straightened and deepened; another wants the mud dredged out of the shallow bays in the lakes or ocean bordering on the lands of his constituency. Others would levy or embank the Mississippi River 50 feet high from Cairo to the Gulf of Mexico. Others would swell the ocean with iron and steel clad ships of war, and some would pay large subsidies to merchant vessels to carry and peddle our wares and merchandise among the nations of the earth, and then again there are others who would cut great ship-canals to connect the Lakes, the Mississippi and the St. Lawrence Rivers, from the Gulf of Mexico to the Atlantic Ocean.

There are other claims that should be preferred to any of these schemes, however wise or visionary they may be, and in my opinion our ex-soldiers and sailors' rights rise far above them all. Sir, if we had to even duplicate our national debt, the soldiers, like the bondholders, should be fully paid, and they should, for the short remnant of their shattered lives, be placed far above the confines of the poor-house. We were told in the other end of this Capitol a few days ago that there are now in the poor-houses of this country and receiving charity more than twenty-eight thousand of our ex-soldiers. A full Army corps! Within ten short years the most of all that gallant host who marched to victory will have passed away and our great and prosperous nation "will know them no more forever." Even the names of all our officers except a few may straggle a little way down the narrow and barren lane of history, but the great mass, like the dreams of bygone years, will be no longer remembered.

There is another view which I wish to present. What do we honestly owe the ex-soldier? Not in gratitude alone, for payments in that coin are very uncertain in quantity and in quality; but what does our nation honestly owe him on the basis of man dealing with his fellowman?

The promises that were held out to our volunteers will not be denied or forgotton. As an inducement to join the Army promises were made by the press, by proclamations, by the orators of the day, and the people, pledging them all that their fathers had enjoyed before them. When they returned home they were to have land-warrants of 160 acres. Every volunteer was to be pensioned for life, like his Revolutionary fathers and the soldiers of the war of 1812, and he was assured from the country cross-road bar-room to the sacred pulpit that if he fell in battle his family should become the wards of the nation and that no soldier's wife or child should suffer. All this and more was promised.

To assure him of his pay, in September, 1861, General Scott, then Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the United States, addressed his soldiers by his famous Order No. 16:

General Order No. 16.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, September 3, 1861.

The General-in-Chief is happy to announce that the Treasury Department, to meet the payment of the troops, is about to supply, besides coin as heretofore, Treasury notes, in fives, tens, and twenties, as good as gold, to all banks and Government offices throughout the United States, and most convenient for transmission by mail from officers and men to their families at home. Good husbands, fathers, sons, and brothers, serving under the Stars and Stripes, will thus soon have a ready and safe means of relieving an immense amount of suffering which could not be relieved in coin. In making up such packages every officer may be relied upon, no doubt, for such assistance as may be needed by his men.

By command of Lieutenant-General Scott.

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Non-combatants may have forgotten all these promises and inducements, but the soldier and the soldier's widow and orphans have not. I need not stop to ask honest men how these promises have been fulfilled. No land-warrant of 160 acres for the soldier, no pension like his father's, and instead of General Scott's paper that was to be as "good as gold," he was paid in depreciated "greenbacks," which were not worth on an average 60 cents to the dollar. This he was compelled to accept or receive nothing. He could not leave the Army and return home, for desertion in time of war meant dishonor and death. After he was mustered into the service he was compelled to serve or die, payment or no payment, although his depreciated greenbacks would not buy the bread for his wife at home or clothe his cold and ill-clad children. What a great change has taken place as to the rights of our soldiers!

For one day in battle or fourteen days' service in the Army our soldiers, by acts of Congress passed before 1861, were each allowed a land warrant for 160 acres; but the soldier now of four years' service and a hundred days in battle, by the grace of this House, remains landless. And why? Not for the lack of public domain, for it is well known, as it was sung at the meetings to rally our volunteers, that "Uncle Sam is rich enough to give us all a farm."

The unsold public domain to-day is larger in area than the thirteen original States, and amounts to more than 1,000,000,000 acres. Do not excuse yourselves by saying that the lands are worthless. If they are the Government will lose nothing, and the soldiers will fully understand your motives if you give or refuse their just demands. The patent to them alone will be a patent of nobility, whether it is spread upon a prairie of flowers or a barren mountain peak, for it will be an acknowledgment to them and their children of loyalty and honorable service; and if they can not find lands that suit them they can frame their warrants and hang them in their houses as heirlooms for their posterity. They will be highly prized at no distant day and pointed to with pride. Do not deceive yourselves, Representatives, nor imagine that your motives are not fully understood. Do not let greed, politics, and a "solid South" make you forget the promises that have been made to our ex-soldiers. Remember the money or greenbacks you paid them is not the money with which you paid the bondholders. Do not forget the rewards paid their fathers for one day in battle or fourteen days' service in the Army.

Can our now proud and prosperous nation trample on her soldiers and sailors of the late rebellion and forget or refuse the fulfillment of these pledges and promises? Can our omnipotent committees close the doors of legislation and refuse to report their bills for justice and relief, or by delay until this late hour cut off all argument and debate?

We are constantly referred to Europe for comparisons of our pension and military departments. We are told that ours is far more expensive than theirs. That depends upon the manner in which the estimates are made. The standing armies of Europe in times of peace are now larger than they have ever been before. By the Encyclopædia Britannica (and you know encyclopedias have lately become very useful and of high authority) the standing armies in Europe in times of peace are estimated as follows: Great Britain, 190,000 officers and men; France, 450,000 officers and men; German Empire, 400,000 officers and men; Russia, 750,000 officers and men; Austria and Hungary, 275,000 officers and men; Italy, 200,000 officers and men. But we know that since the publication of that encyclopedia the standing armies of France, Germany, and Russia all exceed more than 700,000 men each on what they call their standing armies in times of peace. Now, basing the costs of those armies on the value of human labor and the necessary appliances and munitions for their use and establishment, and estimating such labor at $1 per day, such standing armies would cost annually more than the income of our Government. I admit that no such figures are found in their estimates and accounts; but when we compare them with our expenditures we forget the relative cost of labor and the munitions of war in Europe and in this country. We know such armies here, valuing the services of the soldiers and all necessary expenses, would far exceed our revenue.

But we are relieved of all these heavy European burdens by a wise provision of our Constitution. By the eighth section, Article I, Congress is shorn of the power to make provision or appropriations for such an army. Our standing army is composed of our citizen soldiers, and may be found in the fields of agriculture, in our manufactories, in our mines, in the shops of our mechanics, embracing all our laborers, merchants, business, and professional men. They cost our Government nothing as soldiers in times of peace, and are only paid when called into active service. We thus avoid the vast expenditures which are borne by the governments of Europe. Can we not be more than liberal to the men who voluntarily leave their homes to serve their country under such a system? Col. E. H. Ropes, in the American Magazine, has so vividly and truthfully given us a picture of such service that I quote from his article:

OUR DEBT OF HONOR.

People have forgotten the nature of the service asked of and obtained from their soldiers. Let the reader think a moment what sacrifices would be involved if he, now reading this magazine comfortably by his winter fireside, should feel it to have become his duty to drop his business wholly; to say good-bye to wife and children, knowing the grave risks that he never would see them again upon earth; to leave his pleasures and home comforts, don a private soldier's uniform, submit to rigorous physical discipline, march by night and by day, be houseless in rain and in snow, often sleeping without shelter under a pouring sky; to live on the coarsest fare always, and frequently have an insufficient supply of that; to be posted as a picket by day and night in pestilential swamps and bottom lands; to risk the imminent peril of losing health and accepting the tender mercies of a field hospital; to enter upon campaign, skirmish, battle; day after day to see comrades drop down one by one; to take the chances of wounds by shell and bullet, of torture in a prison-pen, and of death by any of these means—imagine all this, and then say whether he would consider that his country had redeemed a pledge of "eternal gratitude." There is no need o rhetoric. This possible experience is what hundreds of thousands of our brave boys actually endured. There is not a dash of added somberness to the coloring. Here, then, is precisely the question that is pleading for settlement at the hands of the American people of to-day.

Where is the member of this House from the Northern States, Democrat or Republican, who does not boast to his constituency that our ex-soldiers saved this Government in the late rebellion? If there be one such, let him dare deny it on this floor. Thousands of brave and gallant men from the South now admit it. Saved our nation? Yes, these honeyed, flattering words are poured into the ears of our ex-soldiers during the canvass for every important election. We will hear them again from our Democratic and Republican orators over hill and valley in 1888. Saved our nation? Saved the North, saved the South? Yes, and prevented the pitiful spectacle of two contiguous and ever-belligerent republics imitating the battle of the Kilkenny cats, with the scorn and scoffs of all the European nations, who loathe and hate our institutions, ringing loudly in our ears!

Now, are all these boastings of our orators at our hustings true? If so, either section, North or South, could well afford to give to our ex-soldiers their just rights, if it should even double our debt. What untold billions have been saved, leaving out all the countless blessings which have followed peace and the solid union of our States.

Men from different standpoints view objects at a distance with very conflicting impressions. Sometimes the lenses through which they make their observations are imperfect or colored, and sometimes their positions are dissimilar and unfavorable; and it may be that they differ in the perfection of their visions. Be this as it may, George Washington and President Cleveland have viewed the rights of American soldiers in very different lights. One fought and suffered for the independence of the United States through a seven-years war, and was with his men in sunshine and storm; slept with them on the fields of battle, where the dead were lying cold and thick around him.

President Cleveland's experience was far different. He during our late revolution was no doubt faring sumptuously, snoring single and alone in his bed in Buffalo, and displaying all his chivalry and valor by proxy—by his hired substitute .I have no reflection to cast upon his substitute, for I have known some who were gallant soldiers in battle.

Who understood the soldier—General Washington or President Cleveland?

A committee of our Army in 1778 called upon Washington and made known their demands and sufferings. In his address to them he replied:

It is not indeed consistent with reason or justice to expect that one set of men should make a sacrifice of property, domestic ease and happiness, encounter the rigors of the field, the perils and vicissitudes of war, to obtain those blessings which every citizen will enjoy in common with them without some adequate compensation. It must also be a comfortless reflection to any man that after he may have contributed to securing the rights of his country, at the risk of life and the ruin of his fortune, there would be no provision made to prevent himself and family from sinking into indigence and wretchedness.—Journal of Congress, volume 4, page 211.

Nearly five years after this, March 18, 1783, Washington again made an effort to have justice done to the officers and soldiers who had fought with him in the Revolution. In his communication to the President of the Continental Congress he said:

For if besides the simple payment of their wages a further compensation is not due to the sufferings and sacrifices of the officers, then have I been mistaken indeed. If the whole army have not merited whatever a grateful people can bestow, then I have been beguiled by prejudice and built opinion on the basis of error. If this country should not in the event perform everything which has been requested in the late memorial to Congress, then will my belief become vain and the hope that has been excited void of foundation. And if, as has been suggested for the purpose of influencing their passions, "the officers of the Army are to be the only sufferers in the Revolution;" if retiring from the field they are to grow old in poverty, wretchedness, and contempt; if they are to wade through the vile mire of despondency and owe the miserable remnants of their life to charity which has hitherto been spent in honor, then shall I have learned what ingratitude is; then shall I have realized a tale which will imbitter every moment of my future life. But I am under no such apprehensions. A country rescued by their arms from impending ruin will never leave unpaid the debt of gratitude.—Spark's Writings of Washington, volume 8, page 397; Journal of Congress, pages 210, 211.

Such was the justice, the love, and the gratitude that swelled the heart of the Godlike Washington for his comrades and his soldiers. President Cleveland, too, has shown how his heart beats for our soldiers. But he is now silent, and if he has any sorrows, he keeps them to himself, and the only evidence of his emotions is to be found in the great book so much admired in the solid South. As long as print will last that book will never be forgotten. Of course, you understand I allude to that imperishable volume, containing his 101 vetoes of pension bills, which provided a pittance for disabled soldiers, and widows and orphans left helpless and destitute. There will soon be another edition.

The wit, force, and sarcasm of those vetoes have no doubt been keenly felt by the sufferers, but will never be fully appreciated by his literary admirers; and the economy of withholding charity where it was so much needed, with our great surplus in the Treasury, will be one of the wonders of the age.

What a contrast between the first and last President of the United States! Washington, at the head of a nation with an empty Treasury, without credit, and a worthless currency, with a sparsely-settled country, not exceeding four millions of people, begging, insisting, and demanding that the officers and soldiers who served under him should be pensioned with full pay during the terms of their natural lives.

Cleveland, at the head of the richest and greatest nation upon the face of the earth, containing a population of 63,000,000, with unbounded credit and resources, with a Treasury filled to repletion, and the vaults almost bursting with gold and silver—Cleveland, stubborn, stern, and heartless, refusing even a mite of charity to the men who wrecked their fortunes and their constitutions that our Government might live. Cold, and unshaken, with the greed of a miser, he has denied the demand of the people, and vetoed and trodden down the acts of the Senate and House of Representatives of the people of the United States!

When party passion and all individual hatreds shall have passed away the merciless pen of Truth will draw the parallel and paint the contrast. The only palliative to the darkness of the picture will be found in the fact that Washington knew what the services and sufferings of a soldier were and President Cleveland did not.

The weary march, day and night, through heat and cold, in dust, mud, snow, and rain, with hunger and thirst and a damp earth for his bed; the lone, dark watch on the picket line of death; the skirmish, the battle, with its hail of musketry and roar of cannon; the dead, the dying, the wounded in the thick smoke of battle, may be faintly sketched by the poet, the orator, and the painter, but can never be understood or realized by any man who has not been a soldier in battle. I am sure President Cleveland can not. [Applause.]

The following table and letters will explain themselves:

Wages of a soldier during the war.

[From the lecture of Comrade James Winston, of Boston.]

Per day.	Greenback value of a gold dollar.	Gold value of a greenback dollar.	Amount received in greenbacks two months' pay, $13 per month.	Amount received calculated in gold.	Deficit in gold.	Amount entitled to calculated in greenbacks.

It will be observed that the soldier, at the end of his three years' service, had lost $153.40 in gold, the value of which in greenbacks would have been $255.12.

[Copy of a letter from James Marwyn.]

INDIANAPOLIS, March 2, 1888.

MY DEAR GENERAL: I noticed in the papers a few days ago that you had presented a bill in Congress to do justice to the soldiers and sailors who served in the late rebellion, and who were compelled to receive their pay in depreciated "greenbacks." In my opinion your bill does not reach far enough. I think the soldier, like the bondholder, should have interest on the amount that he lost by being compelled to receive such depreciated currency.

The justice of your bill recalled to my mind three of the playmates of my boyhood, James H——, John H——, and Thomas H——, who were brothers and lived near the residence of my father in Ohio.

When the war broke out James was a married man with a small family and was compelled to remain at home to take care of his wife and children. He rented a small farm, and the extreme high prices of produce during the war left him, when peace was declared, very well off with a farm of his own.

John joined the Navy, and Tom was a volunteer in the Western army. You may have known him, as he was very severely wounded in your great battle at Champion's Hills. About the same time, in July, 1864, John and Tom both received about $100 each for their services. John was then on the western coast of California, and received his payment in gold. Tom got his in "greenbacks," then worth only $40 in gold, which he soon spent like a soldier. John was more careful, and with his $100 in gold bought $250 of United States bonds drawing 6 per cent., payable semi-annually. He is now a banker, and those bonds have realized him over $1,033, and are now worth a premium of 25 per cent. besides.

A few years after the war closed, Tom, who was a physical wreck, died in a poor-house in this State, and James is now one of the most substantial men of his county. I have often thought of those brothers.

If the army in which Tom served had been unsuccessful, it is more than probable that his brothers would have shared his fate in the poor-houses of the country.

Thousands of our ex-soldiers who impaired their constitutions in the Army and broke up all their habits of home life are now the poor men of our country. Many of them have shared the fate of poor Tom, and are now in poor-houses or living on charity.

This is a strange world, general, and the simple history of those boys adds another link in the chain of evidence to prove that "republics are ungrateful." I wish you all success in your noble labors for your comrades.

Respectfully, yours,

JAMES MARWYN.

DIVISION OF ACCOUNTS, GENERAL LAND OFFICE, April 9, 1888.

OBSERVATION.

Up to June 30, 1887, the unsold public domain of the United States, as stated in the tables above referred to by the Commissioner of the Land Office, was as follows:

	Acres.
Surveyed and undisposed of	253,558,878
Area unsurveyed	828,303,042
Grand total	1,081,861,920

There were about 2,300,000 men in the service of the United States during the late rebellion, and allowing each man a land warrant of 160 acres, which has been given to all who served before them, their warrants would cover 368,000,000 of acres, and still leave of the unsold public domain 713,861,920 acres.

We can scarcely conceive the magnitude of our unsold public domain. After allowing every soldier the 160 land-warrant, as above, and we would still have an area of unsold lands more than thirty-two times as large as the State of Indiana! It is not probable that more than two million claims would be made.

The friends of the homestead need not be alarmed, for there is ample room for all. Millions of acres in the West that were regarded as worthless thirty years ago are now classed with the valuable lands of the country.

During the delivery of Mr. HOVEY'S remarks the following proceedings took place:

The CHAIRMAN (at 2 o'clock p. m.). The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOVEY] has expired.

Mr. FORAN. How much more time does the gentleman require?

Mr. HOVEY. About fifteen minutes.

Mr. FORAN. I will yield the gentleman that time.

Mr. HOVEY. I have been given time by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts in the matter, as he is not present in the Hall. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FORAN] is entitled to the floor and yields to the gentleman from Indiana such time as he requires.

Mr. FORAN. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. HOVEY. I thank the gentleman.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed an act (S. 185) for the admission of the State of South Dakota into the Union, and for the organization of the Territory of North Dakota; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FORAN. I had hoped, Mr. Chairman, that this bill making appropriations to pay the pensioners of the United States might be passed by this body without being drawn into the mire of party politics; in fact, there was an understanding to that effect. So far as the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] are concerned in relation to the expressed desire of the present Administration to be assured when it purchased bonds that it had authority to do so, I only desire to say that this country ought to be congratulated that its Chief Executive is honestly over scrupulous rather than corruptly reckless in his interpretation of the laws which, by virtue of his high office, he is called upon to interpret. That is all I desire to say about that except that there have been some administrations against which the charge of honest enforcement of law could not be made.

With respect to what the gentleman said in answer to some remarks made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] a few days ago, I only desire to say that I, as a Democrat, congratulate myself upon the fact that the other side, instead of finding fault with our administration of the Pension Department, have found it necessary to apologize for their own administration of that great department. The gentleman also said that Mexican pension claims were rushed through rapidly. That may be true, but it should be remembered that the Mexican pension is a service pension, and that all the applicant or claimant has to do is to establish the fact that he was a soldier in the Mexican war and that he is over sixty-two years of age. That is very easy to do, and, as a matter of course, those claims are passed upon rapidly. So much for that.

As to what was said by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] about the pension given to Hon. William R. Morrison, I know nothing of it. It may be mere newspaper talk, or there may be some foundation for the statement. It involves no charge of corruption, and I let it pass. The administration and character of General Black speak for themselves. Neither demands nor needs apology or vindication. With respect to the remarks made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOVEY] I do not desire to say anything except that if the laws relating to pensions are surrounded, as he claims, by red-tape regulations, he ought to blame those who enacted those laws and made those red-tape regulations, which were a legacy to the present administration. The per diem service bill spoken of by the gentleman from Indiana would, as near as I can compute it, add to the pension expenditures of the United States over $100,000,000 per annum. General, Drum the Adjutant-General of the Army, estimates that the number of Union soldiers of the late war now living is 984,000, nearly one million. Their average service was two years and a half, which would make $9.13 a month. That would make about a hundred million dollars, which, added to the eighty millions that we are at present paying for pensions, would make about $180,000,000, or over $3 per capita upon all the people of the United States. Taxes are paid by those who labor; taxes are paid by the workingmen, who create wealth; and if a man has a family of four in addition to his wife, he would have to pay $18 per annum for pensions. A dollar in this country represents ten hours work, so that he would have to work eighteen days in the year for the payment of pensions. I believe that if the workingmen of this country, the ex-soldiers included, understood this, they would not be so anxious or a per diem pension bill. I was a soldier of the late war myself, and will go as far as any gentleman, in reason, for the soldier; but I think that if there are 984,000 Union soldiers of that war still living, and 406,000 of them are upon the pension-rolls (probably the number will be about 450,000 before the end of this fiscal year), this country is doing remarkably well for its soldiers. I do not say it has done more than it should, or even as much as it should; more will be done in time. If one-half of all the men now living who served in the war for the Union are upon the pension-roll, that is a condition of things never seen or heard of before in any country on this globe. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have said all that I think it necessary to say on these points, and I ask that general debate on this bill be considered as closed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now proceed to read the bill by sections for amendment and discussion under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, namely:

For Army and Navy pensions as follows: For invalids, widows, minor children, and dependent relatives, and survivors and widows of the war of 1812, and with Mexico, $79,000,000: Provided, That the appropriation aforesaid for navy pensions shall be paid from the income of the navy pension fund, so far as the same may be sufficient for that purpose: And provided further, That the amount expended under each of the above items shall be accounted for separately.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting in line 14, after the word "purpose," the following: "And provided further, That in all pensions to widows payments shall be made from the date of the death of the husband."

Mr. FORAN. The point of order is reserved.

Mr. CONGER. What point of order does the gentleman make?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. FORAN. It changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa briefly upon the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, I take it that the point of order will not be sustained. Surely this amendment changes no existing law. Section 4702 of the Revised Statutes provides as follows (and I only read that portion of it referring to this subject):

* * * His widow, or if there be no widow, or in case of the death without payment to her of any part of the pension hereinafter mentioned, his child or children under sixteen years of age shall be entitled to receive the same pension as the husband or father would have been entitled to had he been totally disabled, to commence from the death of the husband or father and continue to the widow during her widowhood, and to his child or children until they have attained the age of sixteen years, and no longer, etc.

Now, section 4709 of the same law fixes a limit within which applications must be filed in order that they may refer back to the date of disability, or to the time that the right to pension accrued—that is five years thereafter.

The language of this section it is true is "all pensions."

But in order that the two sections may not be meaningless they must be construed together, and if they are construed together they are still meaningless unless we conclude that section 4709 refers to all pensions, as it says, except those mentioned in section 4702, namely, the pensions to widows.

It is claimed that section 4702 has been repealed by a provision in an appropriation act passed on March 3, 1879. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is apparent that this section has reference only to those cases mentioned in section 4709; it simply refers to the limitation as to time in which the cases shall be filed, changing the time from five years after accrued right to an absolute date, and fixing that date at the 1st of July, 1880, and it did not intend to, nor does it, repeal section 4702, because neither in its enacting clause nor in its limitation clause does it make any mention whatever of this section; but it does in specific terms, by a section in that appropriation act, repeal section 4709. Section 3 of that act of March 3, 1879, provided:

Section 4709 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed.

The specific terms of this section plainly precludes the idea of repeal by implication of a section not mentioned.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as to the question of repealing or enacting laws simply by a provision inserted in an appropriation act we have a very recent example which ought to be binding at least upon the members on the other side of this House, where the Chief Executive of this nation in a case of a most urgent character and of the most vital importance, as he says, expressed the gravest doubts as to the legality or the permanency of enactments embodied in appropriation bills. Then, if that is not enough, and if it is still claimed that section 4702 was repealed by this section of the appropriation act, because of its inconsistency with it, then that objection is overcome by the fact that by an act approved August 7, 1882, which is chapter 438 of the Statutes at Large, to be found in volume 22, this section 4702 is re-enacted in the very words of the Revised Statutes, in which it is specifically provided that the widow's claim for pension shall commence from the date of the death of the husband. I read from this act, but only that portion which relates particularly to this branch of the subject:

His widow, or if there be no widow, or in case of her death or payment to her of any part of the pension hereinafter mentioned, his child or children under sixteen years of age, shall be entitled to receive the same pension as the husband or father would have been entitled to had he been totally disabled, to commence from the death of the husband or father, etc.

Language could not be plainer.

That is the very latest enactment upon this subject, and if it is true, as gentlemen must admit, that the latest enactment repeals all previous enactments that are inconsistent therewith, then certainly the widow is and must be by law entitled to a pension from the date of the death of her husband and not from the time of filing her application.

Now, as to the propriety of making these declarations or constructions of law in appropriation acts, the distinguished committee which prepared and presented this ought by their own acts to have their mouths closed against an objection of this kind. Why, this very bill, in the proviso just preceding where I have offered this amendment, declares that—

The appropriation aforesaid for navy pensions shall be paid from the income of the navy pension fund, so far as the same may be sufficient for that purpose.

When, Mr. Chairman, section 4755 of the Revised Statutes provides that these navy pensions shall be paid from this fund only, and can be paid from no other, why, then, the necessity for declaring it in an appropriation bill? Simply the same necessity as exists for the declaration of this amendment. Another very excellent reason, Mr. Chairman, why the point of order will not lie against a declaratory measure of this kind, or a construction of existing law in an appropriation bill, may be found in a very recent act of this House. I have not forgotten, and I trust that gentlemen on the other side of the House have not forgotten, that on Monday last this House resolved itself into an attorney-general, into a court, into a law officer, and a judicial forum, and declared, or construed rather, a law——

Mr. PETERS. Interpreted.

Mr. CONGER. Interpreted, my friend from Kansas suggests, a law for a halting Executive—a law, Mr. Chairman, which to everybody else but this Executive was perfectly plain and conclusive.

In this amendment we are enacting no new legislation, but we are simply following these precedents and construing a very plain law for another executive officer who does not seem to understand the law, or, understanding it, fails hopelessly in its execution. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, the point of order is not well taken and can not be sustained.

Mr. FORAN rose.

Mr. PETERS. I would like to supplement the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa on the point of order by one or two suggestions, and then the gentleman from Ohio can reply to both of us.

Mr. FORAN. Very well.

Mr. PETERS. I simply want to supplement what the gentleman from Iowa has said by this statement.

If it is claimed at all that the law to which he refers has been repealed, no more, certainly, can be claimed than that it has been repealed by implication. Now, as you well know, it is a legal proposition adhered to by all courts that repeals by implication are not favored. But especially is that the case here where that implication, if there is an implication at all of repeal, has been limited by the act to which the gentleman from Iowa refers. Section 3 of the act of 1879 curtails the power of the limitation by declaring specifically that section 4709 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed and virtually says by implication that no other statute is repealed or no other section of the statute is repealed.

You will also observe another rule of law that where there is the express mention of one subject-matter, that in the construction of the law virtually excludes any other matter that is not expressed. Now, here in this law of 1879 is an express mention of the repeal of a certain section, which, in my judgment, according to all the rules of legal construction, precludes taking into consideration any other section that is not mentioned in it.

Those are the two points to which I desired to call attention.

Mr. FORAN. I would be more than gratified to allow a vote to be taken on this amendment, because I believe in the proposition as I further believe that it is the law now. And I believe the Commissioner of Pensions ought to so interpret existing statutes. But I can not permit these amendments which change existing law or which increase appropriations to go upon this bill, for the reason if one is permitted there will be a flood of them. This bill will be loaded down, and when it goes over to the Senate it may come back with the dependent-pension bill upon it.

I have no objection to the amendment except that I think the House ought to pass this appropriation bill and let these other measures relating to pensions stand on their own merits. I am willing to vote for them when they come up, and willing and anxious to vote to take them up at any time.

Mr. CONGER. I did not hear distinctly the gentleman's first sentence. Do I understand him to say that he believes this is the existing law?

Mr. FORAN. I do. I think if the argument of the gentleman from Iowa made to the chairman of the Committee of the Whole was made to the Commissioner of Pensions he would get a ruling from him in his favor.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If this is the law now, how will the amendment change existing law?

Mr. FORAN. It would be merely declaratory of existing law, and therefore unnecessary and useless.

Mr. PETERS. If this is the law now the only power which has jurisdiction to declare what the law is has placed a construction upon it which is in contradiction to a reasonable construction. Therefore it seems to me the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, declaring what the law is, is not any new creation of law, but is simply an interpretation of existing law, and therefore is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. FORAN. I am not aware this matter has ever been appealed from the Commissioner of Pensions to the Secretary of the Interior. Is the gentleman aware whether the Secretary has ever passed upon this matter?

Mr. PETERS. I do not know.

Mr. FORAN. I would be very willing to let a vote be taken on this amendment if the House will after that stand by the committee and prevent the admission of these amendments changing existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Ohio as withdrawing his point of order?

Mr. PETERS. I am as much opposed as any one can be to changing of existing laws by provisions in appropriation bills. But this is simply a declaration of what existing law is.

Mr. FORAN. I will reserve the point of order and let a vote be taken. That is, I wish to obtain the sense of the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman can not properly do that. If he withdraws the point of order this inevitably opens the door for a great number of amendments.

Mr. FORAN. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read clause 3 of Rule XXI.

The Clerk read as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriation for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read section 4702 of the Revised Statutes down to the point indicated.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4702. If any person embraced within the provisions of sections 4692 and 4693 has died since the 4th day of March, 1861, or hereafter dies, by reason of any wound, injury, or disease which, under the conditions and limitations of such sections, would have entitled him to an invalid pension had he been disabled, his widow, or, if there be no widow or in case of her death without payment to her of any part of the pension hereinafter mentioned, his child or children under sixteen years of age shall be entitled to receive the same pension as the husband or father would have been entitled to had he been totally disabled; to commence from the death of the husband or father, to continue to the widow during her widowhood, and to his child or children until they severally attain the age of sixteen years, and no longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER].

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That in all pensions to widows payment shall be made from the date of the death of the husband.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no hesitation in saying that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] is a mere declaration of existing law. The Chair has no doubt about the law as read by the Clerk, and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa is a mere declaration of it and does not change it in any respect. The Chair therefore feels impelled to overrule the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER].

Mr. CONGER. In support of this amendment I desire to have read a brief extract from the report of the Commissioner of Pensions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Our knowledge of the sacred relations of husband and wife makes us know that the last thought which often occurs to the widow is that of the pecuniary results of death. Moreover, there is a sense of delicacy which prevents a woman from immediately making application to be availed of the results of her husband's death, and so between cares, delicacy, and sometimes ignorance of right, long intervals elapse between the death of the husband and the filing of the application of the widow. In such cases as may hereafter arise it seems to me that the law should allow the commencement of the pension to date from the death of the husband where the other conditions required by the law are present.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, offered the following amendment, to come in after line 16:

And provided further, That all United States officers now authorized to administer oaths are hereby required and directed to administer any and all oaths required to be made by pensioners and their witnesses in the execution of their vouchers free of charge.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The chairman of the committee has no objection to that amendment, and I ask that it be adopted.

Mr. BLAND. If that amendment is adopted it may result in the pensioner never getting his money, because we are not to assume that anybody is going to administer these oaths as a matter of charity. If we are to adopt that amendment it ought to be coupled with another provision, that this service should be paid for by the Government. Somebody must pay for it, or the applicant will never get his pension.

Mr. McMILLIN. I reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. It is too late. The amendment has been discussed. Mr. Chairman, the law requires the pensioners every quarter to go with their vouchers and their witnesses and have their vouchers acknowledged. That imposes a tax on every pensioner of about $2 a year. Now, this amount can be saved to them by simply requiring the United States officers to perform this duty. I do not think it will interfere with the duties of these officials, and it is in the line of permitting the pensioner to obtain all the money which the Government says he is entitled to, by relieving him of this indirect tax.

Mr. McMILLIN. I withdraw the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. I send up an amendment to come in after the one just adopted.

The amendment was read, as follows:

And provided further, That no agent or attorney shall demand, receive, or be allowed any compensation in any claim for increase of pension on account of the increase of the disability for which the pension has been allowed, or for services rendered in securing the passage of any special act of Congress granting a pension or an increase of pension in any case that has been presented at the Pension Office or is allowable under the general pension laws.

Any agent, attorney, or other person instrumental in prosecuting any claim for increase of pension on account of the increase of the disability for which pension was allowed, or who has rendered services in procuring the passage of any special act of Congress granting a pension or an increase of pension in any case that has been presented at the Pension Office or is allowable under the general pension laws, who shall directly or indirectly contract for, demand, receive, or retain any compensation for such services, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every such offense, be fined not exceeding $500, or imprisoned not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. FORAN. I make the point of order against this amendment that it is new legislation.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have no intention of discussing the point of order. The amendment is clearly obnoxious to the rule in that respect, but inasmuch as this provision has been unanimously recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and would save to the soldiers about $400,000 annually of deductions heretofore made from their allowances, I had indulged the hope that the gentleman would not insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FORAN. Mr. Chairman, it is not fair for the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] to undertake to put me in that attitude. I might perhaps favor the proposition if it came up in the regular way, but I am compelled to make these points of order for the reasons I have already indicated.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fees and expenses of examining surgeons for services rendered within the fiscal year 1889, $1,000,000. And each member of each examining board shall, as now authorized by law, receive the sum of $2 for the examination of each applicant whenever five or a less number shall be examined on any one day, and $1 for the examination of each additional applicant on such day: Provided, That if twenty or more applicants appear on one day, no fewer than twenty shall, if practicable, be examined on said day, and that if fewer examinations be then made, twenty or more having appeared, then there shall be paid for the first examinations made on the next examination day the fee of $1 only until twenty examinations shall have been made.

Mr. GALLINGER. I make a point of order against the proviso of this paragraph that it changes existing law.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this is identical with a provision in the bill of last year, so that it is existing law.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; it is existing law. The rate of pay was fixed in the act passed three years ago.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] admit that this is the provision of the appropriation act now in force?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not examined to ascertain whether it is or not. My impression is that it is not a part of the statute law. What the last appropriation act may have provided on this point I do not know.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit that it has been recently decided in this House in a very effective manner that legislation upon an appropriation bill is valid.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no hesitation on that point, if he can ascertain what the fact is. [A pause.] The Clerk will read the provision embraced in the appropriation act for the present fiscal year.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That if twenty or more applicants appear on one day no fewer than twenty shall, if practicable, be examined on said day, and that if fewer examinations be then made, twenty or more having appeared, then there shall be paid for the first examinations made on the next examination day the fee of $1 only until twenty examinations shall have been made.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, upon the statement made I desire to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I move to amend the pending paragraph by striking out all after the word "dollars," in line 19, and inserting the following:

That for each and every examination, regardless of numbers, made by said examining surgeons, they shall receive the sum of $2.

Mr. FORAN. I make a point of order on that amendment. It changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that this amendment changes existing law. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, it does not appear to me that this amendment makes any change in the existing law, though it may possibly be regarded as a construction of the law. The present law provides that the members of the examining board shall receive a fee of $2 for the examination of each applicant whenever five or less shall be examined on any one day, and shall receive $1 for the examination of each additional applicant on the same day. But while there is provided a reduced fee for additional examinations over five, there is no provision for an increased fee in case less than five persons appear for examination. It appears to me that if the law is flexible in one direction, it ought to be so in another; it should not slide altogether one way, and to the detriment unjustly of these examining officers.

There is no provision that claim agents receiving more than five cases in any one day shall have their fees reduced. The claim agent is allowed so much for every case, whether the number of cases be one or a hundred. Why should not the physician be placed upon a similar scale? Certainly the vocation of the examining surgeon is just as honorable as that of the claim agent; the part performed by the physician in reference to the pensioning of the soldiers is just as creditable as the work done by the claim agent. Yet we are adopting regulations which discriminate against these professional gentlemen.

I have been spoken to on this subject by a great many physicians, who have informed me that there is a hardship in the present operation of the law. On some days there may not be more than one or two soldiers examined; yet the members of the board are obliged to abandon their business and attend to the examination, although it does not pay them to do so. On the other hand, when the number examined exceeds five, there is a reduction in the fee. It seems to me there should be either a corresponding increase when a smaller number than five are examined, or there should be a uniform fee for each examination, regardless of numbers.

I trust that before this Congress adjourns we shall pass a law which, possibly, may dispose of this whole question. There is now, I understand, before the committee a bill similar to one presented at the last session of Congress, which, if it had become a law, would have rendered unnecessary any provision such as I now propose. I refer to what is known as the "general pension law," the provisions of which would relieve our ex-soldiers of a great deal of present trouble and annoyance in connection with examinations.

I hope that the amendment I now propose will not be ruled out of order. There is to my mind no reason why it should be looked upon as involving new legislation. It has substantially been the law heretofore; but the construction placed upon the law has been different. I hope the amendment will be adopted, not only in justice to the surgeons, but for the benefit of those who apply for pensions, and who, when an examination is hastily made, may suffer great injustice.

Mr. FORAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the question.

Mr. FORAN. Only a word before the Chair decides. Mr. Chairman, at present the average fee per board for each examination is $4.80 or $1.60 for each surgeon. The scramble to get these appointments is almost unprecedented; and the surgeons ought not to complain of the present rate of pay. The adoption of this amendment would increase the annual expenses of the Government $193,000. The Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department has unanimously made an adverse report upon the bill providing for a uniform fee of $2.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman from Ohio state, if he can, what is the average annual pay of each surgeon for these weekly meetings?

Mr. FORAN. The pay averages about $900 annually for each surgeon.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana clearly changes existing law. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GAY. Page 2, line 31, I move to strike out "18" and insert "19;" and in line 12 to strike out "72" and insert "76."

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know whether the amendment is subject to the point of order, but I desire to reserve it.

Mr. GAY. Mr. Chairman, the object of the amendment is to do comparative justice and contribute to the convenience of the thousands of pensioners in the southwestern district of the United States east of the Rocky Mountains. In the States of Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Florida, and Alabama the Commissioner of Pensions desires to establish an additional agency. There are now, or were at the close of the last fiscal year, 8,081 pensioners, receiving an aggregate of $987,528 of pensions. All of that at present goes to the pension agent at Knoxville, Tenn., and the Commissioner of Pensions recommends the propriety, and with a view to the convenience of the pensioners in that part of the country, of establishing an additional pension agency at New Orleans.

The subcommittee of the Committee on Invalid Pensions granted him one additional agency, but the full committee concluded it was only necessary to retain the present number. Hence the necessity for my amendment, and I hope it will be agreed to. I think there is necessity for this additional agency at New Orleans, and I hope the gentleman in charge of the bill will consent to allow the amendment to be included in the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know what the view of the gentleman in charge of the bill may be to this particular matter, but I can state the view of the committee is that this amendment should not prevail. In the Forty-eighth Congress, at both sessions, the House decided that a reduction should take place from eighteen to twelve in the number of those agencies, but the Senate in both cases insisted on keeping the number at eighteen for reasons of their own; I do not know whether political or otherwise.

We are asked to reverse our attitude in this connection, on this side at least, and to increase the number to nineteen, as recommended by the Commissioner of Pensions, who also recommends increases in regard to surgeons and in other respects. I do not think his recommendation should weigh with this House, especially at this time when the law which we have passed gives to the President the authority which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The Chair is of the impression that the number of these agents is fixed by existing law. Is that so?

Mr. RANDALL. It is.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise to a point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. I do.

Mr. BLANCHARD. What is it?

Mr. RANDALL. I think the point of order is that the number of these agents is fixed by law, and, therefore, the amendment proposes a change of existing law.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, the object of the amendment offered by my colleague is to provide for an additional pension agent to be located at New Orleans. Under the present regulation locating these pension agencies, there is none provided for the payment of pensions in the Southwest nearer than Knoxville, Tenn. There are thousands of pensioners there, and the number has been increased since the passage of the bill placing on the pension-rolls the veterans of the Mexican war; there are thousands of people in the States of the Southwest who would largely be convenienced by the location of this pension agent at New Orleans. I understand this is in pursuance of the recommendation of the Commissioner of Pensions, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Is the question of order pending?

Mr. RANDALL. I have made the point of order, but have reserved it, willing to hear what could be said in favor of the amendment. The debate has been on the merits and on the point of order.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I wish to make a few observations myself.

Mr. FORAN. I desire to say to the House that I was in favor of this amendment in the committee, but I was out-voted, and of course accepted the situation with all the grace I could. I wish to state further to the House that I was mistaken in saying this amendment was subject to the point of order. It is not subject to it. The section of the Statutes which covers these agencies, section 4780, provides:

The President is authorized to establish agencies for the payment of pensions wherever, in his judgment, the public interests and the convenience of the pensioners require.

That is the general statute bearing upon the subject; so that all this bill would do, if we were to make this provision, would be to provide an appropriation for another agent. The Commissioner of Pensions, General Black, appeared before our committee and said that it was his purpose to establish an agency at New Orleans if the committee granted an appropriation necessary therefor.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Ohio has referred to the act which authorizes the President to establish these agencies. I have already stated that the President had this power wherever the public necessities demanded it; and the authority is given to him under the statute to make new pension districts. But I do say that he has not recommended any such increase as that contemplated here, and I desire to have that section of the act read in full.

The Clerk read as follows:

The President is authorized to establish agencies for the payment of pensions wherever, in his judgment, the public interests and the convenience of the pensioners require; but the number of pension agencies in any State or Territory shall in no case be increased hereafter so as to exceed three, and no agency shall be established in addition to those now existing in any State or Territory in which the whole amount of pensions paid during the fiscal year next preceding shall not have exceeded the sum of $500,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit that these pensions are mostly paid by drafts. Further, if there was necessity for an increased number of agencies the President has the power already to establish them. The President has made no such recommendation upon the subject, and this, in my judgment, is not a good time to reverse the action of the House of Representatives taken in the Forty-eighth Congress in this connection, when we sought to decrease the number from eighteen to twelve. This is a proposition for an increase.

That is all I desire to say upon the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania insist upon the point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I am somewhat like the gentleman from Ohio—in a little doubt as to whether it is subject to the point of order. I prefer to let the committee act upon it on its merits, and shall not insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Is it in order now to move an amendment to the pending amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Then I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out "eighteen," in line 31 of the bill, and inserting "twenty;" and add "one to be located at Augusta, Me."

Mr. FORAN. One word only in reference to this amendment.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to hear the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Very well.

Mr. FORAN. I only wish to state that the latter portion of the amendment is clearly susceptible to the point of order.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that I make that amendment because a pension agency was recently established there, and I think that more than $500,000 are paid in pensions. At any rate a very large sum of money was paid out in pensions; and now all the pensioners from the State are compelled to go to New Hampshire for payment, there being no pension agency at all in the State of Maine. While it is true that these pensions are paid by draft, as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, yet it is at the same time a great inconvenience to the pensioners.

I have no objection whatever to the amendment offered by the gentleman on the other side of the House, for the establishment of an agency at New Orleans. I think there ought to be one established there, if, as alleged, the pensioners from that region have to go all the way to Knoxville to be paid; but, for the same reason, this should be established in Maine, and I offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Louisiana did not locate the agency, and the Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order against the amendment of the gentleman from Maine, for the reason that it does locate the agency.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, when our Committee on Appropriations investigated this subject we had the Commissioner of Pensions, General Black, before us, and every member of the committee desired to meet the wants of the country by having a sufficient number of pension agents. We gave the matter thorough consideration, and every member of the committee was satisfied that the present number is fully sufficient.

The average number of pensioners paid at the various agencies throughout the country is 22,555. There is now a pension agency at Knoxville, Tenn., and one at Louisville, Ky., to accommodate the Southern pensioners. At the Knoxville agency there are only 18,000 pensioners paid and at the Louisville only 10,733. Combining the two agencies the average is only 14,370, which is about 8,000 less than the average at the pension agencies generally throughout the country; showing that the accommodation for that country is absolutely and amply sufficient and far beyond the average.

You take the agency at Columbus and it pays there 39,126 soldiers, as shown by the Commissioner's report. The agency at Chicago pays 35,000 soldiers; at Indianapolis, 34,000; and the one at Topeka, 29,000; and so on of all the agencies, giving an average of over 22,000, taking all into account, and the lowest of any of them is the one I have indicated at Knoxville, and the one at Louisville, which is for the accommodation of the pensioners of the South. So we found no reason whatever in committee for giving the increase asked for here, and reported against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN].

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I offered that merely to test the question. I now withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GAY].

Mr. GAY. Mr. Chairman, in support of that amendment I desire to say——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Louisiana that under the rule debate upon the amendment is exhausted.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. GAY, and the Chair declared that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 77.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GAY. Mr. Speaker, I send an amendment to the desk, which I desire to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 32, after the word "each," insert "one of whom to be located at New Orleans, La."

Mr. FORAN. I make the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order. The amendment clearly changes existing law.

Mr. GAY. This is intended to call the attention of the President to an expression of the House that there should be a consolidation of some of these agencies with the one at New Orleans.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making a suggestion to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]. He has well said that in the Forty-eighth Congress this House undertook to decrease the number of these agencies to twelve.

Mr. RANDALL. At both sessions.

Mr. CANNON. At both sessions, after full discussion; and very wisely, it seems to me. In fact, I think the number might be decreased to one, and that one located in Washington, because these pensions are paid by checks anyhow. But I suggest to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], that if the Fiftieth Congress should now make the reduction from eighteen to twelve and send it to the Senate it is possible that that body might be in a better humor to concur. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. I made an honorable compromise with myself on that subject, and thought I would not disturb it, but if the proposition is presented to reduce the number to twelve I will cheerfully vote for it, because I think now, as I thought then, that twelve is a sufficient number.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Can the gentleman tell us what is the necessity of having any agency but this one in Washington?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman, as a Representative here, can answer that as well as I can.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I like to get instruction from older members.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the salaries of eighteen agents for the payment of pensions, at $4,000 each, $72,000.

For clerk-hire, $170,000: Provided, That the amount of clerk-hire for each agency shall be apportioned as nearly as practicable in proportion to the number of pensioners paid at each agency.

Mr. FORAN. Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the committee I offer the amendment which I send to the desk:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 34, amend by striking out "seventy" and inserting "seventy-eight;" so as to make it read "$178,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fuel, $750.

For lights, $750.

For stationery and other necessary expenses, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, $12,000.

Mr. FORAN. On behalf of the committee I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 41, strike out "twelve" and insert "fifteen."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rents, $20,000. And the Secretary of the Treasury, where possible, shall cause suitable rooms to be set apart in the public buildings under his control in cities where pension agencies are located, which shall be acceptable to the Secretary of the Interior, for the use and occupancy of the said agencies respectively.

Mr. FORAN. On behalf of the committee I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 3, line 44, strike out the words "where possible."

The amendment was agreed to.

The following amendments, offered by Mr. FORAN on behalf of the committee, were agreed to:

Line 43, amend by striking out "$20,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$18,200."

Also add at the end of line 48 the following:

And the Secretary of the Interior shall designate and provide suitable rooms in the Pension Building for the use and occupation of the pension agent at Washington, D. C., and the office of said agent shall be removed therein.

Mr. FORAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise and report the bills and amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HATCH, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 5445) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report it back to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. FORAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question upon the amendments and upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole. Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendment? If not, the vote will be taken upon them in gross.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. FORAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire whether it is in order to call up the bill first in order?

The SPEAKER. The bills come up in the order in which they stand, and will be considered in that order unless passed over by the House.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Then I wish to say that I shall endeavor to call up the bill making appropriations for the District of Columbia.

The motion to go into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6833) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. With the consent, as I understand, of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I ask that this bill be passed over.

Mr. SOWDEN and others objected.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. MCCREARY. As I understand, the proposition is to pass over the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill. I wish to say that the chairman of that committee is to-day absent, but will be here on Monday. We agreed that the bill be passed over. It does not lose its position on the Calendar. I hope, therefore, my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] will withdraw his objection.

Mr. SOWDEN. Upon the statement of the gentleman I withdraw the objection.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I withdraw the motion that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the title of the next bill in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8989) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask that this bill be passed over.

Mr. SOWDEN. I object.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. No motion is necessary. Objection being made to passing the bill over, the committee rises, pursuant to the rule, in order that the House may determine the question.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having reached House bill 8989, and objection being made to passing it over, the question was reported to the House for its decision.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House direct the Committee of the Whole to pass over the bill for the present?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I hope the gentleman from Louisiana will not antagonize this bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 73, noes 8.

Mr. SOWDEN. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SOWDEN and Mr. BLANCHARD were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 156, noes 9.

So the House decided to direct the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union that the House bill 8989 be passed over.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. House bill 8989 having been passed over by order of the House, the Clerk will read the title of the next bill in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9050) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. On behalf of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, I desire to ask that the reading of the bill by paragraphs be now commenced, without any general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request to dispense with the first reading of the bill?

Mr. KERR and Mr. SOWDEN objected.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. NELSON (interrupting the reading). I ask that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, my objection was to cutting off discussion; I did not intend to insist that the bill be read at length.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to dispensing with the first reading of the bill?

Mr. SOWDEN. I renew the objection.

The Clerk resumed the reading.

Mr. NELSON (interrupting the reading). I again ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, not, however, to cut off debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] renews the request that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [A pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, why does not the Clerk proceed with the reading of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asked unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading, and there was no objection.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, I had objected and did not withdraw the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, after putting the request, hesitated and looked at the gentleman from Pennsylvania before announcing the result.

Mr. SOWDEN. The Chair must have observed that at the time I was entirely surrounded by gentlemen who were endeavoring to have me withdraw my objection; so that what happened in the meanwhile was entirely lost to me, and thus an undue advantage was taken. I propose that this bill shall be read; that no trick shall be successfully practiced upon me and the House in this manner.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state——

Mr. BAKER, of New York. May I put a question to the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. In one moment. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Minnesota rose and renewed the request that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. The request was stated to the House. The Chair hesitated before announcing the result, and looked toward the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SOWDEN. The very gentleman that made the motion came here and asked me to withdraw my objection, and I told him that I could not do it; and it now seems that he went back to his seat and sought an undue advantage by making the motion when I was surrounded by members, as already stated, and could not possibly have seen nor heard what was going on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that a conference having been had with the gentleman from Pennsylvania in the presence of the House, the Chair might naturally suppose that the objection had been withdrawn; but in order that there might be——

Mr. SOWDEN. How could any one else withdraw my objection or defeat its operation by a renewal of the motion for unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the bill under the circumstances stated?

The CHAIRMAN. In order that there might be no mistake about the matter, the Chair, when stating the request to the House, looked toward the gentleman.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, I contend that the undue advantage sought to be taken can not be successfully practiced. After objection had been made by myself, and the Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill, what right had the gentleman from Minnesota or anybody else to assume that my objection was withdrawn?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that pending the reading of a bill it is not at all unusual for a second request of this kind to be made after the first has been objected to. It occurs frequently. It is nothing unusual.

The Chair has no desire to take any advantage of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. He thinks he will be sustained in that statement by the observation of the House.

Mr. PERKINS. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. SOWDEN. I beg to differ with the Chair. Undue advantage was taken. I was so surrounded that the Chair could not see me and I could not see the Chair. If the Chair was looking in my direction for the purpose of seeing whether I would renew my objection I did not observe it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair certainly saw the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SOWDEN. I state now, Mr. Chairman, that I did not hear the Chair and did not hear the renewal of the motion; and under these circumstances I think I am entitled to be heard. No undue advantage ought to be obtained in a deliberative body in this way, and therefore I renew my objection.

Mr. BLANCHARD. It is too late.

Mr. SOWDEN. It is not too late to do that which is right. It is never too late to prevent the consummation of a trick. Here we have a repetition, Mr. Chairman, of the same tactics that were sought to be perpetrated on the House a few days ago when an attempt was made to force this very bill through under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SOWDEN. No, sir; I renew my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is no disposition on his part, and he thinks there is none on the part of the House, to take any undue advantage of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Under the circumstances the Chair will therefore recognize the gentleman's objection, as it will result only in the loss of an hour or so in the reading of the bill.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not insist upon the reading of this bill entirely through, as it will have to be read by sections for amendment. [Cries of "Regular order!"] It will save considerable time, as well as save the clerks, by not insisting upon the objection. In the interest of the clerks I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw his objection.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to make a statement. I did go over to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and request him to withdraw his objection. I first requested the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] to withdraw his objection, which he did. Then I went over and asked the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw his objection, and I left several gentlemen with him who were trying to convert him. They were laboring with him for that purpose, but he seems not to have been converted. As he now seems to think there was some effort to impose a trick upon him, I ask the privilege of the House to withdraw my request.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I hope in the interest of the clerks the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw his objection, as the bill will have to be read by paragraphs——

Mr. SOWDEN. As I understand the bill has already been read in full, and will now be read by paragraphs for amendment, and as my rights have been recognized, I will withdraw my objection. [Applause.] All I desire is that we proceed regularly, so that this important piece of legislation may be carefully and intelligently considered.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask the bill be taken up and read by paragraphs for amendment; and that by unanimous consent the general debate be closed, and that the debate hereafter shall proceed under the five-minute rule.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understood this bill was to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is being read.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I know that, but it was to be read in its entirety.

The CHAIRMAN. It is being read now by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But I understood the bill was to be read in its entirety, and that was the cause of all this quarrel.

The CHAIRMAN. The objection was withdrawn, and the bill is now being read by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Hingham, Mass.: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move to add the following:

Any part of which may, in the discretion of the engineer in charge, be applied to straighten the channel from the wharf to the end of Sarah's Island.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill until line 104 was reached.

Mr. BRYCE. Mr. Chairman, in consideration of the fact that most of the New York members are absent attending the funeral of the late Senator Conkling, I ask unanimous consent that these items of the bill referring to New York be passed over informally, to be returned to hereafter.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. You have reference to the city of New York?

Mr. BRYCE. Yes, to the city.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman indicate the lines to which the request applies?

Mr. BRYCE. I have reference now specially to lines 104 and 105.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Objection was made.

Mr. NUTTING. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman from New York permit me a moment? I understand this request of the gentleman from New York is made on account of the absence of quite a number of the New York delegation who are specially interested in these appropriations for New York City and vicinity, and who are now absent attending the obsequies of Mr. Conkling; and he therefore asks only that these be passed over for the present, to be returned to hereafter. If the gentleman from New York has no objection, I wish to state that there is no objection on my part to acceding to the request.

Mr. NUTTING. I understand the gentleman to ask only that this item improving Buttermilk Channel, embraced in lines 104 and 105, be passed over. It should also include the item in regard to Gowanus Bay.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If the gentleman will allow me, I understand the request refers to those items relating to New York City and its immediate vicinity, for instance, this Buttermilk Channel improvement, Hell Gate Channel, improvements of the East and Harlem Rivers, Gowanus Bay, and Sheepshead Bay.

Mr. NUTTING. I understand. So far as I am concerned I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York that these several items be passed over informally for the present?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving breakwater at Rouse's Point.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Lines 102 and 103, as I understand it, are not included in the request of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I will forego for the present offering any amendment to lines 102 and 103, relating to the harbor of Buffalo, as I will go to the body which first put in the appropriation, the Senate of the United States, and endeavor to have an amendment made there.

The CHAIRMAN. That portion of the bill is regarded as disposed of.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Charlotte, N. Y.: Continuing improvement, $25,000.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk, to come in at this point.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 113, strike out the words "twenty-five thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "making necessary renewals of piers where broken or destroyed by the storms of the past year; for removal of the old guide piles; for necessary dredging, and for contingencies, as recommended, $67,800.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. This amendment is in accordance with the recommendation of the local engineer. The Engineer-in-Chief recommended an appropriation of $25,000 for continuing the work for the ensuing year, and that the amount could be made available and expended to advantage. The local engineer—I should say first in all fairness to the committee that they reported the whole amount recommended by the Chief Engineer—but the local engineer in his report in relation to it states in a letter which I have before me, bearing date of March 29, and which I shall ask consent to incorporate in full in my remarks, refers to this harbor, and says that it is absolutely necessary for the proper prosecution of the work of improvement and for the completion of it that the items recommended by him should be appropriated. I think the Engineer-in-Chief inadvertently recommended only $25,000, although he writes a letter recently, stating that he thought $25,000 was all that could be profitably expended during the ensuing year. He also states, however, that the whole amount recommended by the local engineer may be profitably employed in improvement and repairs necessary for this harbor.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the local engineer recommends for the ensuing year as follows: For necessary repairs, $30,000. The exigency requiring this appropriation arises from the fact that during the past two seasons in consequence of storms the damage to the piers of this harbor has been very great, and hence it is necessary that the amount asked for and recommended by the local engineer, namely, $30,000, should be appropriated. He also recommends for the removal of certain guide piles $1,500, and for necessary dredging $25,000. The report of the local engineer shows that during the past season (and I may say that I have seen this daily myself, having spent my summers there for some time past) in many cases vessels coming out of this harbor of Charlotte have stuck upon the sand at the mouth of the harbor, and hence that this dredging is absolutely necessary.

This harbor has contributed to the Treasury in the past year a net revenue of about $80,000. The imports during the year were $499,000 and over.

Mr. KERR. What were the receipts of revenue there?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. The receipts of imports amounted to $499,798.

Mr. KERR. That was not the customs receipts?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Oh, no; the total imports.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. The net revenues amounted to $80,450.61. The total tonnage was 149,535 of arrivals and 146,181 of departures. The total number of vessels arriving 652, and departure 646. The business is exceedingly large. We have large lumber interests there and blast furnaces, extensive coal interests, shipping from the Pennsylvania mines and through a coal chute to vessels transporting it to the Canadian ports and to ports upon the south shore of Lake Ontario, shipping in this way immense quantities of coal from that harbor.

The demands of this district are so great and it is so strongly recommended by the local engineer as an appropriation for the chief port upon the south shore of Lake Ontario that I feel confident in asserting that if the amount had been indorsed by the Chief of Engineers there would have been no question about its allowance. The full amount recommended by the Chief of Engineers was allowed, and the only objection in the minds of the committee, I apprehend, is to having any change made in the item recommended by him.

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE, Oswego, N. Y., March 29, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 27th instant, a copy of which is herewith returned in accordance with your request.

The sum of $25,000 has so little relation with my recommendations that I have no idea whether it is intended to leave out definite items or to make a general reduction. There will be available at the end of this month $7,091.65, which gives a total a little less than two-thirds the amount of the estimated needs, taking account of the work done. Of the importance of this work there is little need that I should write you. The opinion which I have put on record (with the reasons therefor) in my report that Charlotte has better prospects than any other American port on Lake Ontario would make me especially regret any failure in this appropriation. Referring to my letter of January 6, 1887, the condition therein described is modified by the renewal in autumn of 1887 of 900 feet of the superstructure of east pier, as reported in my annual report, and by the renewal since the date of that report of 1,490 feet of that of the west pier.

Of the damage by storms during the winter of 1887–'88, a breach in the west face of the west pier 45 feet by 4 feet was repaired in connection with renewal of superstructure on that pier, and a considerable loss of stone from the east pier has also been repaired. The repairs made since my annual report are included in the estimate presented therein, and are paid for from the amount therein reported on hand, so that as regards the amount of money now needed I offer nothing which is not in my report. The work which has been done has cost about what it was estimated to cost, and both the amount of damage by storms and the progress of the work go to confirm my estimates. There is less work now needed and there is less money on hand; the amount of money really needed to be appropriated for the prosecution of the work as wise economy calls for is the same now as then.

With less than the amount estimated, either the piers can not have the full renewal which they need, and the expensive method of petty patch-work with no permanent result to show for it must be adopted, or else no reserve can be held for dredging, and if the season should be one of low water the coal merchants must pay Welland Canal rates on their upper-lake shipments without being able to load in their own harbor for the full depth of the Welland Canal. The immediate saving which enters into either of these results can hardly be to the lasting profit of the United States.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CARL F. PALFREY,
Captain of Engineers.

Hon. CHARLES S. BAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Annual report for fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, for improving harbor at Charlotte, N. Y.

Object.—To secure a navigable channel at the mouth of the Genesee River, on Lake Ontario.

Project.—The original project adopted in 1829, and executed between that date and 1834, was to obtain a channel 480 feet wide and 12 feet deep, formed and protected by parallel piers extending to deep water of the lake.

The present project, adopted in 1881, is to secure and maintain, by pier extension and dredging, a channel of navigable width and 15 feet depth at extreme low water.

No dredging has heretofore been done, the channel having been formed and kept open by the current of the Genesee River.

Present works—First. West pier, 3,173 feet of crib work; being 230 feet, 10 feet wide, 805 feet with substructure 20 feet wide and superstructure 10 feet wide; cribs built prior to 1834, 10-foot superstructure built 1864, decayed to water-level; then 1,835 feet, 20 feet wide, cribs built in 1829-'34; superstructure rebuilt in 1864-'72, in need of renewal (this includes the old pier head); 303 feet, 20 feet wide, built in 1883-'84; in good condition.

Second. East pier, 3,323 feet of crib work; being 420 feet cribs, 20 feet wide, built in 1829-'34, and superstructure not renewed since that time, now under water; then 646 feet of cribs, 20 feet wide, with superstructure of same width; cribs built in 1828-'34; and superstructure renewed in 1864-'67; then 800 feet, cribs 20 feet wide, built in 1828-'34; with superstructure 20 feet wide, renewed in 1886; then 1,004 feet of cribs 20 feet wide, built in 1828-'34, with superstructure renewed 1868-'70; then 303 feet cribs and superstructure, 20 feet wide, all built in 1883-'84; then 150½ feet cribs and superstructure, 20 feet wide, built in 1884-'85. All the superstructure needs renewal except those parts above described as built since 1883.

Channel.—The present channel has a least width of 150 feet, with 13 feet depth at zero of gauge.

Operations.—The rebuilding of 800 linear feet of superstructure of east pier near present shore line, wrecked by storm in spring of 1886. This work was carried on subject to interruption by storm and ice. Owing to difficulty in obtaining stone much of that used in filling the new work was taken from the dilapidated portions of the pier well inside the present shore-line. The work was done by hired labor and materials purchased in open market, after advertisement by circular.

Operations closed December 22, 1886; they will be resumed when the stage of water permits. The present stage is 2½ feet above the level at which work must begin.

Gauge readings of water-level have been kept up at Charlotte three times daily during the year.

Remarks.—At this port, since the commencement of work in 1829, the shore-line has advanced against the west pier about 1,100 feet, against the east pier about 700. The land so formed on the west side has been improved and cultivated by the Ontario Beach Improvement Company, who have rebuilt along their river front the superstructure of about 500 feet of the old pier. Of the land formed on the east side a plat was given to the United States Life-Saving Service for their station, and they are now rebuilding superstructure on their river front, as well as protecting their lake front against encroachment by waves. The portions of the old pier occupied and those inshore therefrom are no longer essential to the harbor works.

In estimating repairs required I have, therefore, included only the portions lakeward from the new work mentioned. The old guide-piles (303) along the channel face of the piers, now decayed and broken to a little below water-level, have become a serious damage. Unless the water-level should be higher than usual during this season it will be necessary to do a considerable amount of dredging outside the entrance. The larger coal steamers were barely floated at the close of last season.

By its position on the lake, near the middle of the south shore, Charlotte has greater advantages in length of haul over the railroad lines which pass around the lake than any other port. As the lake port of Rochester (which city is the seat of all its business), it has also a wider railroad connection than any other port. It is also the only port having a direct communication with the principal mining regions of bituminous coal and making large shipments of that product. A small quantity is shipped from Great Sodus. The trade in this article extends as far east as Montreal. From its railroad advantages, its favorable position on the lake as regards length of run in doubtful weather, and its present control of bituminous coal shipments, I consider Charlotte to have the best prospects of all the American ports on lake Ontario, and the completion and maintenance of its harbor works to promise material benefit to commerce.

I can not but regard the comparative statistics, presented as required, as misleading. The tonnage of 1881 was exceptionally large. A full examination of the statistics of the years past shows a general increase, which is also observable in 1882-'87.

Recommendation: At this harbor I have the honor to recommend, first, maintenance of existing piers, lake sections, as above described; second, removal of decayed guide-piles; third, dredging to 15 feet at extreme low water, both between piers and across outer bar.

CARL F. PALFREY,
Captain of Engineers.

I received yesterday your telegram of that date to my predecessor, Captain Maguire, relating to public works at Charlotte, N. Y., and replied to it as follows:

"Superstructure decayed and damaged: West pier, 1,900 feet, including 40 feet breached; east pier, 1,687 feet, including 276 feet breached, of which 800 feet has been repaired. Needed: For repairs, $35,000; reserve for dredging if necessary, $10,000; contingencies, $10,000; total, $55,000; on hand for next season, $20,000."

Stating more fully the needs: The sections of superstructure referred to as decayed and damaged have been annually reported by my predecessors for several years past, as calling for immediate renewal. It has decayed from age, and, for the security of advantages to commerce already gained, should have been renewed long ago.

As soon as money was available and material could be collected I started work on the east pier which was in the worse condition. On December 22 the removal of 800 feet was completed, and work was closed, having, as I need hardly tell you, been carried on with special difficulty at this season. I think both piers will stand the winter, though the west is old and weak.

The money now available will put the west pier in fair but not in good condition, provided no dredging is needed in the spring. The last season was one of unusually high water and the coal-vessels were barely floated. A little lower water, with ordinary loading, would make dredging necessary, and then no repairs, of such thoroughness as to be economical, would be possible. It is of no use to bolt sound timbers to rotten ones, nor is it of much more to put timbers which ought to last ten or fifteen years into a work which may barely hold together two or three.

But the money now available can only be used for needed renewal, provided there is an appropriation for the next fiscal year. Otherwise such reserves must be kept on hand to meet the probable breaches by autumn gales that little or no general renewal of superstructure would be possible. In other words, if there is not money enough to make the whole pier sound and strong, I must wait for the storm to make a breach and then patch that. From the engineering point of view this policy is not economical. If the appropriation is not enough for the renewal of superstructure as per my telegram, there is little doubt that breaches will occur, the channel suffer, and the final cost of repair be greater.

I need hardly urge upon you the importance of a work in which you have already shown interest. I will mention, however, that of ports on the south shore of Lake Ontario (I write without knowledge of Cape Vincent) Charlotte is the second in its commerce, and shows an increase, while the majority of Ontario ports are on the decline.

I have written, in direct answer to your inquiry, of repairs and of the maintenance of present depth. I assume that the project of pier extension and of deepening the channel to 15 feet is known to you. The published reports of my predecessors are easily obtainable from the office of the Chief of Engineers.

If I can be of further service to you in this matter, command me.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CARL F. PALFREY,
Captain of Engineers.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York proposes to increase the appropriation for the harbor of Charlotte from $25,000, as it stands in the bill, to $68,700. That is a large increase. I will state to the Committee of the Whole that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors when considering the Charlotte Harbor gave it every dollar that the Chief of Engineers asked for as the amount that could be properly expended in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889. However, Mr. Chairman, the committee at the request of the gentleman from New York addressed a communication to the Chief of Engineers and asked his idea touching the amount appropriated for the harbor at Charlotte. His reply I hold in my hand and I send it to the Clerk's desk to be read, because I believe it to be a conclusive answer to the argument of the gentleman from New York when he states there is no exigency existing why this increase should be made.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY.
Washington, D. C., April 3, 1888.

SIR: In reply to your letter of yesterday's date, I beg leave to state that in submitting an estimate of $25,000 as the amount that could be profitably expended at Charlotte Harbor, New York, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, the recommendations of the officer in charge of the work were duly considered, which were:

1. The maintenance of existing piers;
2. The removal of decayed guide-piles; and
3. Dredging to 15 feet at extreme low water.

There was a balance on hand at the beginning of the present fiscal year of $20,739.38; of this amount there has been expended to date in repairs to existing works $13,671.80, leaving a balance of $7,067.58 still applicable to the maintenance of existing piers and the removal of the decayed guide-piles.

The $25,000 asked for is to be applied, as far as possible, to dredging operations during the next fiscal year, and although the full amount of the estimate of $67,800 made by the officer in charge could be expended to advantage during the next fiscal year, should it be the pleasure of Congress to grant it, it should be borne in mind that in the preparation of these estimates the requirements of the whole service of rivers and harbors were taken into consideration, and that there is no special urgency existing in the condition of this harbor that would require an apportionment of public funds in excess of the numerous similar instances existing of reduction, for public reasons, of estimates for funds that might otherwise be expended to advantage.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. C. DUANE,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

Hon. N. C. BLANCHARD,
Chairman Committee on Rivers and Harbors,
United States House of Representatives.

Mr. BLANCHARD. That letter, I submit, shows that the appropriation of $25,000 for the harbor of Charlotte, which is the full amount the Chief of Engineers asked for, is sufficient to meet the exigencies of repairs at that harbor and to continue the work of improvement there. I submit, therefore, that the amendment presented by the gentleman from New York ought not to be adopted.

Mr. BAKER, of New York, rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I move to strike out the last word, and yield my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER].

Mr. BAKER, of New York. In reply to my friend from Louisiana I beg to emphasize that portion of the letter of the Chief of Engineers which states:

The $25,000 asked for is to be applied, as far as possible, to dredging operations during the next fiscal year, and although the full amount of the estimate of $67,800 made by the officer in charge could be expended to advantage during the next fiscal year should it be the pleasure of Congress to grant it, etc.

Now, as a business proposition, recognizing the fact that this harbor turns into the Treasury two or three times the amount asked for in this amendment, it seems to me there should be no hesitation on the part of the House in following the recommendation of the local engineer, who has examined the necessities of this harbor, has been on the ground, and knows all about them, while the Chief of Engineers knows nothing about them. He takes the recommendations of the local engineers and arbitrarily cuts them down. He has done so in this case. The committee have wisely under their rule given all they could of the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers.

Now, I ask, in the interest of commerce and justice to this harbor, which is the second on the south shore of Lake Ontario, that the amount recommended by the local engineer as necessary, not only for the dredging to be carried on under the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, but for the necessary repairs in consequence of the devastating storms of the past winter and the winter before, shall be granted.

This is a matter of business. We are not asking to have money from the Treasury put into a new enterprise, but it is to consummate, complete, and carry on to perfection the work now in progress.

Mr. SOWDEN. Will the gentleman allow me one word?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOWDEN. I understand the Chief of Engineers recommends the amount appropriated by the bill through the committee, and states that that amount only can be profitably expended—that is to say, $25,000—within the next fiscal year. Is that true?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for the suggestion. The Chief of Engineers does not say that that amount only can be profitably expended. He says:

And although the full amount of the estimate of $67,800 made by the officers in charge could be expended to advantage during the next fiscal year, should it be the pleasure of Congress to grant it—

And he goes on to say that in view of the demands of other localities, where new enterprises, perhaps, are being undertaken, there is not a special urgency existing in this case.

Mr. SOWDEN. But the letter submitted by the chairman of the committee says——

Mr. BAKER, of New York. It is that letter from which I have just been reading. I will read the balance of the sentence in the words of the letter of the Chief of Engineers:

It should be borne in mind that in the preparation of these estimates the requirements of the whole service of rivers and harbors were taken into consideration, and that there is no special urgency existing in the condition of this harbor that would require an apportionment of public funds in excess of the numerous similar instances existing of reduction, for public reasons, of estimates for funds that might otherwise be expended to advantage.

Mr. SOWDEN. What does he say with reference to the expenditure of the $25,000?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Just as I read it, that—

The $25,000 asked for is to be applied, as far as possible, to dredging operations during the next fiscal year, and although the full amount of the estimate of $67,800 made by the officer in charge could be expended to advantage during the next fiscal year.

Mr. SOWDEN. Does he not also state somewhere in that letter that the $25,000 appropriated in this bill is all that could be profitably expended on that work this year?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. He does not state that or anything like it in substance or effect.

This appropriation has been urgently recommended by the Rochester Chamber of Commerce. Their memorial was referred to that committee. It is not only a matter of importance to the city of Rochester, but to the State of New York and to the commerce of the Union generally.

I wish also to call attention to the fact that the last river and harbor bill, which failed to pass at the last Congress, carried $35,000, which was an increase over this.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. BAKER, of New York, and it was rejected—ayes 43, noes 81.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. No quorum. [Cries of "No!" "No!" "Do not do that!"]

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Well, Mr. Chairman, I think it is rather cruel, but at the instance of our friends on the other side I withdraw the point.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Dunkirk, N. Y.: Continuing improvement, $15,000.
Improving harbor at Flushing Bay, New York: Continuing improvement, $15,000.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I presume, sir, that not a dozen members of the House were aware of any intention to bring this bill up to-day. There are certainly absent from the House at this time quite a number of members who are known to be opposed to this bill. I was called out myself a few moments ago, and on my return found pending an objection to dispensing with the reading of the bill. I heard the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] complaining that undue advantage had been taken of him to get this bill put in a more forward stage than it was entitled to. The Chairman permitted the gentleman's objection to stand because it was the desire of the Chair to avoid any appearance of taking advantage of the House. I understood, and I presume most members of the House understood, that that decision required the reading of the bill to be proceeded with, but to my surprise I learned a few moments later that the difficulty had been composed and that the bill had been "railroaded" through all the preliminary stages; that all the preliminary debate had been waived under the rules, and that we were launched upon the consideration of the bill by paragraphs. Now, there must be some object in this precipitancy.

Several MEMBERS. There is—to pass the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. To pass the bill, undoubtedly, and the gentlemen who have furnished that reason are probably the gentlemen who are particularly interested in the passage of the bill.

Mr. FARQUHAR. They are.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I propose now to suggest some reasons why those gentlemen are so anxious to have this bill passed. It is a very remarkable measure in many of its aspects. Here is a bill appropriating almost $20,000,000 of the public money, and yet a House which has been so jealous of appropriations that it has repeatedly spent hours in debating measures involving a few thousand dollars rushes to the discussion—not to the discussion but to the passage—of this bill without a single word of explanation on the part of anybody as to its character, or as to the reasons which have actuated some of its most remarkable provisions, without any argument being offered to the House or the country why we should add $20,000,000 to the appropriations of this Congress for the purposes provided for in this bill; $20,000,000 in the aggregate, to be applied for various works upon rivers and harbors in behalf of which gentlemen on that committee have been lobbying and beseeching members in this House the past week or ten days to consent that the bill should be passed under a suspension of the rules. Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, the special zeal of the gentlemen who form the personnel of that very able, and certainly, so far as this bill is concerned, very efficient, Committee on Rivers and Harbors is explained by the fact that out of the aggregate of about twenty millions they have appropriated to the States which they represent the modest sum of $13,326,000. That statement, sir, is inside of the limit, because there are various general improvements which also are for the benefit of the States represented by those gentlemen. Those appropriations are not included in these figures, but to their own States they have appropriated nearly fourteen millions out of the twenty millions carried by this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] has expired.

Mr. KEAN. I renew the amendment, Mr. Chairman, and yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE].

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, there is a remarkable geographical distribution in this bill. The figures which I give are the result of a very hasty and cursory examination, but such an examination as I have been able to give the bill satisfies me that the more it is examined the more its beauties will be developed. I find that the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and South Carolina, twelve States, receive by direct appropriation an amount which, added to the amounts that will be expended within their limits on the Lower Mississippi River, aggregates $7,831,000. Here are twelve of the States of this Union, less than one-third of the number, which receive that large amount of money, and many of them are States with little or no seacoast States in which these appropriations are to be expended for the improvement of rivers, creeks, and minor streams in the interior. I find on examination that the entire appropriation for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of New England, with its great extent of coast line, amounting to thousands of miles, with its innumerable harbors and estuaries, and with its enormous commerce, is the magnificent sum of $908,000; while there is more than $1,000,000 appropriated for one or two harbors in the single State of Texas.

I find, Mr. Chairman, while, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] stated the other day with such emphasis and force, the great imperial harbor of our national coast, the harbor of New York, has been almost entirely neglected in these appropriations, yet for two rivers, the Missouri and the Mississippi, the appropriations aggregate nearly five millions of dollars.

Mr. Chairman, I have not time in this five-minute debate to go into an elaborate analysis of this remarkable bill. As the bill progresses I propose to call attention to some of the details of its provisions. At the outset of its consideration, in default of any general discussion of a measure involving this enormous amount of expenditure, I have deemed it my duty to call attention to these remarkable features of this appropriation bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors did not desire to occupy the valuable time of the House in any general discussion of this bill. We preferred results to "buncombe." In order to economize time and to make as much progress as possible, we desire to go at once into the consideration of the bill by paragraphs.

Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] rises and states that the great harbor of New York has received in this bill what he is pleased to term a "miserable pittance," I must say to him that I fear he has not read either the bill or the report. If he had read the report which I hold in my hand it would have shown to him, as it has shown to every one who has read it, that there is in the bill an aggregate for the harbor of New York of $835,000, and for the Empire State of New York appropriations, all told, amounting to more than $1,500,000. And when the gentleman criticises the appropriations made in this bill for the New England States I will inform him that that section of country had upon the Committee on Rivers and Harbors a gentleman whose fidelity and ability in the discharge of his duties can not be questioned by the gentleman from Maine or any one else; and when I tell the House that the allotments made for the New England States were and are entirely satisfactory to that gentleman, I do not think the House will be disposed to agree with the gentleman from Maine that the New England States have been unfairly treated in this bill.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has made other mistakes. He has stated that over $13,000,000 of the appropriations in this bill are for the States that had representatives on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. To arrive at that amount, I presume my friend from Maine credited to some States that had representation upon the committee the very large appropriation in the bill for the Mississippi River from the Falls of St. Anthony to its mouth, and for the Missouri River from Fort Benton to its mouth—more than 3,000 miles. The gentleman also includes in his statement $1,500,000 which this bill carries for that channel of communication between Lake Superior and Lake Michigan, known as the St. Mary's River, through which there passes more than four times as much commerce as all of our foreign commerce put together amounts to. And when a gentleman proposes to credit the State of Michigan with that appropriation, it is only necessary, in order to show how very much he is mistaken, that I should point out that no water way of this country is more national in character than that.

Again, the gentleman states that for the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers there are appropriations amounting to over $6,000,000, or nearly $7,000,000.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I did not state that.

Mr. BLANCHARD. How much did the gentleman state?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I said about $5,000,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Now, Mr. Chairman, the report which I hold in my hand shows that the Mississippi River, from its headwaters to its mouth, receives $3,392,850, and the Missouri River, all told, $694,000, making, instead of five or six millions, as the gentleman puts it, only about $4,000,000. I commend to my friend from Maine the bill and the report before he passes upon this measure any more criticisms such as that.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I beg to state to my distinguished friend from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] that there can not be much dispute on a question of mathematics in adding up the appropriations of this bill; and I do not propose to be finical about that. I have made the calculation of the amounts of appropriation, and my figures show the appropriations for the Mississippi River to be $4,212,850; and, with all due respect to the gentleman, I am inclined to think I am correct. My figures show the appropriations for the Missouri River to be $727,500, which I believe to be also correct. The aggregate of these two sums is $4,940,350, or about $5,000,000. So that I was not very far out of the way.

The gentleman questions my estimate or my statement of the amount absorbed by the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, it is no part of my purpose to reflect on any gentleman of this House. Every man is here on his oath; every man is here to look after the interests of his constituents.

My impression, derived from the sessions of two Congresses, and the general impression of the House, has been as to the membership of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors—that gentlemen go there to look after the special interest of their localities. The House recognizes that to be true of the River and Harbor Committee in a more pointed sense than of any other committee of this House. I make no reflection; I am only stating a fact.

I have made a computation. The gentleman says I am in error in crediting to the committee the appropriation for the entire length of the Mississippi River. I beg the gentleman's pardon when I correct him; I have not made any such mistake, and that gentleman is hardly better able to make verification of my figures than myself.

And I will say that I am not entirely geographically ignorant about the Mississippi River. I have seen the river at its mouth and at various points from the Falls of St. Anthony down. I have learned the difference between the Upper and the Lower Mississippi. I have not credited the committee with the appropriation for the Upper Mississippi. I have simply credited it with the $3,024,600 for the Lower Mississippi, all of which passes through the States of the members represented on that committee. I would not have done injustice to have added a considerable slice of the appropriation for the Upper Mississippi, for the reason that the appropriations for that part of the river will also inure in large degree to the benefit of States represented on that committee.

My figures show, on the part of these gentlemen, a regard for their localities which, perhaps, is creditable to them, and for which I have no doubt their constituents will give them credit. Out of an aggregate appropriation of $19,494,783 the States represented by members on the committee have allowed themselves the very liberal share of $13,326,700.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CHEADLE. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE].

Mr. BOUTELLE. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as there may be some criticism made of these figures I will give them in detail.

The State of Louisiana receives $315,500 outside, I beg my friend to observe, of what accrues to that State from the Mississippi River appropriations; Alabama gets $412,000; Texas, $1,012,500; Mississippi, $126,000; Virginia, $537,500; West Virginia, $409,700; Maryland, $300,500; Michigan, $2,183,300.

At that point I desire to observe that I am well aware those appropriations do cover, as the gentleman says, improvements which are of great interest and value to all parts of the country, but I submit there is a probability that in these figures for the improvement of the country at large the State of Michigan has not been neglected. It has $2,183,300, or about three times the amount appropriated for New England.

California receives $499,900; why they did not make it an even $500,000 I do not know. Illinois, $510,400; Pennsylvania, $595,000; Ohio, $1,039,000; New York, $1,570,800.

I desire to say, if my friend from Louisiana is as successful in persuading the gentleman from New York City [Mr. COX], as he seems to be in persuading himself, that the great harbor of New York is liberally treated in this bill, he will be fortunate. One million five hundred and seventy thousand dollars have been given to the State of New York, but the great harbor of New York and the great sea-way channels of New York have received but meager recognition.

The great bulk of the appropriations for New York State in this bill are interior, and not to the harbor of New York. They are above the city in the northern and central portions of the State. They are very properly appropriated, no doubt, and will probably do much good; but the fact remains that these appropriations, while they may be worthy in themselves, do not account for or excuse the fact that the committee neglected to make a provision so long demanded by the commerce of the whole country, and in the interest of the whole country, for improvements upon a grand scale in the harbor of New York.

Again, in this bill we find Wisconsin $414,000 and Massachusetts $378,000, aggregating, as I said before, without crediting the appropriations upon the Upper Mississippi River, $13,326,000 to States represented by members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Now, my friend from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] can not get up a family difficulty between myself and the gentleman from Massachusetts, who represents New England upon the committee; and if he is satisfied and all the rest of New England are satisfied and the Committee upon Rivers and Harbors are satisfied, I do not know that it will make very much difference whether I am satisfied or not. But I desire to reiterate here my opinion that in a river and harbor bill aggregating $19,500,000 for the improvements requisite to facilitate the commerce of this country, the sum of $900,000 is a meager and miserable allowance to the great coast lines and harbors and rivers of New England.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. NUTTING. Mr. Chairman, I desire to move an amendment to strike out the last line.

I think, sir, for at least three times since this river and harbor bill has been reported to the House for consideration the action of the committee in reference to the great harbor of the city of New York has been called in question in terms not altogether complimentary to myself, and as the only member on that committee from the State of New York at this time, it is proper that I should make fitting response.

Now, I desire to call the attention of the House, and I think I am entitled to do so, to the exact state of facts in regard to this harbor. Nobody is going to dispute the fact that the State of New York has a great harbor. I believe that port collects about 66 per cent. of all the customs duties collected at all the ports of the United States; so, that the city of New York is entitled to a liberal consideration, there is no sort of question whatever. But I want to assert here, and I am able to prove it from the facts, that it has received proper consideration at the hands of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] says that a few thousand dollars have been dropped around here and there in New York State, amounting to some four or five hundred thousand dollars. Well, I should say——

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman is mistaken; I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. NUTTING. Well, you said it was scattered around here and there in different projects throughout the State of New York, outside of the city, but that the great channels, the great water ways of the city, had been treated miserably. In substance you said that. Now, I undertake to say that there is not a word of truth in that; and I have, I think, good foundation for the assertion.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am very much obliged to the gentleman for his interpretation of my language.

Mr. NUTTING. We will see whether I am correct or not as I proceed.

Mr. Chairman, there are two great channels, two great great water ways in the city of New York, especially great, or three we will say. The first is what is known as Buttermilk Channel, New York harbor proper, and Hell Gate in East River. What did the committee do in reference to them? But first, what did the committee find when it proceeded to consider them? We have to-day, Mr. Chairman, for these projects on hand, or had on the 1st day of April, 1888, for the improvement of Hell Gate and East River, $30,775 of an unexpended appropriation. This was on hand before the committee commenced to deal with the subject. Then on a recommendation of $500,000 by the Chief of Engineers an appropriation of $250,000 more was given. So much for East River and Hell Gate. What do we find in regard to the main harbor of the city of New York? We find that for the great harbor of the city of New York, on the 1st day of April—this month—there was on hand in the Treasury of the United States already appropriated to this work, and this particular spot, in the great harbor, $666,683.36. Well, did we stop here, and say that is enough? Did we say that a river and harbor bill which had been in existence for two years, and which left this amount unexpended—two-thirds of the whole amount appropriated on hand—was enough, and that we would do nothing more? Not at all. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, on a recommendation of $540,000, have appropriated for this particular spot $380,000 more. So that to-day, if the House should pass this bill, the particular spot the gentleman says is the great highway of commerce of the city of New York would have more than a million of dollars ready to be used in its improvement.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CATCHINGS was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. NUTTING.

Mr. NUTTING. Now, the gentleman from New York the other day, and I am sorry he is not here—I allude to Mr. COX, and I refer to him for he is usually a fair man and a friend of mine—referred to another project in this city, namely, the Harlem River improvement. He said it was of great importance. I admit it. This Congress, with a generosity only commensurate to the magnitude of the work to be commenced, appropriated in 1878 $300,000 for that project. This project is entered upon for the purpose of allowing the commerce which comes from the great West to the city of New York, and which is intended to go out upon the sea and over the ocean, to have free egress to the ocean; and hence this is a work of more than mere local magnitude.

The committee rose informally, and the following reports were submitted.

ROCK CREEK RAILWAY COMPANY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEARD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back the bill (H. R. 2017) to incorporate the Rock Creek Railway Company of the District of Columbia, with the recommendation that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate and ask for a committee of conference.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HEARD also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back the bill (H. R. 6899) to incorporate the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia, with the recommendation that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate and ask for a committee of conference.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. NUTTING (continuing). In 1878 Congress appropriated $300,000 for that project. Have you expended it? Not a dollar of it, even to this day. That $300,000 was on hand when we commenced our work upon that committee.

More than that, Mr. Chairman, in 1879 the committee began with this $300,000 in the Treasury available, and appropriated another $100,000, making $400,000 for Harlem. And yet gentlemen say the city of New York, with the great water ways around it, have been used meanly. Those gentlemen are desirous of creating a sentiment which the facts do not warrant, or else they have not been properly informed as to what has been appropriated for those projects. What did we do with Harlem? Upon the basis of having $400,000 on hand for that project, a work on which not a shovelful of dirt had been removed, or a single rock loosened, our committee in this bill gave $150,000 more, making $550,000 on hand for Harlem at this time. And yet gentlemen from New York seek to create the impression that the harbors of New York city have been left unattended to. They do not do themselves credit, and, unthinkingly, perhaps, they have been unfair to me, the only member from the State of New York on that committee.

Another thing. There has been a hint, merely a hint, but a man is sensitive even to a hint when it relates to his own home, in talking of the inadequate appropriation for the harbors around the city of New York, that the harbor of Oswego has been given too much.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Allow me to suggest to the gentleman that that statement was made by a member who is not now present.

Mr. NUTTING. Did you not say it?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I did not.

Mr. NUTTING. You came very near it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, you can shoot at the "very near;" but when you shoot at that statement I wish you to understand that you are shooting at a gentleman who is absent.

Mr. NUTTING. Oh, when I shoot I will shoot with some object and at some object worthy of shot. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I yield my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. NUTTING].

Mr. NUTTING. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to be heated or excited about this matter or to misstate facts. If you will look at the figures which have been given to us here by the compiler of commercial statistics of the Treasury Department showing moneys collected as customs at the ports in the United States you will find and these gentlemen will find that the city of New York collected $144,000,000, of all that was collected in the United States in 1887. You will find in that same line Boston, San Francisco, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago, New Orleans, Buffalo, Vermont, and then, Mr. Chairman, with great pride I say, you will find Oswego Harbor the tenth in importance in the amount of money which it collects and pays into the Treasury of the United States.

If you take the last seventeen years of collections of customs—and that is long enough to test any question, if a man is fair, and I take it that gentlemen desire to be fair here when they get down to it and are not heated or prejudiced—if you take the last seventeen years of collection of customs duties, you will find that the great city of New York has collected in that time the enormous sum of more than $2,000,000,000, which has been poured into the Treasury of the United States. That is so grand a result that it is almost incomprehensible; but when you go along to Buffalo you will find that in the same time there has been collected there about $11,000,000 in duties, and when you come to Oswego you will find that she has collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States during the seventeen years last past, to be drawn against for the improvement of other harbors, nearly $12,000,000. Now, Mr. Chairman, gentlemen make a mistake when they talk here about these appropriations for rivers and harbors being the projects of particular States or locality.

They are unfair to their own good sense, they are unfair to the country, because every project of that character in the United States worthy of an appropriation is the project of every locality, State, and individual in the country. The harbor of New York does not belong to

New York alone. All the States in the Union pay tribute to it, as their products go through it and out upon the sea and over the sea. So at Buffalo, so at Oswego, and so at all the other commercial points. These projects are great national projects. Gentlemen talk about the Mississippi River, and some may be disposed to talk flippantly about the harbor of New Orleans, and to laugh at the idea of calling New Orleans a harbor at all; yet they will find upon examination that in the value of the products exported during the last year, New Orleans comes second upon the list of our ports—New York first, New Orleans second.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLANCHARD. It is now within five minutes of the time when the House, under previous order, will take its recess. I therefore move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9050) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to offer a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its adoption, giving this evening session to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and to-morrow night to pension business.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I object to setting aside pension night for the river and harbor bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I will withdraw the resolution.

GEORGETOWN BARGE, DOCK, ELEVATOR, AND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. COMPTON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back a bill (H. R. 6129) to incorporate the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator, and Railway Company; which was laid upon the table.

He also reported a bill (H. R. 9581) to incorporate the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator, and Railway Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. SHIVELY, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported, as a substitute for House bill 1203, a bill (H. R. 9582) to grant to the Fort Smith and El Paso Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill 1203 was, by unanimous consent, laid on the table.

A. N. KIMBALL AND OTHERS.

Mr. OATES, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary a substitute for House bill 7151, for the relief of A. N. Kimball and sureties on his official bond as a receiver of public moneys; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REAL ESTATE IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, by unanimous consent, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2307) to correct the records of the District of Columbia relative to certain real estate therein; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DUTIES OF COMMON CARRIERS.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas (by Mr. MORRILL), introduced a bill (H. R. 9600) to declare the duties, enforce the obligations, and regulate the service of railroad companies as carriers of interstate commerce, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock, for the consideration of pension business under the special order.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., and was called to order by Mr. MCMILLIN, who directed the reading of the following communication from the Speaker:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 20, 1888.

SIR: Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN is designated to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House this evening.

J. G. CARLISLE.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk House Representatives.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PIDCOCK. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills under the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

FRANCES ANNE PYNE RICKETTS.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole under the special order for the Friday evening session. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read the title of the first pension bill on the Calendar, as follows:

A bill (S. 393) for the relief of Frances Anne Pyne Ricketts.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Chairman, I shall object to the consideration of this bill for reasons which I gave on last Friday evening. I do not wish to be an obstructionist, yet I am not willing that bills of this class shall be passed, unless in a House with a constitutional majority present.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not object to the consideration of this bill. I have heretofore permitted it to be postponed many times, because I did not wish to interfere with bills in which other gentlemen felt an interest. The time has come, I think, when we should be permitted to have a vote on this bill.

Mr. CHEADLE. I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, that an agreement be made by which a limited time may be allotted for debate on this question, and after that the previous question be considered as ordered, and a vote taken in the House. But, sir, I have convictions on this question of class legislation; and while I have profound respect for my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania——

Mr. RANDALL. As I have for you.

Mr. CHEADLE. I can not waive my convictions on a question of this kind. If I could have waived them in favor of any person on earth, I would have done so in the case of the widow of General Logan.

But, Mr. Chairman, I hope that other men who volunteered to save our temple of constitutional liberty volunteered from the same motives that I did—that we might preserve this Government, under which every citizen is guarantied absolute equality before the law.

There is now pending in this House a proposition to pension the widows of the men whose health was broken down in the war at so low a rate of pension as $7.20 a year, and from that amount up to $144 a year. And so long as I remain a member of this body the widow of no soldier who died in defense of the Government or from disease contracted in the war shall be pensioned at a greater rate than that allowed by law. The laws of this Government have fixed the rate of pension for the widows of enlisted men, and also for the widows of all officers above the grade of lieutenant-colonel. The widow of a lieutenant-colonel is given two-and-a-half times as much pension as the widow of an enlisted man.

And, Mr. Chairman, I say that under the spirit of our institutions that is a distinction great enough, and so long as one hundred thousand claims of my comrades are pending, men broken in health, living in penury and want, before Congress, and pending there for years, I will not permit the consideration of one bill of this class except it will be in the presence of a constitutional majority of this House.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I do not object to the views of the gentleman. He is the custodian of his own judgment as well as his own acts; but it is a hardship that there should be a distinction and a discrimination made against a particular bill.

General Ricketts was a hero in three different wars; ay, more than that, the very woman whom we propose to pension here was herself a soldier in the Army of the Union, both under fire and in the capacity of nurse. But I am content with the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana. If he will permit fifteen minutes' debate, pro and con, on this subject in the House on a Friday, I am content to let the matter go over and into a full House.

Mr. CHEADLE. To that I am perfectly willing to give my consent.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, if the previous question is ordered this bill comes up to-morrow.

Mr. RANDALL. I prefer not to make any arrangement that will interfere with the business of the House on any other day than Friday.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But the rules of the House can not be varied by our consent or action here in committee; and I for one would object to any proceeding which would permit any bill of this character to interfere with the public business of the House, which is now so far behind.

Mr. RANDALL. I will make the suggestion to the gentleman from Indiana, for between the two gentlemen I find I am to be under cross-fire in this connection——

Mr. MCMILLIN. Permit me to interrupt the gentleman. I only spoke in behalf of the public business in the House, which I want to further and have been trying to further, without regard to any particular matter which may be under consideration, during the whole of this session.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee that we can not agree here to have this go over and into House on Friday; because the committee has over and over again agreed upon such course as to other bills which have been so carried over; and I will on to-morrow myself, if there be any impediment such as the gentleman from Tennessee indicates, then ask consent of the House that the bill shall go over until Friday.

Mr. McMILLIN. And a single objection would force the House to a discussion of a half hour, and then a yea-and-nay vote, which consumes an hour of the time to be devoted to public business, when the time is so much in demand and the business so far behind.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want a word of discussion as far as I am concerned. I am willing to rest upon the report of the committee and say not a word. I suggested fifteen minutes on either side only because the gentleman from Indiana had indicated that there might be a desire for debate in opposition to the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania as well as to my friend from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] that it has always been the history of cases of this character that have gone over on Friday nights that fifteen minutes' discussion has been had, and I do not see why there should be an exception in this case.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not object to the discussion suggested. I think such a bill, if passed at all, ought to be discussed. But I am trying to avoid any interference with the public business, which ought to be advanced and which is so unusually far behind. I am objecting to have the time of the House taken up with these matters. I have no feeling in regard to the question at all, except to do what I have been trying to do for weeks—advance the public business; and I think that all things of this character should be made subservient to it.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Tennessee is not the only member of the House who is advancing the public business.

Mr. McMILLIN. I don't claim to be.

Mr. RANDALL. Others are as anxious as he.

Mr. McMILLIN. And I am glad to know that we will have the assistance and co-operation of my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. TAULBEE. There is nothing whatever before the committee.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is a bill before the committee.

Mr. TAULBEE. I beg pardon, there is no bill before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The title of a bill has been read.

Mr. TAULBEE. And I would like to know what we are discussing? What does this bill propose to do?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Kentucky has probably been here every Friday night, and he knows that the consideration of this bill has been opposed on several occasions.

Mr. TAULBEE. I was not here on last Friday night, because I was sick.

Mr. BINGHAM. It has been put aside on four Friday nights.

Mr. TAULBEE. What is the rate of pension proposed?

Mr. BINGHAM. A hundred dollars a month.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then I shall oppose the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk had better read the bill, as there is an amendment proposed by the committee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll of the United States the name of Frances Anne Pyne Ricketts, widow of James B. Ricketts, late a major-general in the United States Army, retired, and to pay her a pension of $100 per month, to take effect from and after the passage of this act, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The committee recommend to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five," in the seventh and eighth lines.

Mr. TAULBEE. I shall object to any arrangement that carries this bill over to a Friday. The House has assigned Friday nights for the consideration of pension bills, and everybody knows the attempts that are being made all the time to crush out the consideration of private bills.

Objection was made to-day to assigning three nights for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. I will say further that I am going to vote against this bill. I always have voted against bills of this class. I have been consistent in my votes, and have objected to the consideration of many of these bills when a quorum was not present, and they were carried over to be voted upon in a full House. And there never was one of them that did not pass.

Mr. RANDALL. If a bill of this kind can be passed in a full House by a yea-and-nay vote, why not agree to give that opportunity?

Mr. TAULBEE. I am in favor of this bill having the opportunity now. We might as well vote on it now.

Mr. RANDALL. I want the House to agree to the arrangement suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE].

Mr. GEAR. In a full House there is an opportunity of discussing the bill on its merits.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has been indulging this discussion in order to see if some arrangement can be made.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection whatever to the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest that some definite proposition had better be submitted.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Indiana I think will see my good faith in this connection. But here I am on one side met by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] who says the bill shall not go to the full House, and on the other side by my friend, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN], who intimates that he does not want the bill to go over with the previous question ordered till to-morrow. I met the objection of the gentleman from Tennessee by giving him the assurance that I would make no effort to have the vote taken to-morrow. Having done so, I am now obstructed by the gentleman from Kentucky who states that he will not let the bill get into that position. I appeal to the gentlemen of this House to act fairly in this matter.

I am frank to say that if you corner this bill in this way I do not propose to play the part of dog in the manger and stop everything if I can not get this bill through. I do not propose to stop the granting of any pension because I can not secure the passage of the one under consideration. In that event I am willing you should go on and do what you please as to every other pension, because I consider innocent claimants should not suffer because of the difficulty as to this case.

Mr. BINGHAM. Perhaps the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] will allow the bill to be discussed to-night.

Mr. DORSEY. Perhaps the gentleman from Indiana would like to have a call of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Indiana, as far as I can see, is right from his standpoint. I make no complaint whatever against him. But I do not like to see the gentleman from Kentucky taking a position the result of which is to incorporate himself as a whole House. I say this respectfully.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to be very respectful towards the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I wish to say to him that I do not intend to obstruct the passage of this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. But I am caught either way.

Mr. TAULBEE. I only wish to catch you one way, my object being to give the bills on the Private Calendar an opportunity of being considered. Resolution after resolution has been introduced and referred to the Committee on Rules, of which I think the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania is a member, their object being to get some method by which we can consider the little bills on the Private Calendar, hundreds of them reported for four or five Congresses, which have never yet had a chance of being put upon their passage. And every resolution in favor of and looking in the direction of considering the bills on the Private Calendar has been crushed by committees or by the House; and it is time to stop.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope you will not punish an innocent applicant on account of the alleged dereliction of Committees on Rules.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am willing you should have an opportunity to have your bill passed.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope, then, the gentleman will take charge of this bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. Suppose we pass it to-night or have a call of the House?

Mr. MORRILL. In order to settle this matter I ask unanimous consent that the previous question be ordered on this bill, with the understanding that fifteen minutes be allowed on each side for debate and that a vote be taken next Wednesday immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. GEAR. I wish to amend that proposition by placing the next bill on the Calendar in the same position.

Mr. RANDALL. You can not well do that.

Mr. GEAR. I withdraw the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] asks that fifteen minutes be allowed for debate; that the previous question be considered as ordered, and that the bill shall be considered immediately after the reading of the Journal on Wednesday next. Is there objection?

Mr. McMILLIN. I have already given my reasons for wishing this bill to be considered on the day set apart for private business, and it seems to me they are good reasons. I think the House will agree with me that we are so far behind that we ought not in any way to block public business. I have no objection to the time being allowed for discussion which has been suggested; but let it be assigned for the day peculiarly set apart for private business.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee suggest that Friday next be substituted for Wednesday next in the proposition which has been submitted?

Mr. MORRILL. Then I suggest Monday immediately after the reading of the Journal. Will that suit the gentleman from Tennessee better?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request as modified by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN], that fifteen minutes be allowed for debate on each side, and that the previous question be considered as ordered on next Friday?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes; I object to Friday.

A MEMBER. Monday was the day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Tennessee to suggest Friday.

Mr. LONG. But the gentleman modified his suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Tennessee to mention Friday.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I indicated Friday.

Mr. MORRILL. But the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] objects to Friday, so the objection prevents that order being made.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] object?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir; I object to any interference with the consideration of private business on Fridays.

Mr. MACDONALD. I move to substitute Wednesday.

The CHAIRMAN. That can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, I understood that the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] was that the order should be fixed for Monday.

Mr. MORRILL. I made the request that Monday should be substituted, and that the bill should be taken up immediately after the reading of the Journal on Monday next.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL]?

Mr. BLAND. I will not make any objection, Mr. Chairman, but I think we ought to have an opportunity to amend the bill. I want to have an opportunity to move to amend it so as to make the rate $50 instead of $75.

Mr. MORRILL. Let that amendment be considered as offered now and as pending, and let the previous question be considered as ordered on the amendment and the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] as modified by the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered, and the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] will be considered as pending. The Clerk will report the next bill.

MRS. ELVIRA L. JOHNSON.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 752) to grant a pension to Mrs. Elvira L. Johnson, widow of Commodore Philip E. Johnson.

Mr. RICE. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides a pension of $50 a month for the widow of the late Commodore Johnson. It is subject to the same objection made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] to the preceding bill, and I only ask now that it shall take the same course as that bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Chairman, I enter the same objection to this bill as to the last. I am perfectly willing that it shall go over under the same order as the other bill.

Mr. RICE. That is all I ask.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the report.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Chairman, I made the same objection to this bill as to the last, and I understood that by agreement it would go over under the same order.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, there has been no statement made concerning this case, and I think the report ought to be read.

The Clerk continued the reading of the report.

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the further reading of this report be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BREWER]?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I think that where we have a bill that varies the ordinary rule of pensioning the report ought to be read, especially as it can not be read when the bill comes into the House, because it will go there with the previous question ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] objects to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BREWER], and the Clerk will proceed with the reading.

Mr. BREWER. The bill can not be considered to-night; but the report can be printed in the RECORD. What is the use in taking up time in reading it now?

Mr. MCMILLIN. If the bill is not to be considered or acted upon to-night I do not object.

Mr. BREWER. I understand that it is not. It has been objected to.

Mr. CHEADLE. Yes, I have objected to the bill. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to appear as an obstructionist in legislation, and will not so appear; but I stated a week ago that I should object to all these bills unless there was a constitutional majority present. Therefore it may be understood that if I am here I shall object in all these cases. I object to this on principle. As I said before, if I would have waived my principles in the matter for any one on earth I would have done it in the case of Mrs. Logan, but I think I can give good reasons for my course, and I believe I shall be able to give my Republican friends reasons that ought to make them hesitate before they build up a line of precedents here that are at war with the very principles upon which this Government rests.

The report (by Mr. DE LANO) is as follows:

This is an application on the part of Mrs. Elvira L. Johnson, widow of Commodore Philip C. Johnson, for pension at the rate of $50 a month.

The husband of the petitioner entered the naval service of the United States on the 31st day of August, 1846; January 8, 1852, he was promoted to passed midshipman; September 16, 1855, promoted to lieutenant; July 16, 1862, commissioned lieutenant-commander; April 13, 1867, promoted to commander; June 14, 1874, promoted to captain; July 28, 1884, promoted to grade of commodore.

He died at the navy-yard, Portsmouth, N. H., on the 28th of January, 1887.

From the age of seventeen until he reached the period of fifty-eight, the date of his death, he had given to the Government forty-one years of service.

During that forty-one years he was in the active performance of sea service, except nine years, when he was engaged in the Coast Survey service, at the Naval Academy, at the navy-yard at Mare Island, Cal., and at the navy-yard at Portsmouth, N. H.

His medical record in the Surgeon-General's Office shows that while in the service and in the line of duty he was stricken down with cholera and with epidemic fever; and while at the navy-yard at Mare Island he received a contusion, in the line of duty, in attempting to board a tug, which injury was in part the cause of his death; although the certificate of the surgeon shows the immediate cause of death to have been Bright's disease, yet it states that "there is fair evidence that the disease originated in the line of duty."

If long service, an unblemished record, and the conscientious discharge of every duty which the exigencies of the service imposed upon him can entitle the widow of an officer of his grade to an increased pension, as a partial recognition of the exceptional services of her husband, the widow of this officer, in the opinion of the committee, would clearly be entitled to the most favorable consideration of Congress. The precedents heretofore established are so numerous and familiar that it is unnecessary in this report to specify where such recognition has been promptly given by Congress.

In this case there are additional reasons why the appeal of the petitioner should receive favorable action. Mrs. Johnson is a native of Chili, and was married to Commodore Johnson at Talcahuano, January 8, 1870. As the wife of this American officer she sundered every tie that bound her to her native country, her family, and the associations of her former life, and has shared with him the trials and hardships incident to his occupation.

She has two children absolutely dependent upon her for support and education, a daughter aged twelve years, and a son aged eleven years.

In addition to this responsibility, since the death of her husband she has lost the sight of one eye and is threatened with blindness in the other. She now finds herself in her adopted country without the means of support, with these grave responsibilities resting upon her, and in a condition that renders it almost impossible for her by her own efforts to overcome the difficulties which surround her.

The records of the service in detail of Commodore Philip E. Johnson, the affidavits of Mrs. Johnson, and Dr. F. B. Loring, are appended to this report for the information of Congress.

Your committee is of opinion that the application is one of real merit, and therefore report the bill favorably, with the recommendation that it do pass, after amending the same by striking out "E." in the fifth line, so that it will read Philip C. Johnson.

Philip C. Johnson was appointed a midshipman in the Navy August 31, 1846, and ordered to the Naval School.

December 3, 1846, detached and ordered to the Ohio; August 2, 1849, detached from the Dale and granted leave; November 1, 1849, ordered to the Naval School; May 14, 1850, detached and ordered to the Congress; July 12, 1851, detached from the St. Louis and ordered to the Naval Academy; June 8, 1852, promoted to passed midshipman.

June 9, 1852, detached from the Naval Academy and ordered to the Princeton; June 22, 1852, order to the Princeton revoked and ordered to the Fredonia; September 15, 1855, promoted to master.

September 16, 1855, promoted to lieutenant; September 29, 1856, granted permission to return from the Coast Survey steamer Active; May 26, 1859, detached and ordered to the San Jacinto; October 2, 1861, detached from the Constellation and granted leave.

November 2, 1861, ordered to the Portsmouth; July 16, 1862, promoted to lieutenant-commander; December 2, 1863, detached from the command of the Katahdin and ordered to return north.

March 21, 1864, ordered to the Naval Academy; January 18, 1866, detached and placed on waiting orders; February 17, 1866, he was granted three months' leave, with permission to visit England.

September 17, 1866, ordered to the Sacramento; March 24, 1867, detached and placed on waiting orders; April 13, 1867, promoted to commander; June 10, 1868, ordered as fleet captain of the South Pacific squadron; September 9, 1870, detached and placed on waiting orders; October 15, 1870, ordered to duty on the Coast Survey; July 2, 1872, recommissioned as commander, to rank from July 25, 1866.

May 22, 1874, detached and ordered to examination for promotion; June 14, promoted to captain; June 7, 1874, ordered to command the Omaha; September 13, 1876, detached from command of the Richmond and placed on waiting orders; April 2, 1877, ordered to the navy-yard, Mare Island, Cal.; April 15, 1881, detached and placed on waiting orders; June 1, 1881, ordered to attendance torpedo instruction; June 15, 1881, detached and ordered to command the New Hampshire; November 22, 1881, detached and ordered as Chief Signal Officer.

June 28, 1884, detached and ordered to command the training squadron; July 28, 1884, promoted to the grade of commodore.

October 14, 1884, detached and ordered to command the navy-yard, Portsmouth, N. H. He died at the navy-yard, Portsmouth, N. H., on the 28th of January, 1887.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 31, 1888.

I, Mrs. P. C. Johnson, do hereby certify that ever since the death of my husband, the late Commodore P. C. Johnson, United States Navy, I have been suffering with my eyes; that the sight of one of them is entirely lost and that of the other seriously impaired.

The conditions above mentioned render me unable to read or engage in any occupation or pleasure requiring the use of my eyes.

MRS. P. C. JOHNSON.

Sworn and subscribed before me this 31st day of January, A. D. 1888.

[SEAL.] EDWARD J. STELLWAGEN,
Notary Public, District of Columbia.

[Dr. F. B. Loring, 1407 New York avenue.]

This is to certify that Mrs. P. C. Johnson is under my charge for her eyes. Mrs. Johnson has lost one eye entirely from glaucoma, and has had a severe attack in the other. Nothing but constant care and treatment will save her from total blindness. This condition has existed from the time that she lost her husband.

F. B. LORING.

Sworn and subscribed before me this 31st day of January, A. D. 1888.

[SEAL.] EDWARD STELLWAGEN,
Notary Public, District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER obtained the floor.

Mr. BREWER. I do not understand that this bill has taken the same course as the one last considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is recognized.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, this is a report from the Committee on Pensions; and I understand that the gentleman who made the report is not present. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. RICE. I object. I simply ask that this bill take the same course as the Ricketts bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. RICE] asks that this bill go over until Monday next, to be disposed of after the pension bill already assigned for Monday; that fifteen minutes' debate be allowed on each side, and that the previous question be then considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. BLAND. Is not this widow drawing a pension?

Mr. RICE. No, sir.

Mr. BLAND. Why not give her a pension like the others?

Mr. BREWER. I have tried to get the attention of the Chair for the purpose of making objection to the proposition that this bill be fixed for consideration on Monday next. By the rules of the House next Monday is assigned for business of the District of Columbia. In the first place, I do not believe that this Committee of the Whole has power to take any portion of that day away from the District Committee; and in the second place, I can not consent that the time of the House on that day be occupied by other business. We lost entirely the last day which was assigned for District business.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BREWER] objects to the proposition of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. RICE].

Mr. MORRILL. I move that this bill be amended by striking out "$50" and inserting "$30." This will relieve it from all objection. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] will then be perfectly satisfied, because that is the rate established by the general law; and it will be satisfactory to all sides.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Has this widow made application for a pension under the general law?

Mr. MORRILL. No, sir.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Why not?

Mr. MORRILL. This proposition is for a service pension. Her husband was in service for forty years.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I understand that; but if the widow is entitled to a pension under the general law, she ought to apply for it.

Mr. SAWYER. I suppose that under the general law she would not be entitled to a pension, because she can not show that the death of her husband was caused by anything incident to the service. He died of old age after a service of forty years.

Mr. RICE. I assent to the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. SAWYER. I wish to make a personal inquiry—whether it would be proper for the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] to give notice to the Republican side of the House when he will favor us with an explanation of his views on this great moral question involving so much? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to give the gentleman the information.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection to this bill if it is understood the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Kansas is to be made. I wish to state, without occupying time, that I think I shall be able, and I say it with a great deal of respect for my distinguished friend on the right [Mr. SAWYER], to give him good and valid reasons why he, as a Republican, should stand where I stand on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas moves to amend the bill by striking out "$50" and inserting "$30."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EDWARD DURANT.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (S. 765) granting an increase of pension to Edward Durant.

The CHAIRMAN. This is a Senate bill which, as appears by the Calendar, has been reported by the House committee adversely.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that it be passed over, retaining its place. The gentleman at whose instance it was placed on the Calendar may be able at another time to give reasons why he wished it considered. I ask that it be passed over informally for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

WILHELMINA KUHLMANN.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4845) granting a pension to Wilhelmina Kuhlmann.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Wilhelmina Kuhlmann, widow of Frederick Kuhlmann, deceased, late private in Company F, Twentieth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. PIDCOCK) was read, as follows:

Wilhelmina Kuhlmann is the widow of Frederick Kuhlmann, who served as private in Company F, Twentieth Regiment New York Volunteers, from May 3, 1861, to June 1, 1863. Soldier applied for pension on account of rheumatism June 29, 1880, and died during the pendency of his claim, April 17, 1884. The widow successfully completed the claim, and was allowed the pension otherwise due the soldier. Her own claim has been rejected on the ground that the death cause, disease of kidneys and uræmia, are, in the opinion of the medical referee, not due to rheumatism, for which pension was allowed.

The attending physician, Dr. Herman Kudlich, a practitioner of some prominence, testifies that he was the soldier's family physician for many years prior to and during his last illness, but did not discover the existence of nephritis until in the early part of April, 1884; then examined his urine and found that he suffered from an aggravated case of kidney disease of long standing. From affiant's knowledge of the soldier, and the history of the case, it is his opinion that this disease was caused and produced from rheumatism of long standing from which soldier suffered.

The case having been submitted to the medical referee of the Pension Office, that officer held that inasmuch as medical examination of the soldier a year prior to his death failed to show the existence of cardiac disease, it is not likely that the fatal disease was a sequence of the rheumatism. He further states that the allegations of the widow that soldier suffered from dropsy for about three years before his death are against the theory of Dr. Kudlich, regards the fatal uræmia as the result of rheumatism, and suggests that the grounds for the doctor's opinion in the detailed report of his analysis of the urine should be obtained. In response to this Dr. Kudlich says:

"I have known the deceased soldier for some years, and during this time I attended him frequently enough for more or less severe attacks of muscular and articular rheumatism and other occasional disorders, but kept no special record of it, as I never expected to testify about it. But I know that he suffered frequently from rheumatism (muscular and articular). The action of his heart, which was considerably dilated, was at times very irregular, causing frequent attacks of short breathing, and preventing the disabled from his work. I do not know that he suffered from dropsy about three years previous to his death. Mrs. Kuhlman may either be mistaken—mistaking rheumatic œdematous swellings of the joints for dropsy, using this word in a more popular way—or else he has been attended by some one else, which is possible.

"My reason to believe that the fatal disease was directly caused by his frequent attacks of rheumatism and nothing else is simply this, that I can not otherwise account for it. Mr. Kuhlman has, as long as I have known him, always been moderate in his habits, especially moderate in using alcoholic stimulants; then, on account of his rheumatic disposition, he was always very careful not to expose himself to colds. And so there is hardly any other cause left for the fatal nephritis causing uræmia than his rheumatic disposition in general, and the effects which the same had on his heart and blood vessels. The examination of his urine, of which a very small quantity only was passed, showed, as far as I can remember, considerable albumen—over 30 per cent. I do not remember to have made a microscopical examination."

The claim, notwithstanding this opinion, was rejected, as heretofore stated.

While it may be true that the connection between the fatal disease and the service is not fully shown, yet this committee, knowing the impossibility of clearly demonstrating such a connection in diseases so obscure as the one which caused this soldier's death, believe that the opinion of attending physicians should govern its action, unless it is self-evident that such opinion is incompatible with the facts in the case.

In the case under consideration there is, however, a reasonable presumption that the fatal disease was chargeable to the soldier's military service, and therefore report favorably on the bill, and ask that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JESSE H. STRICKLAND.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 381) for the relief of Jesse H. Strickland. I will state that I am very unexpectedly compelled to leave the city to-night, and shall take the train in a few minutes.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jesse H. Strickland, formerly colonel of the Eighth Regiment of Tennessee Cavalry, United States olunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

At the end of the bill strike out the words "and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month," and insert the following: "And for the purpose of prosecuting a claim for pension, and for no other purpose, said Jesse H. Strickland shall be considered as having been duly commissioned and mustered as colonel of said regiment, to date from the 30th day of January, 1863."

Several MEMBERS. Let us hear the report.

Mr. BLAND. This is a complicated and singular case.

Mr. TAULBEE. I make the point of order that this is not in accordance with the special order for the Friday evening session.

Mr. BLAND. This man, it seems to me, is to be discharged in order to get a pension. That does not certainly come within the special order. He is to be placed on the roll to be discharged, and then he is to come in for a pension. I think we had better not proceed with such a bill.

Mr. BUTLER. It is a unanimous report from the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. A part of this bill, it would seem, would not be in order at this time, and the Chair is of the opinion that it invalidates the entire bill from being considered at this time.

Mr. BUTLER. It is a bill which, under the rules, was required to come from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

MRS. D. P. WOODBURY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5961) to increase the pension now paid to Mrs. D. P. Woodbury.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHIPMAN], who reported that bill, is not present, and I ask by unanimous consent it be passed over.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

SALLY A. RANDALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 88) granting a pension to Sally A. Randall.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sally A. Randall, widow of Antipas Tabor, who served as private in the war of 1812.

The report (by Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 88) granting a pension to Sally A. Randall, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The claimant was the wife of Antipas Tabor, who, as the record shows, served as an enlisted man in the war of 1812, in Capt. Seth Staples', Company, of the Third Regiment, Second Brigade, Massachusetts Militia, from September 27 to October 30, 1814, and was honorably discharged. Antipas Tabor died at Trinidad, on the Island of Cuba, April 11, 1831, and his widow, the claimant, married Albert Randall on February 29, 1853. Albert Randall died on October 19, 1873, and since that date the claimant, Sally A. Randall, has been, and still is, a widow.

The evidence in the case establishes the above facts, and further shows that Mrs. Randall is a worthy woman, seventy-five years of age, in needy circumstances, with health much impaired. The petition for her relief was signed by prominent citizens of Norwich, Conn., where she now resides.

The claimant has not filed claim for a pension in the Bureau of Pensions, being debarred, under a decision of July 7, 1887, from a widow's title to an 1812 pension, on account of her remarriage, notwithstanding the death of her second husband and her present widowhood.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. This is a bill to grant a pension to the widow of a soldier of the war of 1812 who remarried and her second husband died in 1873. Of course I have no special opposition to this bill, but it seems to me the policy of the Government in all our pension laws has been to exclude from the benefit of those laws the widows of soldiers who remarry.

Mr. MORRILL. That was the policy of the Government.

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIJAH MARTIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. 5522) for the relief of Elijah Martin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elijah Martin, late a private in Lieut. James Whelpley's company of the Twenty-sixth Regiment United States Infantry in the war of 1812, at the rate of $30 per month, deducting therefrom the amounts heretofore received by him for pension.

The report (by Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5522) for the relief of Elijah Martin, would report that it appears from the record in the case that the claimant served as a private in Lieut. James Whelpley's company, Twenty-sixth United States Infantry, war of 1812; that he is now aged about eighty-seven years, and is in destitute circumstances. He is receiving a pension at the rate of $8, under act of March 9, 1878. The committee would recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the word "thirty," in the ninth line thereof, and substituting therefor the word "twenty;" and also by striking out the words "deducting therefrom the amounts heretofore received by him for pension;" and that the bill, thus amended, pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments reported by the committee, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty;" also strike out the words "deducting therefrom the amounts heretofore received by him for pensions."

The amendments were agreed to; and there being no objection the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JESSE H. STRICKLAND.

The CHAIRMAN. To return to the bill called up by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BUTLER], the Chair desires to state that having consulted some excellent parliamentarians, he is inclined now to believe the bill is in order, as the amendment of the Committee on Invalid Pensions relates to the mode of procedure for pensioning this party. Therefore the bill will be entertained at this time unless there be objection to the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. BLAND. What is the proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. That the Chair will entertain the request for consideration unless there be objection.

Mr. BLAND. I do not object to it more than to any other bill, but I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER), from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 381) for the relief of Jesse H. Strickland, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

A similar bill passed the Senate during the Forty-ninth Congress, and upon its reference to the Committee on Invalid Pensions of that Congress, after much deliberation on their part they reported favorably thereon with certain amendments, as will more fully appear from their report, as follows:

"The papers filed in this case may be considered as establishing the following facts:

"That in January, 1863, Strickland received authority from the Government to recruit and organize a regiment of cavalry of loyal Tennesseeans. That he entered upon that duty and raised the Eighth Tennessee Cavalry (so named), but for some reason, which appears only in his own statement, was not mustered as colonel, although he performed the duties for months, and was recognized as such.

"That in September, 1863, he was sick with intermittent fever, and was certified from time to time, from September 4 to September 19, as being unfit for duty, surgeon on last date expressing opinion that he would not be able for duty for several weeks. It is most reasonable to accept the statement that to his sickness and his inability to perform active service his failure to be commissioned was attributable.

"That since 1868, as is established by competent medical evidence, he has been more or less disabled by lung trouble, rheumatism, typhoid pneumonia, hemorrhages, and nervous prostration. One other witness places these troubles as far back as 1865, and there is evidence that he was physically sound before entering upon his military duties.

"The evidence filed is not such, in the judgment of this committee, as to warrant them in recommending a pension at any arbitrary or fixed rating. We are of opinion, however, that justice would be conserved by giving this claimant a legal standing to prosecute his claim in the Pension Office, and accordingly recommend that the Senate bill pass with the following amendment: Strike out all after the word 'volunteers' in the seventh line, and insert 'and for the purpose of prosecuting a claim for pension, and for no other purpose, said Jesse H. Strickland shall be considered as having been duly commissioned and mustered as colonel of said regiment, to date from the thirtieth day of January, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three.'"

Mr. GALLINGER. I can make a statement if permitted which will save time, unless objected to.

Mr. MORRILL. It is a lengthy report.

Mr. LONG. There was a surprising statement made in this case a year ago by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

Mr. LONG. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. LONG. Will the gentleman permit me to have this statement read, and then perhaps the gentleman from New Hampshire can throw some light upon it?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I wish to state to the committee, Mr. Chairman, that I do not stand as an obstruction, but on the contrary wish to see every soldier entitled to a pension for services rendered obtain it. I wish the committee to understand this, and then if it is disposed to grant this man a pension I am not going to call a quorum. I was a member of the same regiment he claims to be a colonel of. I helped to organize that regiment. I helped to enlist one hundred and fifty who went into the regiment.

I went to the regiment at Camp Nelson, in Kentucky, the last of August, 1863. We were there mustered. I went with that regiment through Kentucky and Tennessee. It was the first regiment which ever entered the city of Knoxville. We were in the first Tennessee campaign. We went up to the siege of Knoxville. I staid with the regiment—about seven hundred men in it—until it was finally consolidated with the Tenth Regiment, making one regiment, and I never saw that man until I saw him in this city lobbying me to assist him. He never was with the regiment, never performed any service with the regiment.

Mr. WISE. Let me interrupt the gentleman a moment. I object to the bill. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I had some intimation about this case, and I give notice now that no claim of that character will go through this House while I am here without a quorum. I look upon it as an attempt to muster a man in and muster him out; to make him a soldier and to pension him in the face of facts and against the record of the Government itself.

Mr. GALLINGER. Notwithstanding the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON], which the Committee on Invalid Pensions were cognizant of, every member of that committee, after a very careful consideration of this case, have agreed to report the bill in the form in which it appears before the House to-night. I think it is possible that Mr. JOHNSTON has somewhat changed his mind on this case. Indeed, I have an intimation to that effect. But for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from Missouri, who seems to antagonize the bill, time to investigate the matter further—for the Committee on Invalid Pensions has no desire to pass the bill unless it be just and right—I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar, for to-night.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I would like to ask, before that consent is given, whether Mr. JOHNSTON has changed his knowledge of the facts? He may have changed his opinion, but has he other information?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it not wise to discuss that matter to-night. The committee are satisfied that Mr. Strickland had recruited this regiment; and had he not been sick and upon his back in bed, as he was for weeks, he would have been mustered as colonel of it. He lost his commission through sickness and through no fault of his own. It was the unfortunate condition of his health at that time, this sickness coming upon him, which occasioned the loss of his command.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Does this bill give arrearages?

Mr. GALLINGER. No, sir.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That was my impression from hearing it read.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a mistake; it simply gives him standing to prosecute his claim. It does not even give him a pension.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire will be agreed to, and this bill will be passed over, retaining its place upon the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

NOAH S. CRAMER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5237) granting a pension to Noah S. Cramer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Noah S. Cramer, late of the United States Navy.

The report (by Mr. PIDCOCK) was read, as follows:

Cramer served as landsman, United States Navy, from August 24, 1864, to June 29, 1865, when discharged.

He filed his application for pension December 24, 1879, in which he alleges that while on the Aphrodite, about October 3, 1864, he was wrecked near Beaufort, N. C., and was kept wet and cold for three nights and days without change of clothing, in consequence of which he contracted rheumatism. The claim has been rejected, and the rejection affirmed by the Secretary of the Interior, on the ground that the evidence fails to show that the alleged rheumatism was contracted in the service and line of duty.

The records of the Navy Department show that claimant was transferred to the Aphrodite September 29, 1864; that the same was lost and no rolls furnished to the Department. He was transferred to the Monticello, and there served as paymaster's steward on account of his lameness, as he alleges, until his discharge. The records furnish no evidence of treatment in the service. The claim was specially examined in 1882, and upon this examination was based the action of the office in rejecting the claim. It is true that the special examination failed to disclose any medical treatment for rheumatism until the fall of 1865, probably three or four months after discharge. But it is shown thereby that he had diarrhea, and complained of pains in his bones, and was treated therefor immediately after discharge.

A continuous disability from rheumatism is clearly established by the testimony and the medical examinations in the case. The only known officer of the vessel on which claimant last served has no personal knowledge of the alleged disability, but three shipmates testify to the incurrence of rheumatism and its existence in the service. The special examiner failed to interview one of these witnesses, because at the time "he was not sober enough to have his deposition taken;" the other two in substance affirmed their former statements.

There are also on file two letters written by the claimant, one to his mother, the other to his brother, then a practicing physician. The first, bearing date of March 4, 1865, says: "I have a bad cold, and am very lame at times;" the other, written shortly after discharge, alludes to his illness and confinement to bed.

While the evidence in the case may not be conclusive enough to warrant favorable action in the Pension Bureau, yet your committee can not but reach the conclusion that the disability from which claimant has suffered since discharge is directly chargeable to the exposure endured by reason of the shipwreck heretofore referred to, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LAFAYETTE LAKIN.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 8211) to pension Lafayette Lakin.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Do I understand this to be a request for the consideration of a bill out of its regular order on the Calendar? If so, I desire to object.

Mr. MORRILL. One bill has been already taken up and so considered. I will state that I shall not be here on next Friday.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I do not know how to get on the list myself for unanimous consent, and I think we had better proceed in the regular order. However, as this is a proposition coming from my friend upon the committee, I dislike to interpose an objection; and as I understand he will not be here on Friday next I withdraw the call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lafayette Lakin, late of United States steam-ship Albany.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8211) granting a pension to Lafayette Lakin, submit the following report:

The claimant in this case enlisted on July 5, 1848, as a landsman in the United States Navy, and was discharged September 6, 1850. In his application for pension, filed July 8, 1886, he alleges that he contracted a severe cold, resulting in chronic nasal catarrh, pain over the eyes, and loss of sight. His application was rejected on the ground of no record, the claimant being unable to furnish satisfactory testimony.

In his affidavit he says that going from Norfolk, Va., on sloop of war Albany, en route to Vera Cruz, Mexico, he caught a severe cold in the autumn of 1848, causing pain in the head and resulting catarrh; that during the next year, picketing off Block Island, on the Mississippi coast, at the time of the Lopez expedition, he contracted another cold, increasing his catarrh trouble, of which he had never recovered since the first attack, and from which combined attacks he has never recovered; that as a result of this disease his eye-sight has been gradually failing him, and that now he is nearly blind.

The journals of the steamship Albany show that claimant was admitted to the hospital December 9, 1848, with cephalalgia, origin not stated. Medical referee of Pension Office says this is a premonitory symptom of catarrh.

The journals of the Pennsylvania and of the North Carolina, upon which he subsequently served, afford no information.

Mrs. Elizabeth McCaull testifies that she has known claimant from childhood, and up to the time of enlistment she had never seen any sign of disease; that he was considered a healthy man; that since his return from the service he was suffering from catarrh, and knows that he has been a constant sufferer therefrom ever since. This has been followed by a general breaking down in health and loss of eye-sight.

John D. B. Lakin testifies that he was more or less in the company of Lafayette Lakin during the time prior to the year 1848; that claimant was then and had been in good health; was considered by all acquainted with him a healthy man; that on his return home he was suffering from catarrh.

Arthur D. Kinney, thirty-three years of age, testifies that he has known claimant from his (affiant's) boyhood, and that he has been troubled with nasal catarrh during all the time of their acquaintance.

Daniel Candy testifies that he has been personally acquainted with claimant since 1850, and knows that he has been a sufferer of chronic nasal catarrh ever since. Says that his knowledge is obtained through personal observation; that said Lakin came to his home in Memphis, State of New York, in the autumn of 1850, having just received his discharge from the United States Navy, and remained with him during the winter, and was employed by him during the year 1851 as clerk in his grocery store, and that he lived a neighbor to him until 1860.

The examining board at Cortland, N. Y., report him as totally blind in the right eye; that the vision of the left eye is seriously impaired, and that there is an aperture in the septum narium about a half inch in diameter, the margin of which is in an ulcerated state.

The claimant for many years managed his business affairs, studdily refused to ask for a pension, but finding himself now in his advanced age, through business misfortunes, unable to care for himself, he seeks from the Government that aid to which he has so long been entitled. The man's condition is indeed a sad one. He will doubtless be in a few months totally blind. This condition is the result of the nasal catarrh.

The evidence satisfies your committee that the disability was contracted in the naval service of the United States, that it has continued ever since, and they therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 4774) granting a pension to Mathew H. Reynolds and put it upon its passage.

Mr. PIDCOCK. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order being demanded, the Clerk will proceed to read the next bill upon the Calendar.

CYRENIUS G. STRYKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5234) granting a pension to Cyrenius G. Stryker.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Cyrenius G. Stryker, late a private in Company A, Thirtieth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. PIDCOCK) was read, as follows:

Stryker enlisted for nine months September 3, 1862, in Company A, Thirtieth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers, and was discharged June 27, 1863. In his application for pension, filed June 4, 1879, he alleges that in October, 1862, while getting off the cars on which the command was transported to Washington, D. C., he was crowded against and pushed off the platform, and in the fall injured his spine, from which injury he is still suffering. That he was treated therefor by Surgeon Barkley, deceased, and afterwards at Aquia Creek hospital. In corroboration of his allegations he filed the testimony of Lieut. Joseph B. Smith and Comrades Edward and Peter S. Smith. It is also shown in evidence that soldier was under medical treatment by Dr. James B. Van Derveer from discharge to 1866, and subsequently by Dr. J. V. Fritts, for contusion of spine, affecting the kidneys and sexual organs.

The claim was specially examined in 1886, and upon this examination the claim has been rejected, upon the ground that the evidence is not satisfactory as to the incurrence of disability in the service, and that medical examinations fail to disclose any physical signs of disability therefrom.

The affiants as to the incurrence of the disability are shown by the papers in the case to be credible witnesses. The former lieutenant is chief deputy collector of internal revenue for the Third New Jersey district. At the time of his examination by the special examiner he had no distinct recollection of the injury aforesaid, but gave it as his opinion that his affidavit must have been based upon entries in a memorandum book which has since been lost. The two comrades whose testimony was filed, as heretofore stated, were not interviewed by the special examiner. Two other comrades, however, were examined by that officer, and while they are unable to testify to the precise nature of the disability incurred, they state that claimant was in apparent good health at time of enlistment, and that some time during service he became disabled from some cause.

The record of the Surgeon-General corroborates claimant's allegation as to treatment at Aquia Creek hospital in April, 1863, but fails to show the nature of the disability for which treated.

That claimant has been suffering from some injury of the spine ever since discharge can not be doubted, while the writer of this report has personal knowledge of the soldier's disabled and feeble condition, the nature of which, however, he is unable to diagnose.

Medical examination, it is true, discloses no physical signs of the alleged injury. But two medical examinations do show lumbago, lameness, and tenderness over sacrum.

The committee are of opinion that the evidence in the case corroborates claimant's allegation as to the injury in the service, and that he should be pensioned for any disability now found to exist which can reasonably be attributed thereto.

The bill is therefore returned with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ALETTA V. QUICK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7181) granting a pension to Aletta V. Quick.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Aletta V. Quick, dependent mother of Abram Quick, late sergeant-major of Thirtieth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. PIDCOCK) was read, as follows:

The claimant is the mother of Abram Quick, who died of typhoid fever April 9, 1863, while serving as sergeant-major of the Thirtieth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers. Her claim for pension has been rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that at the time of the son's death she was comfortably supported by her husband, and therefore not dependent upon the soldier. It is true that at the critical period and for years thereafter the claimant's husband was in possession of real estate sufficient to afford their support. He had not then come into full possession of the property, the same belonging to his father. Upon the latter's death, however, probably about 1866, he became sole owner of one-half of the farm of 224 acres, heavily encumbered, however, and by reason of bad management, serious disability, and other causes, it gradually passed out of his possession, until now claimant is really dependent.

It is also shown by the evidence on file that the soldier sent money home during his service. He died leaving neither widow nor minor child surviving him.

The rejection of the mother's claim by the Pension Bureau on the grounds heretofore referred to, it is admitted, was proper under the requirements of the general pension law. But Congress in many instances has adopted a more liberal view by recognizing present dependence upon others as sufficient ground for special legislation. In fact, a change in the law looking in that direction has been recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions, and such a measure is now before the House.

Believing, however, that relief should be granted in the case under consideration before the proposed change in the law can go into effect, your committee report favorably on accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. FORD. I again ask unanimous consent to call up the bill I have indicated.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I object, and demand the regular order.

GEORGE E. OLIPHANT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2167) for the relief of George E. Oliphant.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll the name of George E. Oliphant, late a private in Company I, Seventeenth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read as follows:

George E. Oliphant was enrolled on the 12th day of June, 1861, in Company I, Seventeenth Indiana Regiment Volunteers, and was honorably discharged at Nashville, Tenn., on the 4th day of January, 1864, and re-enlisted as a veteran January 4, 1864, in same company and regiment, and was honorably discharged at Macon, Ga., August 8, 1865.

The relief asked for in this bill is based on the application of the soldier for pension, in which he avers that while in the service and in line of duty, at the town of Macon, Ga., on or about the 1st day of July, 1865, he was attacked with typhoid fever, which, together with exposure, caused the entire loss of sight of right eye, and has impaired the sight of the left eye to a great extent, rendering him incapable of following his usual avocation most of the time.

The claim was rejected by the Pension Department on the ground that disease of the eyes existed prior to enlistment. There is testimony to show that claimant had some trouble with his eyes when a boy, but all of the witnesses agree that for several years before enlistment and during four years of service his eyes were sound. "Is it possible," says the special examiner, "that if claimant was subject to disease before enlistment, as the reviewer thinks, he would have served faithfully from June 12, 1861, to July 1, 1865, in the mean time re-enlisting as a veteran, without showing some signs of the disability?"

The fact being established by a preponderance of testimony, and, in the opinion of the committee, "beyond a reasonable doubt," that the soldier's eyes were sound prior to enlistment, and that he had no trouble with them during his entire service of four years, it remains only necessary for the committee to investigate the question as to whether the alleged disability was incurred while in the service and in line of duty. At the time of the soldier's alleged disability the war had closed, and the soldier was waiting to be mustered out with his company, which was done on the 8th of August, 1865. The records of the Adjutant-General's Office furnish no evidence of the alleged disabilities, for the reason that the hospital record covers only the period from January 29, 1864, to June 30, 1865, while the soldier's sickness occurred about the latter part of July, 1865. The records from that time on are lost or were never made, and the surgeons at this late day do not remember the case.

Sergt. Caleb J. Thompson testifies that claimant, in July, 1865, at Macon, Ga., was very ill and sick of fever; that said fever settled in the soldier's eyes, and he lost the sight of one eye and the sight of the other was greatly impaired. He knew these facts from personal knowledge, being a member of the same company and regiment.

Jackson Lewis testifies:

"On July 1, 1865, at Macon, Ga., said soldier was taken sick with fever, and so remained for the space of about four weeks, at which time said fever settled in soldier's eyes, which resulted in the loss of the right eye and the other has been badly affected. I know these facts by being his nurse while he had the fever."

Elijah Hightower testifies as follows:

"On July 1, 1865, at Macon, Ga., claimant was taken sick with what was said to be typhoid fever, and immediately after his recovery his eyes were much affected; that he has been acquainted with claimant for the whole period of his life, and that he has full knowledge that claimant's eyes have been badly affected ever since his return from the Army in August, 1865; and further, that he is totally blind in his right eye, and he believes his eyes were affected to the extent that they are by service in the Army."

Albert L. Masters testifies that he has been acquainted with claimant for the past thirty-five years, and his eyes have been badly affected ever since his discharge in 1865; and further declares that he is totally blind in his right eye and the left eye is in a bad condition.

Jacob McAller and Edward Beagley testify that claimant's eyes, after his return home, immediately after his discharge, were very much affected, and in about one year he became entirely blind in the right eye, and the other eye is badly affected.

The committee are of the opinion that it is abundantly proven—

1. That the soldier's eyes were sound at the time of his enlistment.

2. That his eyes were sound during all his service in the Army up to the time of his sickness in July, 1865.

3. That the preponderance of testimony is to the effect that the loss of his right eye and the injury to the other were caused by said sickness and exposure on his way home after final discharge.

He is proven to be a man of excellent character, and to have been a faithful soldier all through the war. The committee believe this to be a meritorious case, and therefore submit a favorable report and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WILBER. I ask unanimous consent that House bill 5249 may be taken up for present consideration.

Mr. DINGLEY and others demanded the regular order.

JOHN E. SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 130) granting a pension to John E. Smith.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be placed on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John E. Smith, late a private in Company B, Fifty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 130) granting a pension to John E. Smith, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

The record of this soldier's service is as follows: He was drafted in December and mustered January 10, 1865, as a private in Company B, Fifty-ninth Indiana Volunteers, and was honorably discharged July 17, 1865.

He was granted a pension of $2 per month, commencing July 18, 1865, and ending March 17, 1880, for chronic diarrhea contracted in the Army while in line of duty. The pension was discontinued for the reason, as stated by the Commissioner of Pensions, that the disability had ceased. The history of this case as gleaned from the papers on file in the Pension Office is about as follows:

The soldier was drafted, mustered into the service, and hurried away from a cold northern climate to South Carolina, where he was put into active service with veteran soldiers who had become acclimated and hardened to the severe duties of army life, and while he was doing picket duty at Pocataligo Station, on the line of the Charleston and Savannah Railroad, there were continual heavy rains, and he was frequently drenched through and through, and in this way caught a severe cold in his head, and at the same time was suffering with chronic diarrhea, which he had contracted some time previous. This cold was followed by a severe dizziness in his head. The cold lasted ten days or two weeks and the dizziness has continued ever since. This dizziness continued increasing until the 21st of November, 1868, when he was completely prostrated by a stroke of paralysis of the right side, since when he has not been able to perform any manual labor.

The evidence of several of his comrades, members of the same company, all tends to corroborate the facts above set forth. He received no hospital treatment, although it is in evidence that he several times applied to the regimental physician, but for some cause which does not clearly appear, no treatment was given him. The war was then near its close, and the soldier states that the surgeon was absent most of the time, and the assistant surgeon, for the reason that he was able to perform duty, did not think it worth while to prescribe for his chronic diarrhea. There is no dispute that the soldier contracted the disease while in the line of duty in the Army, and that it continued until after he was stricken with paralysis. The testimony, which is quite voluminous, all goes to show that he was greatly emaciated when he returned home from the Army, and that up to the time he was prostrated with paralysis he was able to perform but little manual labor.

Special Examiner John W. Clampitt, to whom the case was referred, made, among other things, the following report, August 14, 1885:

"He (the soldier) appears to be frank and honest in his statements, and bears a good reputation in the community for veracity, sobriety, and good morals. He is almost totally disabled for the performance of manual labor, the right side of his body having been completely paralyzed by a stroke which occurred on the 21st day of November, 1868."

Dr. M. F. Smith, who treated him after his discharge for chronic diarrhea, says he was informed by reliable parties that immediately after his discharge he was in a state of general debility and nervous prostration, which preceded the stroke of paralysis, and this is corroborated by Dr. Luther Johnson, who treated him prior to and at the time of his prostration by paralysis.

His claim was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the evidence was not sufficient to establish the fact that paralysis resulted from chronic diarrhea contracted in the Army while in line of duty. The soldier is in a physical condition which totally prevents him from earning a living by manual labor, and, being in entirely destitute circumstances, he is dependent on his neighbors and friends and public charity for support.

The committee believe, after a careful consideration of this case, that there is a strong probability that paralysis was the result of general prostration, arising from chronic diarrhea, contracted in the Army while in the line of duty; and, so believing, submit a favorable report and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I ask unanimous consent that the rest of the evening be devoted to taking up bills out of their order when called up by gentlemen particularly interested in them.

Mr. SAWYER. I object.

Mr. WILBER. I have to leave the city and will be gone for two weeks. I ask unanimous consent that the bill I have already indicated be now taken up.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. MACDONALD. I think gentlemen who come here to look after their bills should have an opportunity to present them. I give notice that if that is not agreed to I will demand a quorum on every bill.

Mr. BLAND took the chair as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

HANNAH VARQUISON.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 431) granting a pension to Hannah Varquison.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitation of law, the name of Hannah Varquison, widow of John M. Varquison, late private in Company A, One hundred and forty-first Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 431) granting a pension to Hannah Varquison, submit the following report:

The claimant in this case is the widow of John M. Varquison, private of Company A, One hundred and forty-first Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers. The soldier at the time of his death was receiving a pension for disease of the lungs. The application of the widow was rejected on the ground that the fatal disease was not due to the disease of the lungs. The cause of the soldier's death, as shown by the evidence on file, was congestive apoplexy, complicated with lung disease.

The physician attending him at the time of his death says that he was first taken sick with congestive apoplexy. The second day he had an attack of pleurisy of the right side. His lungs troubled him from the first; expectoration indicated chronic pneumonia, but the immediate cause of his death was that the cerebral hyperdermia produced strangulation.

Your committee are utterly unable to decide from the evidence submitted to them whether the immediate cause of the death of the soldier was from the lung trouble or disease of the brain, but it seems absolutely certain that at the worst the brain trouble only hastened his death a few weeks or months, as death must have resulted from the lung trouble before many months.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to make a suggestion for the consideration of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. It is fair to members of this House who come here on Friday evenings that if one is to be recognized to call up a bill on a particular evening, all present should be recognized. That is impossible if the calling up of bills by unanimous consent begins about 9 o'clock. The result is that ten or fifteen members go away from here every evening without recognition. I suggest to the Committee on Invalid Pensions that hereafter we either have the regular order the entire evening, or that we have the calling up of bills by unanimous consent commence at 8 o'clock, so that every gentleman here may be recognized. It is not fair that some should be recognized and some should not be.

Mr. WEBER. I suggest that the regular order be observed; but that unless gentlemen are here in person to call up bills when they are reached on the Calendar they be passed over, retaining their place on the Calendar.

Several members called for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent not being given, the Clerk will call the next bill on the Calendar.

Mr. DOCKERY resumed the chair as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

WILLIAM J. MILLER.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4519) to grant a pension to William J. Miller.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask that that bill be passed over.

Mr. MORRILL. I object.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The gentleman from Kansas had a favor granted him, and should not object to other gentlemen present getting an opportunity to be recognized.

Mr. MORRILL. So far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] should be permitted to call up a bill for himself. This bill, however, that is now reached upon the Calendar is one in which my colleague [Mr. ANDERSON], who is out of the city, is much interested. And I should feel that I was doing him much injustice if I did not insist on its being considered in its regular order.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then it seems the rule which was suggested a few moments ago is to be violated in favor of gentlemen who are absent.

Mr. MORRILL. I understood the suggestion to be that if no one present called up a bill when it was reached on the Calendar it should be passed over.

Mr. MACDONALD. I think when the gentleman from Kansas states that he calls up the bill at the request of his colleague no objection should be made.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I withdraw my objection.

The bill (H. R. 4519) to grant a pension to William J. Miller was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of William J. Miller, of Salina, Kans., late a private in Company G, One hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the restrictions and limitations of the pension-laws of the United States, to be paid a pension from.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

Strike out the words, in line 8, "of the United States, to be paid a pension from."

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read in part.

Mr. MACDONALD (interrupting the reading). I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the report be dispensed with. It is manifestly a good case.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4519) granting a pension to William J. Miller, submit the following report:

The claimant in this case enlisted October 2, 1862, as a private in Company G, One hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was discharged April 2, 1865. He filed an application for pension in 1865, claiming that while detailed to drive teams at division headquarters a mule threw him and injured his back very severely. The claim was rejected in the Pension Office upon the ground that no disability in a pensionable degree on account of rheumatism has existed since filing the claim.

The evidence shows that claimant was discharged for chronic rheumatism the 2d day of April, 1865, and that his general health was so much injured as to unfit him for the Veteran Reserve Corps.

The late assistant surgeon of the One hundredth Pennsylvania certifies, October 15, 1865, that he has that day carefully examined claimant and finds that he is suffering from an injury to the spinal column and lumbar muscles as the result of a hurt said to have been received while in the service.

"The injury to this man I believe to be permanent and unfits him entirely for the prosecution of his profession. He is compelled to walk with a cane and can not stoop to the ground for anything without getting down on his knees, and in my opinion, he is totally and permanently disabled."

I. P. C. Murdock, Henry A. Miller, and others testify that when he came home from the service he was suffering severely from rheumatism.

The examining board of Kansas City, Mo., reports that claimant walks with an unsteady gait and can hardly walk at all with eyes closed; there is tenderness and loss of sensibility at junction of sacral with spine. His back and hips appear to be stiff and yet no real anchylosis. They report him totally disabled.

The claimant seems to have been unable to establish the origin of his disability, as claimed, from the fact that having been detailed at headquarters he was away from his comrades and those who knew him intimately. The fact that he suffered severely from rheumatism in the Army seems to be clearly shown by hospital records and by evidence of his officers and comrades; that he was suffering at the time of his discharge and has been suffering ever since is established beyond a question of doubt.

That he was sound at enlistment is equally certain. The papers have been in the hands of many special examiners, and, without exception, they all reported that there is merit in the case, and that if the injury by being thrown from the mule could be established the case would be a clear one. The matter seems to be very much mixed up as to the real cause of the disability. The claimant has failed to establish the fact of the alleged injury, but has shown conclusively that he suffered in the service from rheumatism. It may be possible that what was called rheumatism in the service was simply the result of the injury, and this seems highly probable from the fact that the surgeon of the regiment certified soon after discharge that the man was suffering from injury to the spine.

The examining board now reports the disability, but do not attribute it to rheumatism.

It seems to your committee that it makes very little difference what the doctors call it, so long as the disability and the suffering existed, and there can be no doubt but that the disability was incurred in the service, and that it existed at the time of discharge and has continued ever since and the man is totally disabled.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment, striking out all after "laws," in line 7.

The amendment of the Committee on Invalid Pensions was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MRS. JULIET G. HOWE.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8117) granting a pension to Mrs. Juliet G. Howe.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask that this bill be passed over, if no gentleman desires its consideration to be proceeded with.

Mr. LAIRD. I ask that the Senate bill granting a pension to Mrs. Juliet G. Howe be substituted for the House bill. The two bills are identical.

There being no objection the bill (S. 300) granting a pension to Mrs. Juliet G. Howe was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Juliet G. Howe, a volunteer nurse during the late war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The bill was reported with an amendment to strike out in line 7 "$25" and insert "$18."

Mr. SAWYER. What is the pension fixed by the House bill?

Mr. MORRILL. The House bill gives $18.

Mr. LAIRD. I think I can make a statement of the facts which will be somewhat shorter than the statement of them in the report.

Objection was made.

The report on the Senate bill (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 300) granting a pension to Mrs. Juliet G. Howe, submit the following report:

This committee has already reported a House bill placing this lady upon the pension-roll at the rate of $18 per month.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment striking out the words "twenty-five" and inserting the word "eighteen."

Mr. McMILLIN. Is that all the report? Let the report on the House bill be read.

Mr. LAIRD. That is what I wanted permission to state. I have the report on the House bill in my hand.

The report on the House bill (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8117) granting a pension to Mrs. Juliet G. Howe, submit the following report:

The Senate Committee on Pensions reported a similar bill in the Forty-ninth Congress and again in the Fiftieth Congress. Your committee adopt the report of that committee, as follows:

"[Senate Report No. 15, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

"That Mrs. Juliet G. Howe served during the war with great distinction as an army nurse, and is now suffering from disease contracted during such service.

"The records in the office of the Surgeon-General show that Juliet G. Howe (at that time Juliet G. Robbins) served as nurse in Hammond General Hospital, Point Lookout, Maryland, from August 3, 1862, to October 5, 1863; at Columbian College General Hospital, Washington, D. C., from June 6, 1864, to August 30, 1864, and at De Camp General Hospital, David's Island, New York Harbor, New York, from September, 1864, to September 19, 1865.

"At all places she served with great acceptance to the sick and wounded soldiers and the surgeons in charge, and received flattering testimonials from them.

"April 24, 1865, a testimonial, signed by nearly one hundred soldiers, says:

"'She has always been kind to us, and we shall always remember her with pleasure. She is indeed the soldier's friend.'

"At Point Lookout, Maryland, Assistant Surgeon Allen, United States Army, said:

"'Faithful, efficient, always cheerful, beloved by the patients universally. A better nurse could not be obtained. She has had my warmest thanks, and has my heartiest indorsement.'

"William H. Gardner, assistant surgeon, United States Army, on October 8, 1863, at Hammond General Hospital, says:

"'It gives me much pleasure to testify to the character and qualities of Mrs.

Juliet G. Robbins (now Howe), who has long been a nurse in this hospital. * * * In her wards she was kind and attentive to the sick and wounded under her care, ever ready to relieve their wants, and never sparing of labor or pains which could conduce to their happiness or comfort.'

"'At same hospital, April 10, 1866, Th. Siebold, acting assistant surgeon, United States Army:

"'I take pleasure in offering this trifling mark of regard for Mrs. Juliet G. Robbins (now Howe) and Mrs. M. S. Poole, who have so faithfully attended in my ward since the 20th December last.'

"The above indorsed by S. H. Allison, acting assistant surgeon, United States Army, and surgeon of volunteers.

"At De Camp General Hospital, May 22, 1865, T. E. Martindale, assistant surgeon, United States Volunteers, says:

"'My connection with this hospital being about to terminate, I find it difficult to leave without tendering you this expression of my high esteem for you * * * I testify to your untiring devotion, your unceasing attention, and your success in ministering to the patients, * * * and the eminent abilities you have displayed in your profession of nurse.'

"This and other testimonials, and the proof of disease and suffering from the sacrifices she then made, satisfy your committee she is entitled to the pension she seeks, and they report said bill favorably.

"Your committee have made diligent inquiry at the offices of Adjutant-General, United States Army, and Surgeon-General, and can not find that the said nurse was paid for any such service."

The committee recommend the passage of the bill; but also recommend that the words "twenty-five," in line 7, be stricken out and the word "eighteen" be inserted.

The amendment striking out "$25" and inserting "$18" was agreed to.

The Senate bill (S. 300) as amended was ordered to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation; and the House bill (H. R. 8117) was ordered to be reported with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

Mr. WILBER. I ask unanimous consent to have the bill H. R. 5249 taken up now, as I expect to be absent for two weeks.

Mr. SPOONER. I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is called. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ABBIE R. BROWN.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7642) granting a pension to Abbie R. Brown.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, unless the gentleman who introduced that bill is present to ask for its consideration, or some member calls for its consideration, I ask unanimous consent that it be laid aside, retaining its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

HANNAH H. GRANT.

The Clerk read the title of the next bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7466) granting a pension to Hannah H. Grant.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that bill be laid aside, retaining its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, in order to save time I suggest that the Clerk read the bills in their order on the Calendar, and when a bill is read, if no member asks for its consideration let it be laid aside, retaining its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

FRANK LEWIS.

The next bill on the Calendar, the consideration of which was asked by Mr. DINGLEY, was the bill (H. R. 7574) granting a pension to Frank Lewis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the pension laws, the name of Frank Lewis, non compos son of Franklin Lewis, Company B, First Battalion Infantry Maine Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7574) granting a pension to Frank Lewis, respectfully report as follows:

Claimant is the son of Franklin Lewis, late of Company B, First Battalion Infantry Maine Volunteers. The father died from his army service in Washington, D. C., and the widow drew a pension until her remarriage. The claimant also drew a pension until he was sixteen years of age. It is now asked that a pension be granted on the ground of physical and mental unsoundness to an extent which wholly incapacitates claimant from earning a living. On this point conclusive evidence is filed with the committee, among which are the following papers:

"PEMAQUID, LINCOLN COUNTY, MAINE, February 15, 1888.

"This is to certify that I have examined Frank Lewis, and I find in him a congenital deficiency of cerebral development, whereby I consider him incapable of properly managing his financial affairs or of maintaining himself; and I further declare that I have no interest, direct or indirect, in the above statement.

"W. S. BRAINERD, M. D.

"Personally appeared before me, N. J. Hanna, a justice of the peace in and for the county of Lincoln, this 15th day of February, A. D. 1888, and made oath to the above affidavit,

"N. J. HANNA, Justice."

NEW HARBOR, ME., February 4, 1888.

"I, Robert A. Brackett, do depose that I am the last legal guardian of Frank Lewis, the son of Franklin Lewis, late of Company B, Regiment First Battalion Infantry of Maine Volunteers, and that I have been his legal and lawful guardian since he was fourteen years of age. I further depose that he was about two years of age when I married his mother, and that she was then drawing a pension for her husband, Franklin Lewis, late of Company B, First Battalion Infantry of Maine Volunteers, which was conferred upon her son, Frank Lewis, and that he continued to draw said pension until he was sixteen years of age.

"I further depose that I have supported the said Frank Lewis since he was sixteen years of age, and that he is not of sound mind, but, in other words, mentally and physically affected and wholly incapacitated to self-support, and that he has no other means of self-support save what I procure. I have a large family of my own and can not support them as they should be, having no income but what my own hands produce. I married his mother about twenty years ago, and have no interest in this matter further than he is my wife's son and that I am wholly unable to support an idiotic boy whose father died in the service of his country.

"ROBERT A. BRACKETT.

"Witness:
"CHAS. LOLAND.
"WILLIAM HARMON."

"Personally appeared before me, N. J. Hanna, a justice of the peace in and for the county of Lincoln, the said Robert A. Brackett, and made oath to the above affidavit.

"N. J. HANNA, Justice.

"This 16th day of February, A. D. 1888."

This case seems to come directly within the precedents of Congress.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by inserting after the word "volunteers," in the last line, the words "at the rate of $18 per month, payable to his legal guardian," and with these amendments recommend the passage of the bill.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH TWIGG.

The next bill on the Calendar, the consideration of which was asked for by Mr. SPOONER, was the bill (H. R. 5847) granting a pension to Elizabeth Twigg.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth Twigg, as dependent mother of Henry Twigg, late a member of Company H, Fourteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay her a pension, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. SPOONER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5847) granting a pension to Elizabeth Twigg, respectfully report:

Elizabeth Twigg is the mother of Henry Twigg, who was a private of Company H, Fourteenth Regiment United States Infantry.

The soldier enlisted in said service July 16, 1861, and was discharged January 15, 1862, upon surgeon's certificate of disability, and died June 14, 1866, leaving neither widow nor minor child surviving him.

The mother's claim for pension was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that no record or other evidence established that death of soldier was due to the service and line of duty.

The soldier's discharge, as stated in said certificate of disability, was because of hernia, which entirely disabled him from duty as a soldier. It is also stated in said certificate that "said Henry Twigg had hernia when enlisted," though all other testimony on file, of his comrades and neighbors, attests his soundness prior to and after enlistment, and (which seems conclusive of the fact) the examining surgeon certified, in the soldier's original enlistment papers, that he carefully examined said Twigg, "and that in my opinion he is free from all bodily defects and mental infirmity which would, in any way, disqualify him from performing the duties of a soldier."

The evidence also shows the continued good health of the soldier until the time of the sickness which resulted in his discharge, the cause and course of which is stated by Sergt. W. H. Myers, of the same company, as follows:

"I first met him at Fort Trumbull, Conn., on or about August 15, 1861. Shortly after the regiment was ordered into Camp Thomas. Never knew him to be sick in said camp. Shortly after the regiment was ordered to Perryville, Md., arriving on or about 1st November, 1861. I remember Twigg doing picket duty with me up the river some time in November, 1861. * * * I was sergeant of the guard. * * *

"I remember it being a cold, stormy time; wood wet; men shivering and wet, and insufficient tenting to protect the men. I remember Twigg from the fact he seemed to be always the life of the company—jovial and happy. On this occasion he was taken sick. Twigg complained to me of aching pains in head, breast, and over the abdomen, claiming he had caught a severe cold, which indications proved to me by his hoarseness and continued coughing. I ordered him to camp, * * * and afterwards saw him in regimental hospital, to my judgment a very sick man. * * * Twigg seemed to me to be entirely broken down."

A special examiner of the Pension Office reports said Myers's "reputation and standing good—A, No. 1."

The public record of said soldier's death states "abscess" as "disease, or cause of death."

Dr. A. C. Dedrick, formerly an army surgeon, testified that he attended the soldier professionally, after his discharge until his death, and that—

"He was suffering from hernia and a broken-down constitution generally, as regards health, arising, as I was informed and believe, from exposure while in the Army. * * * Near the close he had a large inguinal abscess, which opened externally, after which he rapidly sank. Whether in his case the immediate cause of death was more the result of this than from the general break up of the powers of life—a distinction of infinitely small moment if justice is the object in view—at this late date I am quite unable to say."

The fact is clearly established that, from the time of his discharge to the time of his death, the soldier was completely broken down in constitution and health, unable to perform any manual labor, and continually growing weaker until he died.

The mother has been a widow for many years; she is without property, and dependent upon her own labors for support; and her dependence upon her said son, prior to his enlistment, is established.

Your committee, being satisfied that the disease of which the soldier died resulted from his military service and the exposure and hardships incurred therein, recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HENRY B. VERY.

The next bill on the Calendar, the consideration of which was asked by Mr. SPOONER, was a bill (S. 173) granting a pension to Henry B. Very.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry B. Very, late a private in Company A, Twelfth Rhode Island Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SPOONER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 173) granting a pension to Henry B. Very, respectfully report:

That the Senate report upon said bill is as follows:

"[Senate Report No. 117, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 173) granting a pension to Henry B. Very, have examined the same, and report:

"Henry B. Very was a private in Company A, Twelfth Rhode Island Volunteers, serving from the 3d of October, 1862, to the 22d of March, 1863, when he was discharged on account of disability. He was wounded at the battle of Fredericksburgh, December 13, 1862, and remained in hospital up to the time of his discharge. He received a flesh wound in the left arm, and was also knocked down an embankment by the concussion of a passing shell, injuring his shoulder, hip, and foot. From the testimony of a well-known physician, Dr. James H. Eldredge, who had treated him, and from the report of the board of examining surgeons at New London, Conn., it is clear to your committee that the disability from which the claimant is now suffering was incurred in the service and in the line of duty, resulting from wounds above alluded to.

"Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill."

Your committee further report that from an examination of the papers on file in the Pension Office it further appears that said soldier was discharged the service March 22, 1863, upon surgeon's certificate of disability "because of sprained right foot at Fredericksburgh, Va., December 13, 1862, by falling down an embankment; unable to use the foot properly and toes everted; disability one-eighth;" that the cause of said fall was the concussion or blow of a passing shell; that in the prosecution of his pension claim he was three times examined by boards of examining surgeons—once by the board at Providence, R. I., which reported no disability, but of whose hurried and careless examination the claimant bitterly complained to the Pension Office, as appears by his letter and affidavit on file—and twice by the board at New London, Conn.
